Editorial.

SALUTATORY.

In assuming editorial control of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, we do so, profoundly impressed both with the importance and magnitude of the work. The power of the press is far-reaching and immeasurable. It is the great molder of public opinion, which is mightier than kings, legislatures, and armies. Its influence is to-day universally recognized, and no organization would now venture to prosecute its mission without a journal to voice its sentiments and plead its cause. The Church, though a divine institution, is no exception to the rule. A wide-awake and vigorous press is essential to the prosperity and growth of a religious denomination. Its various enterprises must be aggressively championed and its workers encouraged and enthused, if the largest success is to be achieved. Indeed, the periodicals of a Church are no improper measure of its strength.

But the issuance of a successful religious weekly is an exceedingly difficult task. It is a many-sided problem which rarely finds a solution. The Church news should be given promptly, and there is no organized method of obtaining it as in the case of the secular press. The editorial work should be pertinent and abreast of the times, and but few have the editorial gift. The sifting of matter, separating that which may be published with profit from that which should be excluded from publication, requires the best of judgment and uncommon tact. And then there are the financial aspects of the problem which are by no means the least perplexing at this time when costly materials and the clamor for a cheap paper are coexistent. Such are what we conceive to be some of the obstacles in the pathway to success as the editor of a religious periodical.

And in the case of the present occupant of the tripod of the Advocate, the very past of the paper brings an added sense of responsibility. So ably has it been edited and so honored has been its history that we dare not hope to do more than remotely approach the high standard of excellence hitherto maintained. But while we may not aspire to equal our predecessors in the superior quality of the service rendered, we shall endeavor to emulate their unwavering loyalty to Methodism and their unwearying zeal to promote the cause of Christ.

In directing the affairs of the Advocate, it shall be our aim to render it helpful to every department of our Church work. We want it to be an ally of every force that tends to hasten the coming of the divine kingdom, and an uncompromising foe of every agency that tends to perpetuate the reign of evil. A co-laborer with every toiler in the whitening fields, is what we desire to make it.

For the benefit of those to whom we are unknown, it may not be amiss to say more specifically that while we are connected with the paper it shall be true to the doctrines, polity, and traditions of the Methodist Church as handed down to us by the fathers. We would not be a slavish adherent to the past or bar the gateway to all future progress, but we do not think we should be too quick to abandon what has been tested in the school of experience for things yet in the experimental stage. We want to see clearly the beckoning hand of Providence before we forsake the old landmarks for strange and uncertain paths.

In carrying the burdens which, at the bidding of the Church, we have ventured to assume, we shall lean heavily on the preachers of Mississippi and Louisiana. Indeed, but for our reliance upon them we should at once hand in our resignation and seek a place in the pastorate. But we know their mettle and we are not afraid to trust them. And the same may be said of hundreds of noble laymen in the two States which constitute our patronizing territory.

Of all friends of the Advocate, we desire to ask especially two things:

First—Help us MAKE the paper. We want information as to what is transpiring in our section of the Church. When anything happens in your community, send an account of it. And when your mind and heart are full of any subject of interest, write us a communication. We desire that the Advocate shall be a forum in which the worthy sentiments of its constituents may find adequate expression. We want, tersely expressed, the best thought of the best thinkers among us.

Second—Help us CIRCULATE the Advocate. It is YOUR paper. It is published to aid in building up the Church which you love. One of our crying needs is more distinctively denominational teaching. Our people must be made to know what Methodism stands for and in what its glory consists. Only such knowledge and the enthusiasm born of it, can give to our denomination that cohesiveness and evangelical aggressiveness which will conserve its institutions and speed it forward on a larger career. And in no way can this information be so successfully imparted as by the circulation of our periodical literature. Not until a Church paper is in every Methodist family may we expect to see that intelligent loyalty and ardent devotion which we so much need. Then let us make it our aim for the coming year to place the New Orleans Christian Advocate in every Methodist home in Mississippi and Louisiana. The voice of the late government report as to the recent growth of the various churches bids us in no uncertain tones to be up and doing along this line.

In conclusion, we desire to say that we shall appreciate helpful suggestions, that kindly criticisms will not be unwelcome, that we ask the prayers of every reader, and covet the good-will, assistance, and patient indulgence of all.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

The Old Year has gone! With its joys and sorrows, its defeats and triumphs, its opportunities and responsibilities, it has become a part of the mighty past. In the long roll of ages, never will it come back. It has vanished forever. But its influence abides. It has left its impress upon each and all. Those in virtue's shining way, it has ennobled and lifted toward the skies. Those treading the paths of evil, it has left with increased depravity in the soul and a cycle nearer the home of the lost. Time, according to the disposition we make of it, is either perfecting or destroying us. Properly employed, it brings sainthood, heaven, and happiness. Wrongly utilized, it brings to man a debased character, locks against him the gates of Paradise, and leaves him in the depths of hopeless despair. The most valuable lesson that one can learn is the significance of the passing hours and how to use them for the achievement of the loftiest ends.

The New Year has come! Its days are already marching swiftly by, its obligations are upon us, its open doors are challenging us, and its opportunities are fast going, to return no more. Shall we not make the New Year count for more than the Old? Such manifestly should be our earnest purpose. We should strive to make it richer in personal spiritual attainments, scatter with more lavish hand the precious seeds of truth and kindness in the red furrows of human hearts about us, and labor more diligently to speed the gospel on its widening way.

But alas! it is to be feared that most of our good resolutions will end in resolutions. Lamentably weak is the human will. It has been said that man is the only animal that does not profit as he should by the lessons of experience; that season after season he makes the same mistakes and repeats the same follies. Let us see that it is not so with us. Knowing the weakness of human nature, our proneness to vacillation and delay, let us resolutely take up the duties of the incoming year and write the brightest chapter yet written in our life history. We know of no more fitting prayer in the opening of the New Year than that expressed in the beautiful words of Frances Ridley Havergal:

Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be,
In working or in waiting,
Another year with thee.

Another year of leaning
Upon thy loving breast,
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.

Another year of progress,
Another year of praise;
Another year of proving Thy presence all the days.

Another year of service,
Of witness for thy love;
Another year of training
For holier work above.

Another year is dawning;
Dear Master, let it be,
On earth, or else in heaven,
Another year with thee.

It is said of Christ that "he made himself of no reputation." He was alike to the greatest and lowliest of men. The Lord of all, he yet became the servant of all. To be like the Man of Gallilee is to be approachable and free from the fault of undue self-esteem.

Secular News and Comment

It is said that the great Trans-Siberian Railway will be double-tracked. As usual, American enterprise is at the forefront. According to report, the work will be done by a United States' syndicate.

In New York City a short time since, a plot of ground, 125 feet square, was leased for 999 years for a sum estimated at between $25,000,000, and $30,000,000. This is both the longest and largest lease which has come under our observation.

There are said to have been 188 cases of pellagra in Mississippi last year and 91 deaths from it. Lauderdale County led with 43 cases and Monroe came second with 17. Twenty-one cases were reported from the Vicksburg hospital.

The Japanese Red Cross has a million and a half members, and in 1908 received from annual dues over a million dollars. The American Red Cross has comparatively a pitifully small membership, and received the same year less than eight thousand dollars. Even in matters of philanthropy the Japs are forging forward.

Rumor has it that Mr. Cannon will retire from the Speakership of the Lower House of Congress in the near future. We fear the news is too good to be true. Uncle Joe is an able man and one of the most unique personalities in public life, but his course has not been such as to command the confidence of the moral and patriotic people of the country.

The Postoffice Department of the Government for the past year shows a deficit of more than seventeen million dollars. This is chiefly due to the second-class mailing privilege which entails an annual loss of $64,000,000, and the rural routes which lack $28,000,000, of being self-sustaining. But such is the popularity of these services that it is not likely that either will be much interfered with.

It has been announced that Patrick Henry's body will be moved from Red Hill, Charlotte County, Va., for reburial in the yard of the old Saint John's Church in Richmond, where he made his memorable revolutionary speech. It is perhaps fitting that the "forest-born Demosthenes" should sleep near the structure in which his patriotic eloquence won for him imperishable fame.

The Ballinger-Pinchot controversy will not down. President Taft tried to smother out the flame, but it keeps breaking out afresh. And now Congress is to investigate the affair. This is as it should be. If the Secretary of the Interior is innocent, the voice of calumniators should be hushed. If he has been handling the public resources improperly, let the facts be known. In its present righteous mood the nation has scant tolerance for graft either in high places or low.

The National Editorial Association of the United States will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary in New Orleans on February 10. It was organized in this city during the time of the Cotton States Exposition and has not met here since. The Hotel Grunewald has been selected as headquarters by the editors and the business sessions will be held in the convention hall on the twelfth floor. Preparations are in progress for the meeting and the visitors will be accorded a royal welcome.

Chinatown in New York City is reported to be passing away. From an ordinary population of 2,500 and twice that on Saturdays and Sundays, it has dwindled down to an estimated population of 700. The murder of Elsie Sigel is said to have destroyed it. It aroused the police to do their duty, and they have suppressed gambling and other vices, and the town has steadily declined. Let it go. A community which must have licensed evil to sustain it does not deserve to exist.

Aviation is making progress. The Wright Company for the manufacture of aeroplanes has been organized with a million dollars capital. Connected with it are Cornelius Vanderbilt, Howard Gould, Theodore Shonts, and other millionaires. The manufacturing plant will be located near Dayton, Ohio, and machines will be ready for delivery by May 1. Grounds, where beginners may be given lessons in flight, are being prepared in Florida. Sooner than we think men may be flitting through the air and the automobile out of date.

American universities are now recognized as equal to the best. The number of students coming to the United States from abroad is steadily increasing. China, last year, sent over forty-seven young men to be educated at the expense of the government, and will this year increase the number to be thus supported to two hundred. This commerce of thought between the nations is one of the most striking characteristics of our time. The Cecil Rhodes Scholarships have done much to promote it. The foreign student and foreign missionary, the one by coming and the other by going, are working hand in hand to extend the sphere of Christian civilization.

The football question continues to be a burning one in the college world. The large number of accidents caused by the game has focussed attention upon it throughout the nation. In a recent issue Collier's Weekly had a symposium on the subject in which a number of college presidents expressed their views. Most of them favor the retention of the game, but think it should be radically reformed. In some quarters, the opposition is more uncompromising. In the city of Washington, the Board of Education has abolished the sport, and steps looking to the same end have been taken in New York City. Reformation or abolition, are the two alternatives by which the devotees of the game seem to be sternly confronted.

The Times-Democrat is not only a great newspaper, but also an effective promoter of public philanthropy. On Christmas Eve, it conducted its fourteenth annual distribution of presents to the poor children of the city at Washington Artillery Hall. Twelve thousand of them were present and gifts, costing several thousand dollars, were dispensed. Not content with this achievement, our distinguished contemporary has taken up the cause of the Colored Industrial Home, a worthy negro institution located in New Orleans, and is endeavoring to raise funds to meet its pressing needs. We trust that it will succeed in the undertaking. It deserves success, and is entitled to lasting honor for enterprising a work of charity so thoroughly commendable.

The recent death of Senator A. J. McLaurin, of Mississippi, has brought forward quite an array of aspirants for senatorial honors in the Magnolia State. Temporarily, Governor Noel, has appointed Col. James Gordon, of Okolona, who will serve until the Legislature meets in January, but will not be a candidate for election before that body. The unexpired term of Mr. McLaurin is for three years and three months, and it is to be hoped that the State will avail herself of this opportunity to shake off the reign of the demagogue and elect a man worthy of her best traditions. Among those prominently mentioned are: Hon. G. S. Shands; Hon. Leroy Percy, of Greenville; Hon. J. S. Sexton, of Hazlehurst; Hon. Charles Scott, of Rosedale; and ex-Gov. Vardaman and Hon. C. H. Alexander, of Jackson.

Ours is a highly-favored nation. During the year passed, we produced 2,767,316,000 bushels of corn; 983,618,000 bushels of oats; 724,768,000 bushels of wheat; 367,473,000 bushels of potatoes, and all of the other small cereals in abundance. Our food crop was considerably above the average, and not much behind the bumper crop of 1906. The cotton yield alone was appreciably short, and the fire price has measurably made good that deficiency so far as the Southern farmer is concerned. We lead the world in the production of corn, wheat, oats, and cotton. We make flour enough to give every inhabitant one and two-thirds barrels. If there is suffering in the United States, it is because our productions are unequally distributed. There is enough for all and some to spare in the aggregate.

Considerable interest is felt in Louisiana in a reported movement to eliminate from the State Constitution Article Sixty-three which makes the Governor ineligible to re-election. The press generally is said to oppose the repeal. The present administration was supposed to favor it, but lately, Governor Sanders has announced that while he has never regarded that provision as wise, and that whatever semblance of justification it may have once had has been swept away by taking from the executive the pardoning power and the substitution of the primary method of making party nominations for the old convention system, he yet does not desire his friends to undertake to strike it out for the reason that it would plunge the commonwealth into a long and bitter political contest in which personalities would predominate. Louisiana is in accord with Mississippi in allowing her chief executive only one term.

The scientists must find evolution in operation somewhere. Unable to discover it in the animal kingdom, they now declare it is going on in the vegetable kingdom. In a late number of the Scientific American, is an article on "Carnivorous Plants," in which the author contends that both their number and capacity for devouring animals are on the increase. He ventures to suggest that the time may come when man himself will be in danger of being devoured. As alarmists, preachers with their hell-fire and the terrors of eschatology are no longer in it. The men of science have them far out-distanced. They tell when the sun will go out, when the coal supply of earth will be exhausted, and when the ice caps at the poles will reach to the equator. They frighten us with pellagra, the hook-worm, and bacilli innumerable. And now we are informed that the very bushes about us are evolving into hobgoblins to swallow us up. What next?

The situation in Nicaragua continues to excite widespread interest. Zelaya, fleeing from the storm which his misgovernment has created, has arrived in Mexico. There has been some talk of extraditing him and the United States holding him individually responsible for the mistreatment of her citizens; but we do not apprehend that this will be done. He complains bitterly that he has been misrepresented to the authorities at Washington, and that great injustice has been done him. It is said that his purpose in insisting that he is yet technically president of the republic is to secure the immunities which belong to the office. Madriz, who has been elected to the presidency chiefly by the partisans of Zelaya, appears to be a man of some statesmanship and force. He has convened the Nicaraguan Congress in extraordinary session, and is endeavoring to inaugurate a more vigorous war policy. His government has been recognized by Honduras and Costa Rica, but his hold on the reins is far from secure. Estrada, the leader of the insurgents, refuses to regard his administration favorably and is yet alert and active. He seems to have had decidedly the advantage in the recent fighting at Rama. Time alone can tell what will be the outcome of the conflict.

A SUPERANNUATE'S REPORT.

[The Rev. J. A. B. Jones, the oldest member of the Mississippi Conference, at its last session, in making his report, created a profound impression, and the Conference, by resolution, requested him to furnish it, as nearly as possible, for publication in the Advocate. This he has done, and we feel sure that it will be read with much interest.]

"Bishop, in strict conformity to the familiar formula used by my brethren in making the report required of each pastor—a stereotyped formula established as law by the annual approval of this Conference through many long, rebellious years—I report: 'We have had a comparatively good year. All the assessments, the collection for which I am held responsible, are paid in full, some in excess. The preacher's salary is not up, probably because it is expected that a superannuate should work for nothing, and bear his own expenses. But, seriously, Bishop, this has been the most remarkable year of my life for numerous, varied and severe trials. Floods, winds, fires, the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noon-day, and wicked and unreasonable men, have very seriously oppressed, depressed and hindered me in my efforts to do good. Severe bodily affliction has imprisoned me for several months. Since the middle of last July I have been in an almost helpless condition, often feeling, as the poet has expressed it:

I am nearing the holy ranks
Of friends and kindred dear;
I brush the dew on Jordan's banks,
The crossing must be near.

"It requires special grace—more grace—to patiently endure the will of God—to stand still and see the salvation of God—than to do that will, than to put shoulder to the wheel and push forward the car of salvation. A stronger rein is necessary to restrain an old war-horse when he can see the moving forces, when he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains and the shouting, than to guide him into the fiercest of the conflict; when he paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength; he goeth on to meet the armed men; he mocketh at fear and is not affrighted, neither turneth he back from the sword. The quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield. He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage. My experience has been, the rougher the path of duty, the more difficult and dangerous the labor required; the fiercer the conflict into which called, the more easily is secured the necessary divine strength.

"I am pained when I hear men, who profess to be called of God to preach the gospel of salvation from sin, complain of hard work and poor pay, and make inquiry, anxiously, in prospect of a new appointment—'what does it pay?' The most honorable and glorious position possible for a human being to fill this side of heaven is that of an ambassador for Christ. There is no higher privilege than to pray men in Christ's stead, as though God did beseech them; by us, to be reconciled to God.

"This is my 57th Annual Conference, and, according to the testimony of my sainted mother and the record of the old family Bible which lies on the stand, if I live to see the 30th day of next February, I will be 90 years of age.

"I am justified in expressing sincere thanks that God and the Church have permitted me to be an itinerant Methodist preacher for fifty-seven years. During the months of my extreme weakness I accepted opportunities to preach, much to my personal comfort, if not to that of those who heard.

"And, Bishop and brethren, if the privilege were possible, I would gladly knock to-day at the door of this Conference and ask to be received again on trial, and cheerfully devote the next fifty-seven years to the faithful performance of the duties of an itinerant Methodist preacher, choosing rather to suffer the afflictions inevitable than to have any other position in the gift of men. It is the highest honor which can be bestowed to be called of God to proclaim: 'This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief.' From unmistakable evidences, I know I am nearing the final end.

"My latest sun is sinking fast,
My race is nearly run;
My strongest trials now are past,
My triumph is begun.

"Through many dangers, toils and snares,
I have already come,
'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home.

"The Lord has promised good to me;
His word my hope secures;
He will my shield and portion be
As long as life endures.

"Yea, when this flesh and heart shall fail,
And mortal life shall cease,
I shall possess within the veil
A life of joy and peace.

"Brethren, when I fail to answer roll-call, you will know where to find me."

REPORTS ADOPTED BY THE RECENT SESSION OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLISHING INTERESTS.

We, your committee appointed to consider the publishing interests of the Church, respectfully submit the following report:

We are gratified to know that the business of our Publishing House continues to prosper, both at Nashville and the branch house at Dallas; the profits for the year having been $57,000.

We most heartily recommend that our pastors urge our people to subscribe for our own periodicals, rather than independent literature. We think that our Quarterly Review, Epworth Era, Go Forward, and Sunday school literature are unsurpassed by that of any church.

We urge the circulation of the Nashville Advocate, our general organ.

We are glad to note the prosperity of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which has been so ably edited by Rev. Dr. J. W. Boswell. We are glad to learn that the paper is out of debt, and hail with pleasure the newly-elected editor, Rev. R. A. Meek, and pledge him our hearty support in furnishing our people a good paper. We wish to express our appreciation of the outgoing editor, who has so faithfully defended the doctrines and polity of our church, and we pray God's blessings upon him in his new field of labor.

We furthermore, urge our pastors to see that a sufficient number of the volumes of The History of Methodism in Mississippi already published are sold, so as to secure the publication of the third volume.

We also heartily commend Rev. G. W. Bachman, in his work, and bespeak for him the support of our preachers and people.

We recommend the appointment of I. W. Cooper, E. H. Moulner and J. T. Leggett as members of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

W. M. SULLIVAN, Chairman.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MEMORIALS.

We, your Committee on Memorials, respectfully submit the following report:

We have considered a paper signed by H. P. Lewis, Jr., H. W. Featherstun and others asking this Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to take such action as will cause candidates for the ministry to abstain from the use of tobacco. We recommend concurrence. Adopted.

We have considered a paper from G. H. Galloway, H. M. DuBose and H. W. Featherstun asking this Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to insert in the order of business of a Quarterly Conference the question, How many pastoral visits have been made? We recommend non-concurrence.

We have considered a paper from G. H. Galloway, H. M. DuBose and H. W. Featherstun asking this Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to change the law governing District Stewards, so as to require them to assess each pastoral charge for the building and maintenance of a district parsonage. We recommend concurrence.

We have considered a paper from B. F. Jones, H. M. DuBose and A. F. Watkins asking this Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to make sundry changes in the law concerning the Conference Board of Missions. We recommend concurrence.

The report referred to above concerning changes in the law governing the Board of Missions is as follows:

"To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

"Dear Fathers and Brothers: You are hereby respectfully memorialized, by the Mississippi Annual Conference, to change Paragraph 356, Article XII, pages 152, 153 of the Book of Discipline of 1906, so as to read as follows, viz.: Each Annual Conference shall organize a Board of Missions auxiliary to the General Board to which it shall report annually. It shall consist of one layman from each district, and an equal number of clerical members who shall be elected quadrennially by the Annual Conference at the first session after the General Conference. Said board shall elect its own officers, regulate its own meetings, supervise the missions it may, with the consent of the president of the Conference, establish within its bounds and control the funds raised for its support subject to the approval of the Annual Conference. Said board shall report to the Annual Conference at its annual session of all its doings, and shall be amenable to that body for all its acts.

Your petitioners would also request that the following be added to Paragraph 362, Article XVIII: And to appoint annually a Missionary Secretary whose duty it shall be to assist as much as practicable, in the interest of the missions within his district."

We have considered a paper signed by Robert Selby in behalf of the Conference Board of Education memorializing the General Conference to provide for the appointment in each Annual Conference or group of Conferences where the conditions justify it, of the Secretary of Education, who shall give his entire time to the educational work of the church, his salary and traveling expenses to be provided for by the Conference interested. We recommend concurrence.

We have considered a memorial to the General Conference signed by A. F. Watkins, G. H. Galloway and others, asking that the law governing the distribution of the funds for the care of superannuated and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, be so changed that one-half the amount available shall be distributed upon the basis of the term of service; the other half upon the basis of the financial needs of the claimant. We recommend concurrence.

We have considered a paper signed by H. M. DuBose, W. B. Lewis and H. W. Featherstun requesting the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate to negotiate with representatives of other Annual Conferences relative to a consolidation of papers. We recommend concurrence.

We have considered a memorial to the General Conference from W. M. Williams and others, asking that the following question be inserted in the minutes business of the Church Quarterly and Annual Conferences: "What has been raised for the Orphans Home?" We recommend concurrence.

Richard Watson Gilder, the brilliant editor of the Century Magazine, lately deceased, was the son of a Methodist minister.

The first-year class at Drew Theological Seminary, numbers seventy. That great institution is not only prosperous, but also orthodox.

Honolulu has recently raised nearly $200,000 for the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building. Christianity is well-established and vigorous in the Hawaiian Islands.

There are in Utah, 8,193 Protestant Christians, 8,356 Roman Catholics, and 151,525 Mormons. There is perhaps no more difficult field for religious work in the United States.

The late Bloodgood H. Cutter made a bequest of $525,000 to the American Bible Society. This noble organization has long been one of the world's mightiest evangelizing agencies.

Bishop A. W. Wilson has been suffering lately with bronchitis and asthma, but is now said to be convalescing. We heard Bishop Hoss not long since pronounce him the greatest preacher the Church South, has had in decades.

Dr. T. N. Ivey has announced that the Southern Methodist Hand-Book for 1910 will be issued early in January. It will be a decennial number, and will contain much matter pertaining to the General Conference.

Dr. Stonewall Anderson has given it out that he will retire from the presidency of Hendrix College at the close of the present session. He has declared his purpose at this early date to afford time for finding a successor.

The affairs of the Southern Methodist Publishing House are reported to be in a prosperous condition, the net earnings for the past year having reached the sum of $57,000. The branch building at Dallas has been completed at a cost of $75,000.

At the recent session of the South Georgia Conference, 209 pastoral charges reported the missionary assessments paid in full. The brethren over that way have, for some time, been accustomed to set the pace for the Church in mission work.

The Sunday Schools of the Virginia Conference are working to raise $5,000 for the Monterey Methodist Hospital, which is making its influence widely felt in Mexico. Laurens Institute in the same country is also maintained by the Rosebuds of Virginia.

The Christmastide just passed marked the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Methodist Church in America. In the First Methodist Church, of Baltimore, the lineal descendant of the "Lovely Lane Meeting House," and also at other places, appropriate commemorative services were held.

Gipsy Smith returned to England to spend the Christmas holidays. His home is at Romany Tan, just outside of Cambridge, and near where his father's gipsy caravan used to be pitched. His last meeting was in Chicago, and was attended by remarkable success.

The will of the late Charles N. Crittenden, the millionaire evangelist of New York, has just been probated. He left half of his estate, estimated at between $2,000,000 and $5,000,000, for the maintenance of the rescue homes which he had founded in honor of his deceased little daughter, Florence. His was an unselfish life, nobly spent, and the influence of it will be felt for generations to come.

The Mississippi Division of the National Layman's Missionary Movement will hold a great meeting in Jackson, Feb. 8-10. Preparatory to this gathering, a campaign of education on missions will be conducted through the month of January and in the opening days of February. The laymen of Jackson are exhibiting great activity and bestirring themselves to make the occasion a memorable one. The pastors of that city have also addressed a letter to every preacher in the State, seeking to enlist them in a united effort to interest the laymen in every community.

Editor Vaughan, of the Pacific Advocate, and Dr. Bovard, of the California Advocate, are struggling over the matter of federation in the Far West. The former shows that the M. E. Church in that section is not less our competitor than the other denominations. We have long been convinced that federation chiefly exists on the platform on gala-day occasions. Certainly, it can make no substantial headway until the brethren of the North are animated by a different spirit. Apparently they want us to turn back on the border, but accord them the right to operate all through the South.

Through the kindness of Rev. W. P. Turner, the secretary, we have received a copy of the Year-Book of the Japan Mission. It is issued in admirable form, and contains a number of illustrations. One of them is a striking likeness of Bishop Seth Ward, who was to have presided over the Conference, but who unhappily was fatally stricken before it convened. In his absence, the sessions were presided over by Rev. S. E. Hager and Rev. B. W. Waters, two of the mission superintendents. The United Methodism of Japan embraces two Annual Conferences with 133 full clerical members. Of these, 27 are the missionaries of Northern and Canadian Methodism. Our 18 male missionaries are "associate members," a relation which is unique, but which the secretary says brings all needed privileges. The two Conferences have 12,252 church members, 22,019 Sunday School pupils, and raised 22,000 yen, about $11,000, for ministerial support. The best paying church is at Yokohama, where the pastor receives a salary of $390, and $90 additional for house rent. The school work generally is in a prosperous condition.

THE LONELY AND ISOLATED GIRL.

"The girl who thinks constantly about self is a good deal like the girl who is constantly gleaning at herself in the mirror," says Annie B. McCall in Woman's Home Companion, for January. "Have you ever noticed how by and by people turn away from such a girl to some one whose eye can meet theirs self-forgetfully, some one whose attention they can keep? So the girl is finally left alone with herself and the mirror. In the same way, the girl who falls into the habit of thinking of self is gradually left more and more alone; her life becomes gradually more and more isolated. Do you girls know what the word isolated really means? The word 'isola' is the Italian for island. Isolated means to be like an island—cut off, that is, from the mainland. The life of the girl who talks and thinks about self is gradually more and more cut off from all the great wonderful mainland of human sympathy and interests. She is cut off from helping others as others are cut off from helping her. The world of joy and sorrow and interest and love goes on without her."

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE"

The numerous friends and admirers of Rev. Walter G. Harbin will be glad to know that he is bringing out some of his sermons in book form. Mr. Harbin has been urged frequently to have certain of his sermons published. The book will contain some of his strongest sermons. The title is a good table of contents of the book. The sermons are on the work of the Holy Spirit. The sermons on "The Teacher," "Power," and the strong sermons on "The Spirit of Prayer," are included.

One of the features of the book is the introduction, written by Rev. R. A. Meek, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It will be illustrated with a portrait of the author.

The first one hundred copies will constitute an autograph edition signed by the author. There will be no advance in price for the autograph edition. Orders will be filed as received and copies mailed in the order of subscriptions.

Orders should be sent to Chas. O. Chalmers, publisher New Orleans Christian Advocate, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La. "Modes of the Heavenly Life," Walter G. Harbin. 75c. postpaid.

The marvel is that any attempt to live without prayer. Travelers, prisoners, the sick, sailors, all sorts and conditions of men, at home and abroad, are encouraged to pour out the tale of their grief into the ears of the Almighty. Though God is not bound by covenant to hear prayers not offered in faith, yet he has never said that he will not hear the cry of distress. He hears the young ravens, and are not men of more value than many ravens? He has many times heard the call of wretchedness, even when misery was the fruit of guilt. If God is so good and so bountiful, as Scripture and providence declares him to be, why do not all men come to him in prayer and put their trust in him? His works are mighty, marvelous, merciful. All have abundant evidence of the divine goodness. The withholding of affectionate confidence from God is an act of superlative wickedness, the offspring of hateful unbelief.—Exchange.

"FOR MY SAKE"

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning,
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
Three little words, but on their import dwelling
What wealth of love their syllables unfold!

For my sake cheer the suffering, help the needy;
On earth this was my work, I gave it thee;
If thou would follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up my cross and come and learn of me.

For my sake let the harsh word die unuttered,
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue;
For my sake check the quick, rebellious feeling
That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

For my sake press with steadfast patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within my Father's house are many mansions;
There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee,
If for my sake thou suffer pain and loss;
Bear on, faint heart, thy Master went before thee,
They only wear his crown who share his cross.

—The Churchman.

DR. CHAPMAN ON "WHY SOME MINISTERS FAIL."

1. Some ministers fail because preaching to them has become a profession instead of a passion. If you have the spirit of routine, of professionalism, then God help you in your ministry! An English church has these words inscribed in its corridor:

Oh, for a passion for souls!
Oh, for the pity that yearns!
Oh, for the love that loves to the death!
Oh, for the fire that burns!
Oh, for a prayerful prayer
For the precious souls that are lost,
In the power of the conquering name,
For the prayer of Pentecost!

I do not care what your training may be. If you have passion, passion for Jesus, for the Bible, for souls, the people will always give you a hearing.

2. Again, some ministers fail because they use the wrong method of approach. They try to enter by the door of the head rather than by the door of the heart. The man who enters by the head must come armed with an argument, and he is met by an argument. Then Greek meets Greek. But the best method of approach is not by way of the head. I have found it very easy to enter by way of the heart. This was Jesus' method. The successful minister must use heart influence as the chief method of work.

3. Moreover, some ministers fail because they have departed from the Bible as authority. They forget that Jesus and his gospel are the only hope of a sinful world. I met on this topic all sorts and conditions of preachers. Some were intellectual giants; some transgressed the training of the schools. Some were splendidly cultured; some had been denied the privilege of culture. But wherever I went, I found those who were preaching a divine Christ from an inspired Bible were prosperous; and those who were preaching anything else were preaching to dwindling congregations. The world is sick of sin and hungry for the Word! The average business man does not care to come to church to have his faith unsettled.

4. Some ministers fail because they have lost the evangelistic note. It is hard to define this; as love is hard to define. With some men it is a flash of the eye, a tone of the voice. Some men have produced conviction by announcing a hymn. The evangelistic note depends on what you are before God. If we had it, we could fill the churches. Of one minister a member of the official board said: "We think of Jesus Christ every time we see his face." In 1727, John Wesley, could not shake an American village, and his name was a by-word for failure as he returned to England. In 1729, he shook three kingdoms. In that year he had a vision of God, and caught the evangelistic note.

5. Furthermore, some ministers fail because they have lost the note of authority in the pulpit. It is a fatal mistake to let people understand he is afraid. He gets his commission from God not from the official board. Oh, the pulpit is the last place in which to scold, to say harsh things; but the message must have the authority of a divine commission. A distinguished lawyer once undertook to tell his pastor that the parish needed a different type of preaching. The pastor replied: "I get my people before me in my vision as I study, and then I drop on my knees. I find my text, and in the spirit of prayer I stand on Sunday to preach what he gives me, and not all the elders in the Presbyterian Church can make me change." The lawyer grasped his hand and cried: "No elder in the Presbyterian Church would want to make you change!" We must not scold, we must not be harsh, but we must not be afraid.

6. Some ministers fail because they do not spend enough time in devotional Bible study and private prayer. I know the demands on a preacher's time. He is busier than any other professional man except the doctor. His hours are constantly broken into. And he must always be at his best or hear some harsh criticism which will well-nigh break his heart. But with all this he must bury his face in God's Word more; he must be more in prayer. A man in Melbourne came to me and said: "I believe God has given you a message, but I can tell you how to make it have a better edge. Take more time for your Bible; more time to pray." And this old saint was right. Every minister should come from his knees to the pulpit.

Finally, with all else, failure is sure without loyalty to Jesus Christ. As the widow of ex-president Harrison stood alone for a final farewell beside the silent form, she heard the door open and saw an old soldier enter on his crutches. He approached and mingled his tears with hers in baptism of the upturned face. Hobbling then to the door, he turned, stood at attention, and said: "General, I salute you!" So must every successful minister salute his Master. —Zion's Herald.

MAN A MIRACLE.

Miracle of miracles is man! Most helpless of all God's creatures in infancy; most powerful when fully developed, and interesting always. Led in youth by the parent's hand, he becomes during maturity the staff of those who led him; and in age he is again helpless and must look for assistance to his children and his children's children. He is ever both instructor and pupil, teaching while he is being taught, daily exerting an influence while he receives impressions from his environment, and carrying through life a power to help and harm, little less than infinite.

What incalculable space between a statue, however flawless the marble, however faultless the workmanship, and a human being "afire with the passion of eternity!" If the statue cannot, like a human being, bring the gray hairs of a parent "in sorrow to the grave," or devastate a nation, or with murderous hand extinguish the vital spark in a fellow-being, neither can it, like a human being, minister to suffering mankind, nor scatter gladness over a smiling land, nor yet claim the blessing promised in the Sermon on the Mount. Only to man, made in the divine likeness, is given the awful power to choose between measureless success and immeasurable woe. —W. J. Bryan.

THE NEW LIFE.

This new life—the life that has conquered death by tasting it, which has enriched itself with a before unknown sympathy with men whose lives are forever tending towards the grave—this life stretches on and out forever. It is to know no ending. So long as there are men living and dying, so long above them and around them there shall be the Christ, the God-man, who liveth, and was dead, and is alive evermore.

As you sit thinking of man's fragmentariness, his certainty of death, his doubt about a future, let this voice come to you: a voice clear with personality, and sweet and strong with love: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and am alive forevermore." "He that liveth!" and at once your fragment of life falls into its place in the eternity of life that is bridged by his being. "He that was dead!" And at once death changes from the terrible end of life into a most mysterious, but no longer terrible, experience of life. "He that is alive forevermore!" And not merely that there is a future beyond the grave, but it is inhabited by one who speaks to us, who went there by the way that we must go, and who sees us and can help us as we make our way along, and will receive us when we come there. —Phillips Brooks.

THE TRANSFIGURING EXPERIENCE.

There is nothing that so emancipates and transfigures human experience of life like a whole-hearted response to the call of a great duty. Under its pressure our thoughts and desires are unified, and the will becomes effective. "We find ourselves," and all our energies are put forth to the best advantage. A father becomes conscious that somehow, within a week or two, his boy has become a man. He feels in talking with the lad that a different tone than he formerly used has become proper, that the boy is looking upon life out of different eyes and upon a different horizon. If he could look into the lad's soul he would be almost certain to find that one thing was the explanation of the change. Some kind of a call has come to the youth which he has recognized as higher than any other he had ever known. It has lifted him above the things that he used to care for most; it has widened his outlook and united his powers. He is no longer drifting, but steering. But such experiences are not limited to adolescence. Most of us in maturer years can recall them. We passed through some great temptation unscathed; we caught a vision of spiritual truth; the Providence of life laid upon us some duty that we could not escape. And we feel that in some mysterious way our lives have been lifted, like the ship in the lock, to a new level. Those are experiences that are best worth having, and the pain and cost of responding worthily to them are instantly made up to us in inner peace and strength. —The Churchman.

WAITING, THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Of all the lessons the young man who is to succeed in life has to learn, one of the hardest and most indispensable is that which the hero of Blenheim, Ramillies and Malplaquet so thoroughly learned—the lesson of patience. "To know how to wait," says De Maistre, "is the secret of success." "He that can have patience," says Franklin, "can have what he will." In business, at the bar, in medical practice, in the ministry, and in every other calling, the secret of success is, not in brilliancy of talents, in promptness of action, or even in energy, needful as that is, but in ability to bide one's time. Time is an important element in all solid achievement. The fruits that are best worth picking ripen slowly; therefore, the man who would win a great and lasting success must learn both "to labor and to wait." He must put his faith not in brilliant genius, in tricks and devices, in occasional splendid bursts and dashes, but in regular, measured, persistent effort—unvarying and never-failing—not necessarily slow, but never made at a faster rate than can be maintained to the end, reminding one of the steady, never accelerated movement of a great engine's eccentric beam. —Success.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CHURCH PUBLICATIONS, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: There is no need for this committee to speak at length of the tremendous importance of a vital periodical literature to the work of the church. The preacher who is not informed as to the progress of the work through the church papers is shorn of much of his usefulness, and the people who depend alone upon the preacher for information concerning the church and its work are far below their privilege.

A vital organization should give expression to its life in vigorous fashion, and we do not deprecate the free expression of the views of the church's thinking men through the columns of its papers. We would emphasize the need of making our periodical literature a means of leading as well as of informing the mind of the church.

We would express our high appreciation of the services of Dr. Jno. W. Boswell in connection with the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Throughout his term as editor he was a staunch defender of the faith and polity of our Church, and we commend him for his unswerving fidelity to what he thought was for its best interests.

To his successor, Rev. R. A. Meek, we pledge our hearty support as a Conference, and we urge that all our preachers be diligent in their effort to get our people to subscribe for and read the paper. We commend the publisher for his voluntary reduction of the price of the Advocate from $2 to $1.50, in spite of increased office expense and the constantly increasing cost of printing paper and material. At this price he can be saved from loss only by a large subscription list, and we pledge our co-operation in his effort to put the Advocate within reach of all.

We commend the Christian Advocate (Nashville) as a vigorous, thought-provoking, and inspiring periodical, which, as our general organ, should be read by all our preachers and people.

The Epworth Era, as the organ of the Epworth League, is entitled to our hearty support.

Go Forward is a valuable organ of information concerning our missionary work.

We commend the Methodist Review as worthy of the support of preachers and laymen alike. No preacher is too busy to read it, and none too wise to be profited by it. It is of wide range and high grade, and no preacher should be without its helpful visits.

Our Sunday School literature is of the highest grade, and we commend the editor most heartily for the improvements that have been made in same during the year.

We congratulate our publishing agents and the church upon the showing made by the Publishing House, and commend most heartily the management both at Nashville and Dallas.

We recognize the demand of our people for first-class religious newspapers at moderate cost, and we express ourselves in favor of any feasible plan for consolidation, whereby our church may have stronger though fewer papers. We commend the appointment of a committee to confer with similar committees from Alabama and Mississippi, looking to the combining of our publishing interests as a move in the right direction.

We recommend the election of N. E. Loyner, J. M. Henry, and W. W. Drake, as members of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

W. H. COLEMAN, Chairman.
H. T. CARLEY, Secretary.

METHODISTS BUILDING CHURCHES IN THE SOUTH.

According to statistics reported in the Manufacturers' Record, Baltimore, Oct. 23, for the first nine months of the current year, the Methodists are spending $1,396,000 out of a total of $13,152,600 spent in church buildings by all religious bodies in fourteen Southern States, District of Columbia, Oklahoma, and Missouri. In other words, the Methodists have undertaken about one-third of the total amount for their part. This is a marvelous showing and worthy of the attention of our Church, which is entirely within the bounds of the territory from which the statistics are taken, although other Methodist bodies are found in the same States.

Why do the Methodists lead in church building? This is a question that will come to the thoughtful reader as his eye scans these statistics. The average reader will be satisfied with the assumed reason, whether statistics confirm it or not, that there are more Methodists in this territory than there are of other denominations, and for that reason they lead in church building. Be this as it may, there are other reasons for so wonderful a work in church building as the Methodists have accomplished, and they deserve to be reckoned with just here.

In the first place, our connectional system enables us to build churches and put a preacher over them in places which other denominations of the congregational type cannot consider. A church building is almost useless without a pastor. I have known church buildings that were erected for anybody and everybody to preach in, but without an exception there seemed to be little accomplished, and they are sooner or later supplanted by some denominational church. There are many instances of this in our own State. According to our plan the circuits are made with the single idea in view of covering the entire territory of a Conference. While congregational churches are debating as to whether or not they will consent to this union or that union with other churches, in order to support a preacher, the Bishop and his council have made the Methodist circuit and the preacher is on the job regardless. It is not infrequently the case that a preacher will be read out for an appointment where he has no church building. There is nothing left for him to do but to build a house of worship, and thus the work goes on. There is not a spot in Virginia where a church building is needed that the Methodists cannot reach.

The Church Extension Board is no small factor in Methodist church building. A glance at the Church Extension Handbook for the current year will convince one of this fact. The report shows that $94,475.32 was received by the General Board. An amount equal to this was used by the Conference Boards. This fund is worth far more than the actual figures in its stimulating influence to church building. A gift of two or three hundred dollars from this source has the tendency to bring out the best effort a congregation can make. Besides, it is somewhat of a surety against embarrassment in the case of unforeseen developments and the building venture is made.

The Home Mission Board and its work is another factor. Under ordinary conditions, to read a man out for an appointment where there is no church building would be a hardship indeed, but when the Home Mission Board stands behind the enterprise and pays a good portion of the salary, the work can be done. Thus in many cases where a church is to be built the Mission Board indirectly backs the thing. The experienced preacher is sent, willingly or unwillingly, to see that the church is accordingly built. No one will doubt that this is a wise use of mission funds rather than applying them to places where there is little or no development. From an economical standpoint, at least, a missionary gift of $500 for a term of a few years in order to make a charge self-sustaining, is better than to apply a smaller gift to a certain charge for a generation, with little hope of development.

Other reasons could doubtless be given, but the above are, in my mind, among the most prominent. There is a question that presents itself just here that I shall not attempt to discuss: Are we not overbuilding in some cases? Are we building too many churches?—G. W. M. Taylor, in the Richmond Christian Advocate.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The price of the Advocate is $1.50 a year with a commission of fifteen cents to agents to cover expense of collecting and remitting. The rate to preachers and widows of preachers will remain at one dollar a year.

The club rate for 1910 will be $1.25 each in clubs of five or more. We offer the club rate as a privilege that has been requested of us, and we will give a commission of ten cents, per subscriber, only when it is requested. This commission must cover the cost of remittance.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the regular price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by the thousands, it becomes a serious matter, and we are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

"Power for Service."

BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,

Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

THE WORK OF THE MINISTRY.

The chief function of the Church is evangelical. Its fundamental mission is to minister to the spiritual man; to rescue the lost and bring them to perfection in Christ. All else—its educational, philanthropic, and institutional work—are incidental and contributory to this. But in saving man, the Church will at the same time save the world and all that in it is. There will be a new society, a new government, "a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." There will be no more curse, and the second Paradise will reach in unfading splendor around the globe.

So it behooves us who are preachers, as the chosen of the Lord, to see what our high calling is. Our appointed ministry is to the souls of men. We must visit the sick, raise finances, build churches, and do scores of other needful things, but if our work stops short of the spiritual realm, it is fatally defective. It fails to attain unto that which should constitute its crowning glory. However well he may do other things, the preacher who has no converts is greatly to be pitied. A fruitless ministry is a humiliating reproach. Surely if the Lord has called us to preach, we have a right to expect the Holy Ghost to use our messages in the conviction and conversion of the unsaved. This was one of Wesley's tests of a call to the ministry. If none are moved to penitence and regeneration under our preaching, it is cause for serious alarm. Something is certainly wrong.

It may be that we are not sufficiently filled with the Holy Spirit. If not, let us with heart-searching and prayer wait upon God until he shall give us power to stir and awaken the people. It may be that our style of preaching and methods of work are at fault. If so, let us modify and improve them. Let us pray in the homes of our people, let us preach upon evangelical themes, let us be tremendously in earnest, and let us call for and expect penitents. We have everything to inspire us to faithful, aggressive, and persistent effort. Sin is working its frightful ruin all about us; men are going to destruction on every side. Christ is willing and anxious to save them, and the reward for such service is glorious beyond conception. "He that winneth souls is wise," and "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

Here is the noblest field for ministerial ambition. Let who will direct the college, or mount the tripod, or preach in high steeple church, or go to the General Conference, or wear the insignia of office, but higher than all and greater than all, is the man through whom operates the Holy Spirit in his saving power. Compared with the seal of the divine approval thus manifested, all other distinctions are as nothing.

"Why should we crave the worldling's wreath,
On whom the Savior deigned to breathe
To whom his eyes were given
Who lead the choir where angels meet,
With angel's food our brethren greet,
And pour the drink of heaven?"

LET IT BE OBSERVED.

By appointment next Sunday, Jan. 9, is Mansfield College Day. We sincerely hope that its observance will be general throughout the State. Methodism needs to strengthen her institutions of learning everywhere. Particularly is this true in Louisiana where the competition with well-endowed secular colleges is so sharp and the Roman Catholic influence is so strong. Let every congregation in Louisiana lend a hand in doing something substantial for Mansfield at this time. An institution which has wrought so well deserves the generous support of its constituency.

THE OUTGOING EDITOR.

In the retirement of Dr. J. W. Boswell from the editorship of the Advocate the press of Southern Methodism has lost one of its noblest representatives. As pastor, presiding elder, and journalist, he has borne himself worthily and proved himself to be a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Often weighed in the balances, he has never been found wanting. No trust has ever suffered in his hands. The possessor of many shining virtues, the one which rises above and crowns all the others is his unchallenged probity of character.

On the tripod which he has occupied for nine years and which he now vacates, he has rendered helpful and substantial service. His trumpet has never given out an uncertain sound. His arm has never been slow to strike in defense of any imperilled interest of the Church. The Advocate has prospered under his administration, and he leaves it in better condition than it has been in for many years. Faithful, manly, without fear and without reproach, he retires with the esteem and admiration of all who know him, to round out his ministerial career in the loved employ of the pastorate. May he long be spared to bless us with his saintly example and wise counsel, and may his path grow brighter and brighter to the perfect day.

A PRINCE OF PREACHERS.

Bishop E. E. Hoss has long been known as a man of ripe scholarship and a wizard with his pen. As an editor he was easily the peer of any that American Methodism has produced. More than once we have heard the late Bishop Galloway pronounce him the most accomplished man in Southern Methodism.

But lately, the gifted Tennessean has shown that there is still another side to his versatile genius. In making his last round of Conferences he has been preaching with extraordinary brilliancy and impressiveness. It was our pleasure to hear him three times on the occasion of his recent visit to Mississippi, and every sermon was a master-piece. The one at the Conference session at Okolona was majestic and overwhelming. It swept everything before it and left the audience in a state of uplifted rapture.

We especially desire to commend Bishop Hoss' style of preaching to our young ministers. His well-high faultless vocabulary, his luminous exposition, the intellectual vigor with which he discusses the subject, and the simplicity which makes the most untutored auditor understand, are all elements of strength well worth seeking to acquire. He is the best illustration that we know of the truth that it takes heart power, as well as mental vigor, to preach effectively. Perhaps the greatest thinker our Church had had was Albert Taylor Bledsoe, and yet he is said to have been a veritable bore in the pulpit. Only the man who feels and is himself stirred may hope to reach and stir the souls of others.

AN IMPORTANT CAMPAIGN.

The movement now under way in Mississippi to enlarge the facilities of the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson should have the hearty and immediate support of every friend of the institution. Its needs are extremely urgent. They were strongly set forth by Rev. W. M. Williams, the manager, in last week's Advocate, and are further emphasized in this issue by Mr. J. H. Sherard, president of the board of trustees. We trust that every Methodist in Mississippi will read and reflect upon these earnest appeals. By formal action the Mississippi Conference named the first Sunday in February as Orphans' Home Day. We hope that the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference will also observe it. Let every church in the State fall in with the movement, let the claims of the Orphanage be faithfully presented, and let the day be made memorable by the ease with which the necessary funds are secured. There is no nobler service than that of caring for children left orphans in the world, and so rearing them as to make of them worthy men and women. The Church of Wesley must not falter in a work so Christlike and divine!

NOT ALL BAD.

Wholesale and indiscriminate denunciation of the rich is wrong and without justification. Per se, there is no merit in poverty and no demerit in wealth. We must have aggregations of capital to promote the enterprises necessary to the advancement of civilization. So long as such corporations obey the law and promote the good of society they are a blessing, but when they refuse to keep in proper bounds and begin to oppress the people, they must be restrained or crushed out of existence. However, we should not forget that there are good and had among those possessed of large means as well as among every other class. Without the support of Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution, it is doubtful whether the American colonies could have won their independence. George Washington himself was a man of opulence. It should never be forgotten that they were rich men who took our Lord's body from the cross and gave it respectable sepulture. There is no cheaper or more contemptible demagoguery than that which seeks to win office by embittering the poorer classes against those who have been more fortunate in the great battle of life.

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

Doctor Lyman Abbott, the scholarly editor of The Outlook and formerly Beecher's successor in the famous Plymouth pulpit, of Brooklyn, was a visitor in New Orleans for three or four days last week. He was accompanied by his daughter, and was en route to Baton Rouge, La., to preach before the State University. Though advanced in years, he appears to be quite vigorous and looks as if he were good for many more years of service.

While in the city Doctor Abbott was interviewed by a reporter for The Times-Democrat, and expressed the conviction that the conservation of our natural resources is the foremost question before the American people. Among other things he said: "The coal and timber lands under control of the government and open to settlement should be held forever by the government, being leased to operators or corporations for a term of years, with the proviso that the coal or timber should be mined or cut under the supervision of the government, which should see that there is no wasting of resources."

Doctor Abbott confessed to a keen interest in the negro problem also. He thinks limited suffrage is a good thing in any State, and indorses the Virginia Bishop who declared for race purity, allowing the negro to make the best of all his advantages and to have all the advantages of which he can make use. He thinks industrial education will greatly help the colored race. He declared that the negro is better treated in the South than in the North, and that his chances for industrial success are vastly superior in this section.

The man-made religions of modern times are little, if any, superior to the man-made religions of ancient times. Christian Science, Dowicism, Theosophy and Swedenborgianism are scarcely any improvement upon the mythologies of long ago. The true religion is a revealed religion. And it is also a final religion—the faith once delivered unto the saints.

One should invariably live up to his honest conceptions of right. To begin to deal doubly with one's self and follow expediency as a guiding star, is to undermine the very foundation of noble manhood. Juggled with a few times, conscience ceases to be a reliable monitor. It fluctuates like an unbalanced and untrue magnetic needle. The development of lofty character is impossible for him who does not form the habit of acting fearlessly upon his real convictions.

PERSONAL

We greatly admire Dr. H. M. DuBose as a disputant. He keeps his temper and his courtesy is unflinching. Equally facile with tongue or pen, he is doing a great work for the Church.

Rev. J. E. Denson, presiding elder of the Lafayette District, of the Louisiana Conference, was in the city a few days since and honored the Advocate office with a call. The editor regrets having missed him.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of this city, has been spending the holidays with relatives in East Mississippi. He is a native of that State, which yet feels an interest and pride in him.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, of the North Mississippi Conference, has begun his work auspiciously on the Columbus District. Everywhere he is being cordially greeted, and the outlook is for a year of large success.

The Mobile Item, of December 27th, highly commends the Christmas sermon preached by Rev. E. P. Craddock at St. Stephen's Church in that city, and publishes an extended synopsis of it. Brother Craddock is happy in his new field.

Dr. J. A. Rice, of Rayne Memorial Church, this city, has announced that he will preach a series of sermons from the Old Testament this month. The church has issued a folder giving the themes to be discussed, and large audiences are expected.

Rev. R. O. Wier has been accorded a hearty reception at Arcadia, La., but has had the misfortune to lose his church by fire. He writes cheerfully of the situation, however, and states that plans will be adopted to replace the old building with a neat brick structure.

Rev. E. E. Langford is delighted with his new charge at Brooksville, Miss., and is already getting his work in hand. He has forwarded a club of thirteen subscribers to the Advocate, and thinks he will soon be able to send more. We appreciate his interest and kindly words.

One of the best reports made at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference was that of Rev. I. H. Mitchell, of Water Valley. In the pastorate, as well as in the presiding eldership, he is an efficient worker. Especially is he skilled in the management of church finances.

In a brief note, Dr. W. B. Murrah says: "I am just back from Georgia and am about to start for Nashville." He is one of the strong men of Southern Methodism and his services are in great demand. The phenomenal success of Millsaps College has been largely due to his unsurpassed leadership.

Dr. S. Halsey Werlein conducted his initial service at the First Methodist Church, of this city, last Sunday. He chose as his text, II Corinthians ix. 15: "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift," and preached an able sermon. At the close of the service, the new pastor was warmly welcomed.

Rev. C. H. Ellis, who, at the late session of the Mississippi Conference was changed from Decatur to Sharon, has been delayed in reaching his new charge by personal and family affliction. The Newton County Times speaks of him as "a zealous, consecrated minister," and congratulates his new parishioners.

Rev. R. N. Allen, of Marshfield, Mo., has written us of the death of Mr. Frank R. Alexander, which occurred at that place on the 27th of last November. The deceased was a cousin of Dr. Gross Alexander, of Nashville, Tenn., and his father was for many years a member of the Louisiana and Arkansas Conferences.

We regret to learn of the serious illness of President W. L. Weber, of Centenary College. He underwent an operation at Shreveport a few days since, and his friends are hopeful of his recovery. Let the Church at large pray that his valuable life may be spared and that he may soon be able to resume his duties at the college.

Rev. W. G. Harbison is now assisting in revival services at the Mary Werlein Mission, in this city. The meeting has opened with very bright prospects. It is a field of almost unlimited possibilities and unmeasured difficulties. There has been rich fruitage from this church in the past, and we hope for greater things in the days to come.

Mr. Marion Lawrance, General Secretary of the International Sunday School Association, will spend next Sunday in New Orleans. He will speak at Parker Memorial Church at 11 o'clock and install the officers of the Sunday School. In the afternoon, he will deliver an address at a great Sunday School rally to be held in the city.

Dr. F. N. Parker, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, occupied the pulpit of Parker Memorial Church last Sunday, and delivered an unusually impressive and appealing discourse. He is a preacher of uncommon gifts and a brotherly Christian gentleman. He will go to the General Conference at the head of the Louisiana delegation, where we doubt not his influence will be felt.

Rev. O. L. Savage has had an enthusiastic reception at Guntown, Miss., and as is his custom, has been doing some valuable work for the Advocate. Finding only one copy taken upon his arrival, he has already secured thirteen new subscribers, and announces his purpose to introduce the paper into every Methodist home in the charge. May his worthy example prove contagious!

Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Lipscomb, of Biloxi, entertained the Methodist preachers of that section of the coast at dinner on New Year's Day. Those present were Revs. W. B. Jones, W. T. Griffin, J. M. Morse, and J. T. Abney, Gulfport; Rev. L. E. Alford, Long Beach; Rev. E. G. Mohler, Mississippi City; Rev. R. P. Fikes, Ocean Springs; and Revs. D. L. Mitchell, F. G. Hocutt, and J. L. Jordan, Biloxi.

The Editor wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to Rev. C. D. Atkinson for his assistance in getting domiciled in the city. He is a wide-awake, hustling pastor, who knows everybody and enjoys the confidence and esteem of all. His Sunday School is one of the best in New Orleans, and the outlook for his church—Parker Memorial—is very bright.

Bishop Candler's presidency at the session of the Louisiana Conference is spoken of as highly satisfactory. It could not have been otherwise. As a servant of the churches, the great Georgian ranks with the foremost. There are no dull moments when he is in the chair or on the platform. May he long be spared to lead and inspire the on-moving hosts of Methodism!

We thank Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Indianola, for a club of twenty-one subscribers which he secured just before leaving Friar's Point, his old charge. Brother Lipscomb is not only an energetic pastor, but a student and writer as well. The Publishing House will shortly issue at its own expense one of the products of his pen, a volume entitled "Conscience, and Its Culture, or Through Conscience to Christ."

We have received an obituary, with an accompanying note which is not dated at any time or place and does not disclose the name of the author. Apparently it is from Waterproof, La. It has long been the rule in the Advocate office to publish no anonymous communication of any kind. If the writer desires it to appear, let him send his name. We do not insist upon the publication of the name, but in every instance it must be known to us. We hope that all of our correspondents will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

The new editor regrets that he has been so occupied for the past two months that it has been impossible to reply to the many kind letters received concerning his election to the tripod. He appreciated them, one and all, and yet hopes to make a proper acknowledgement of each. Until he has an opportunity to do so, he trusts that the present statement will suffice. It was also a keen disappointment that he was not privileged to be in attendance upon the sessions of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. Indisposed with la grippe, he was unable to brave the blizzard then raging throughout the South. He hopes to be much among the brethren of the two Conferences during the next twelve months.

In the death of Mr. G. R. Page, which occurred at his home at Clarksdale, Miss., on Dec. 31, that community has lost one of its most useful citizens. Born and reared in Coahoma County, he has long been prominently identified with all of its important affairs. Well educated, courteous, and affable, he had a wide outlook and was deservedly popular. He was a devoted Methodist, and in the days when the Church was weak in that section, he could always be counted upon to do his part to maintain it. In business, social, and religious circles, he will be greatly missed.

AN APPRECIATION.

Voicing the sentiments of many readers, I desire briefly to express my appreciation of the retiring editor of the Advocate, Dr. J. W. Boswell.

Though not arbitrary, his letters and editorials have been of acknowledged authenticity, ringing clear, with no uncertain sound, on every important point.

In the last half century a great work has been done by him, and his life seems as a landmark in orthodox Methodism. His conversion, so thorough, has been the mainspring of his whole life, inward and outward, for environment has influenced him but little. His zeal and candor have been displayed in his writings on Church doctrine, upon which he is perfectly at home.

None knew him who did not have confidence in his spiritual life. He never sought preferment, but with resignation, cheerfully took up any work assigned. And as editor of our Christian Advocate, he deserves the gratitude of the Church for the sustained devotion with which he gave himself to this work of almost unparalleled importance. With faithfulness and without fear, he condemned the sinful practices of the day. A straight course for so many years, through changing fortune and amidst various habits of life, could only be possible through a personal allegiance to Christ.

May such conviction possess his successor, and cause him to love his fellow-man, and know himself only as a servant of others for Christ's sake.

MRS. W. H. TAFT ON DIVORCE.

If it were in my power, divorce would be stopped entirely. Of course, there are cases where separation might be granted, but there should be no remarriage allowed. The laxity of our divorce laws is a menace to the very moral fiber of our nation. It is an appalling evil, and it seems to be on the increase instead of diminishing. I remember the time when one read of persons one never knew who obtained divorces, but now every one comes in contact with divorced people—in every class of society—one's own personal friends on every hand. It is countenanced by the so-called highest social circles, and it is made light of, and a woman, in many instances, is received with as much favor after she is divorced as she was before. Such conditions are shocking and are most demoralizing. Wherever and whenever I could do anything to influence legislators to make stringent divorce laws, I would do it, and I believe that every woman in America should feel the same way.—The Christian Intelligencer.

"BRINGING HIM BACK."

The case had come before the magistrates. Mrs. Trembath stood without a word, apparently hardened into a reckless defiance. She might have been an old offender, and there was, I believe, only too much reason to think that it was by no means her first appearance—elsewhere. So the judgment was given—five shillings and costs; and she was removed to a room where she sat waiting with two or three offenders from other parishes, who were to be taken to the county jail.

Then it was that Miss Zelia rushed in breathless, and asked to see the squire. She had been driven over in the baker's cart, and the baker had his rounds to go, and his loaves to get rid of, and she was afraid she would be too late. Now she made her way to the court, and sprang upon the policeman. "I must see the squire at once," she gasped.

Squire Boynton was the chairman of the magistrates' meeting. The business was over, and he was just leaving when the message was brought: "Miss Zelia Trembath must see him at once."

But Miss Zelia was not willing to wait, and to the policeman's horror, she had followed him into the inner sanctuary, where no woman or other stranger was permitted to intrude.

"She would come, sir," the policeman explained, "and I told her she must wait."

"That is all right, policeman," laughed the squire. Then he turned to the little lady, who was trembling with excitement.

"Is she gone?" she gasped.

"Who, my dear?" said the squire, giving her a chair. "Whatever is the matter?"

"The woman Trembath."

"No, I don't think so. Why?"

"Is she going to prison?"

"Yes, for a week. And she seems a pretty hardened creature, judging by her looks—quite an old offender, I fear."

"She must not go to prison," said Miss Zelia, her eyes flashing, and the little silver curls trembling with excitement.

"I am afraid she must," said the magistrate. "There is really no help for it, you know."

"But not if I pay the fine?"

The magistrate hesitated. "Well, no—not if you pay the fine. But, really—"

"Will you tell them I have done it, then? I don't know how much it is."

"But really—it is quite a great deal, you know—for you."

"I don't care how much it is. I must pay it." And Miss Zelia took out her purse.

There was no help for it. The squire felt that from the first. When Miss Zelia had made up her mind, it was enough. So the matter was quickly arranged.

"And now," laughed Miss Zelia, "I suppose the prisoner is mine?"

"And she may be thankful to have such a jailer. God bless you, my dear!" said the squire. "You are good."

Miss Zelia followed the policeman into the room where Mrs. Trembath was waiting, and seated herself at her side.

"I have paid your fine," she whispered, taking her hand. "Do you mind?"

The woman turned and looked into Miss Zelia's face without a word. Looked and looked, and seemed as if she could do nothing else. "You understand, don't you? I have paid your fine. And now you are quite free, and I want you to come home with me."

Still Mrs. Trembath sat without a word, looking into that face—the blue eyes, the sweet smile, the silver curls had for her some strange fascination. Then there came an utter breakdown, and the woman buried her face in her hands, and sobbed as if her heart would break.

The next day Maggie went with Mrs. Trembath to fetch some things. "You must stay with us at any rate until you can eat something," Miss Zelia had said. "I am really quite troubled about you." At breakfast there had been silence—only the same fixed look. It was that afternoon as they sat by the fire that Mrs. Trembath at last broke her silence.

She drew from her dress an old, faded piece of music, and said: "Do you think you could sing this song?"

"Well," said Miss Zelia, taking it to the piano with all her cheery brightness. "I am afraid I have not much of a voice, but I can try." It was a simple song enough, an old song that she herself had sung when a schoolgirl long ago.

Mrs. Trembath's face was turned from the player toward the fire. As she listened the tears were creeping slowly down her cheeks.

"Will you sing it again?" Mrs. Trembath asked, when Miss Zelia had finished.

The song was sung a second time. Then Miss Zelia came and flung herself down on the hearth-rug by her side. Slowly Mrs. Trembath put out her hand, and drew Miss Zelia's head on her knee.

"I had a daughter once," she whispered.

"And did she sing that song?" asked Miss Zelia, very quietly.

"Yes, and I have never heard it since she—she died. I never thought I could bear to hear it again—but you—"

And so they sat by the fire as the daylight died. The lamp was unlit, and the glow of the fire sent little flickering shadows on the walls and the ceiling. "Why are you so good to me?" asked Mrs. Trembath, as she lifted Miss Zelia's hand to her lips.

"Why?" said Miss Zelia. "I don't know, unless it is because I love God and love you."

"God? God?" said Mrs. Trembath. "I loved him once, but when my daughter was taken—the voice was choked, and there was a sob—I—"

I hated him! In my loneliness and misery I took to drink, and then there came the separation from my husband. And I have had nobody since—nobody!"

"Not even God?" said Miss Zelia, tenderly.

"Do you think he cares for me?" whispered Mrs. Trembath.

"Do I care for you?" And Miss Zelia turned and looked into her face. "He cares for you much more."

That evening, later, Miss Zelia came in to see that Mrs. Trembath had all she needed and to bid her good-night. She found her on her knees. Miss Zelia crept over and knelt at her side, with an arm about her waist. When they rose there was a new light in Mrs. Trembath's eyes, a new glow filled her face. The hardness had been softened, the bitterness seemed to have died out of it.

"You have brought him back again," said Mrs. Trembath.—Mark Guy Pearce, in The Christian.

JOHN DENTON VALLIANT, the babe and only son of Mr. J. M. and Mrs. Maude Valliant, was called to dwell in the beautiful city of God on Oct. 24, 1909. I will not say that he is dead; he has just gone away. We miss him; oh, how we miss him! We miss the sweet voice which sang the songs of Zion so perfectly (though only five years old), the patter of the little feet which was so often heard, and the merry laughter which cheered our hearts and filled the home with sunshine. The vacancy can never be filled. But his mission, though brief, was not in vain. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. Weep not, dear friends, for the Father has just taken him home, where we shall soon follow. Denton was loved by all who knew him. Unusually bright and promising, he was, but God had need of him. May divine grace be sufficient for the bereaved ones!

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

On the morning of Dec. 19, 1909, Mrs. NANCY RICHEY, the oldest resident of Lowndes County, bade farewell to friends on earth to greet loved ones on the shores of eternity. She was born June 29, 1814, and was, therefore, in her ninety-sixth year. Bright and cheerful to the last, thinking of the comfort and well-being of the household rather than her own, she quietly went to sleep, and on the twenty-first of December, we gently laid to rest the tired body in the family cemetery near the old homestead, in Pickens County, Ala. She was married in September, 1837, to Robert Richey, who died September 23, 1855. She was the mother of eleven children, ten of whom lived to be grown. Five sons were given to the Confederate Army, all making brave soldiers. Her oldest son, Andrew, was first to lose his life in defense of his country. Robert was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a fellow-soldier. Her surviving five children were present when she breathed her last. Mrs. Jane Weaver, Mrs. Annie Acker, Mrs. James Harvey, William and Charles Richey. Many grandchildren and seventeen great-grandchildren are left to mourn the loss of a remarkably good and faithful worker. She was a devoted and faithful wife, mother and grandmother; a good neighbor, always ready to lend a helping hand to the needy and to speak words of cheer to the afflicted. In early life she was converted and joined the Church. At the time of her death she was a member of Murrah Chapel, where she was held in high esteem. R. P. NEBLETT.

HOME REMEDY

Mrs. Temple Clark suffered for years, before she found relief in that popular, successful woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in Timberville, Miss., writes: "Cardui has been worth more to me than a carload of silver. If it had not been for Cardui, I would have been dead. I love a dollar, but I have never seen one that I do not think as much of, as I do of a bottle of Cardui. I now keep it in my house, as regularly as I do coal oil or coffee, and have done so for years.

"Some years ago I jumped off a horse and had a mishap, and for about four years after that I suffered intense agony. At last I was induced to try Cardui, which cured me, and now I am well and happy.

"I am sure Cardui will cure other sick ladies as it has me."

Cardui is for women. It acts specifically and in a natural manner on the womanly system and has been found to relieve pain and to restore woman's health.

If you are nervous, miserable, or suffering from any form of female trouble, try Cardui. What it has done for other sick ladies it surely can do for you. Sold by all first class druggists, with full directions for use.

THE DREAMER.

The dreamer dreamed and the busy world

Passed by with a mocking smile.
As it went in search of the world's rewards,

But the dreamer dreamed the while.
He saw the world, as the world should be.

When longer years had run,
And the world but paused in its check, to ask:

"Pray, what has the dreamer done?"

Yet ever the dreamer dreamed his dream,
Till in some wondrous way—

As the water, springing in depths of earth,
Finds passage to upper day—

The dreamer's dream found the man of power—
Tis strange how men's lives are knit—

Who knew not the dreamer, but took his dream

And transformed the world with it.

The world bows down to the man of power—

Forgotten the dreamer dies;
Yet the dream he dreamed is the secret force

That has forged man's destinies.
—The Bellman.

DON'T RIDICULE YOUR BOY.

Many a boy has gone to bed in tears because his father criticised or denounced his effort at playing the violin; made fun of the simple little composition or story which he wrote; discouraged his attempt to make some little mechanical device; or threw a wet blanket on his dreams, laughing at his prediction of what he would do in the future.

A man who has recently come into great prominence in his profession says that when, tremblingly, he told his father what he wanted to be, he was told that a padded cell was the only place for a boy with such crazy ideas, and that he was forced for years to do that which God had forbidden in every fiber of his being, and against which every drop of blood in him protested.

The father who has made up his mind that his son must continue his business and keep his estate intact is not in a position to decide on the boy's bent—his special aptitude. He is prejudiced at the very outset.

The reason why there are so many mediocre men and women in the world, and so many failures, is the cause they never found their right places.

Everywhere we see men and women, capable of much better things, who were discouraged and diverted from their natural bent when young. Their own families did not take stock in them; they laughed at their young ambitions, and strangled their aspirations, either by harsh treatment, or, what is even worse, ridicule; and their teachers did not understand them.

You cannot read the sealed message which God has wrapped up in your boy or girl, and you should regard it as sacred. You should respect the dreams of future greatness of your son, because the Creator may have intended him for a grand and far-reaching mission; you cannot tell what is going on in his mind; you cannot tell what possibilities are locked in his brain. He may be perfectly conscious at this moment that he was intended for a much higher place in the world than you are occupying yourself, and to denounce him to scoff at his dreams, to laugh at his predictions for the future may be a source of great humiliation to you some day. It may also work incalculable injury to your boy. A thousand times better strike him with your hand than blast his hopes by ridicule or by a cruel, chilling, cutting word.—Exchange.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 9, 1910.

Matthew iii: 1-17; iv: 1-11.

Golden Text: "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted." Heb. ii: 18.

Wherever Jesus is, there is light and glory, and all men and angels minister unto him. John comes into attention as the greatest of the Prophets. Jesus comes as "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Yet in the beginning of a study of Jesus' ministry we see them both as men from the ordinary walks of life. We see them as they were seen there on the shore of the Jordan, by the multitude that "The voice of one crying in the wilderness" had called together. They knew each other all their lives for they were related, and each must have been often spoken of in the home of the other. John knew of the song sung to the shepherds the night Jesus was born; and Jesus knew of the vision of Zacharias in the temple. Mary and Elizabeth were more like two sisters than two cousins, and many times they must have spoken together of their wonderful sons, as Jesus and John grew to manhood they were prepared for their work as ordained beforehand. John was not much among his fellow-men, he was drawn to the solitude of the wilderness where, undisturbed, he could learn of the Spirit the deeper significance of what he had learned from his father. Jesus needed no preparatory. He was divine; his life in youth teaches youthful duty, and so on to manhood. He came and assumed humanity to mark out a pathway for all to follow. The time had come for him to begin the work his Father had sent him to do. He knew of the preaching of the Baptist, for John seemed to have moved up the Jordan river to a point opposite the town of Nazareth which was only some twenty miles away; and there, to John came Jesus to be baptized. The time must have been chosen as opportune, for Luke says it was after the people had been baptized. He was not of the people in the sense that a repentance was necessary, and with this fact in view, John forbade him when he signified a desire to have the ordinance administered to him. "I have need to be baptized of thee," said John, "and comest thou to me?"

The whole creation listens for Jesus' answer. "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." This was his first public act, and he set the example of conformity to a rite, that was in itself a public acknowledgment as a member of the Kingdom of heaven, that John preached. John could not farther object for this was a part of preparing the way before the Lord, and he was not long in any doubt of God's approval. The baptism was given, and Jesus was in prayer; while he prayed the Holy Ghost, in form of a dove, descended and lighted upon him, and there came the voice of his Father: "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased."

Everyone seeking the kingdom of God, to enter therein, must plainly show the world that such is his object, and there will be the two-fold object accomplished, confessing of Christ and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. When the new convert thus begins his life of Christian service, he needs the help of the Spirit, for Satan will make many a fierce attack on him ere he learns how to wear the "whole armour of God." God permits him to be tempted and tried, for he must learn the value of being a subject in the kingdom of God, and he must be put to the test to prove his worthiness. Then must this Savior-King be tested, not that it was a real test, but the world must be shown the power of good in conflict with evil. Our Savior-Priest must also be tempted as we are, in order that he be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Often it is just after the new convert has taken his stand for Christ that temptation comes. It was just after Jesus had publicly received the baptism, that was his proclamation as King, that he went forth to contend against the enemy of the kingdom. He was led to the scene of conflict by the Spirit, and the Spirit remained with him. "He was full of the Holy Ghost."

Satan made his first attack on the weakest point: Jesus was hungry, and the evil one said, "You are hungry, here in the wilderness, and you say you are the Son of God; then why not command these stones to be bread?" Jesus replied as a man would reply: "Bread alone will not satisfy man." God has so created him that he needs God's Word, his incarnate word, and his written word, that he may truly live. Then Satan tried to make the Lord presume on his Father's care of him: to put God's providence to useless test. Man does that when he yields to temptation, saying that God is so merciful that he will pardon. That is tempting providence, and Jesus said to Satan, "It is written again, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." God did not send his angels to bear up him who is fully bearing down. Man judges another by himself. So did Satan as he put forth a temptation that caused him to fall as lightning from heaven, the desire for power. He reasoned that Jesus asserted his divine power, over man, as his kingdom was to be established; that through man's innate obstinacy and proneness to evil, his subjection to the power of good was a task long and laborous; then why not suggest a quicker method of accomplishing the desired end. Then with this object, the devil in a moment of time, showed to Jesus all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and told him that all should be his if he, Jesus, would fall down and worship him (Satan). It was then that Jesus arrested his divine forces, "Get thee hence Satan!" God alone must be worshipped and served. The power and the glory of the kingdoms of the world must be the Lord's, but not by that means. "The Prince of this world" (as Satan was called by Jesus) must be overcome, but by the means and in the way as provided by the God of all the earth. Satan left the Lord, and angels came and ministered unto him. God's comforting Spirit will not come to men until the spirit of evil no longer abides with him, while God's grace is free, there is no quick way of having it. Grace comes by growth, line upon line, precept upon precept, sustain it, and in attaining it we must "Possess our souls in patience." Until the deep things of God are revealed unto us, we will not know the full meaning of this scene in the wilderness, where the God of heaven is subjected to the insinuating wiles of Satan, until then we will only look upon our High Priest preparing himself for the office of mercy. In our meditations we yearn towards our Savior in his lonely conflict, and we arouse ourselves to beat down Satan under our feet until "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

LESSON FOR JANUARY 9, 1910.

HOW TO MAKE OUR WILLS GOD'S

John vii:17; Acts xxii:10; Ps. xxv:9.

To everyone there comes at times serious questionings as to what God's will may be for this day. Your soul ponders the problem as to what God would have you do. And even the most devoted sometimes go with great reluctance where duty seems to lead.

The experience of mankind and the testimony of the Word of God, is that duty is an unfolding path, best seen as we pursue it, and most easily found, as we do the things that are at hand. A preacher, well known in our midst as one of Methodism's most successful pastors, testified that his only rule of success "was to do the thing that came next, and do it now."

The promise made to us by the Master was, "When he, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth." But if you will find the truth you must follow the guide. You will not learn all the things of God by one masterful, overpowering revelation. Step by step we advance. First the kindergarten, then the primary lessons, then we enter the grammar grades. Sometimes it seems as if in this life we never passed the primary lessons, but there is no question that we advance a step at a time.

We learn the will of God by doing it. You might memorize a book in mathematics, but until you take the lessons and apply them, they will be meaningless. Place a young man before a set of carpenter's tools, and give him many text books. Explain the use and theory of every thing from the compass and square to the hammer, and yet he might not be able to drive a nail straight, nor saw a board to the line. He will never become a carpenter until he actually uses his tools. There is much of this in the relation of the divine to the soul. There are lessons for us that keep unfolding with the use, through all of life. Perhaps we will only really understand the will of God in some things, when we have tried that will in the boundless fields of eternity. But our greatest lessons are learned by doing the simple things of daily life, and putting into practice the will of God in regard to the most lowly things.

He, who follows the voice of Jesus, shall not walk in darkness, but light shall shine upon his path. When Paul first met his Lord, he was commanded, "Arise and go into Damascus, and it shall be shown thee what thou must do." And all who obey, shall come to see the divine in Christ, and know whom they have believed. There is a notable statement of Peter's which is often passed over, "And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." Men have much to say about receiving the Holy Spirit, whom all recognize as the one that shall reveal the things of God to us, but they say least about the condition of his entrance which the apostle specifies here, obedience. But the Master stressed it. "If ye love me, keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter." Learn of the Christ, put into practice to-day the lesson learned, and to-morrow there shall be new truths at your command. Some day you shall be among those who serve with rejoicing around the throne, and the unfailing years of eternity shall bring to you constantly expanding visions of God.

A ringing note comes from Korea relative to progress made during the year. The baptized membership shows an increase over last year of one hundred and twelve, bringing the total to 4,657. There are now 2,930 probationers, or an increase of 394. There have been twenty-three new groups organized and forty-four new church buildings erected. The native members have made a decided increase in contributions, which is an evidence of growth in grace and knowledge.—Go Forward.

WALKING WITH GOD.

Perhaps our hearts tremble as we begin the New Year, and listen for the hoof-beats of God's possible providences before the year shall close. What messengers shall come? Shall some dark shadow fall over home or heart? Who can tell? Thank God! no one can tell. We go out into the opening year trusting in his divine care and almighty love.

Let us, like Enoch, walk with God through the months and days of this New Year. To walk with God we must go in the same direction: two cannot walk together except they be agreed. Enoch walked and walked with God till they reached the limits of time and earth; and still kept on walking with him, walked into eternity, into heaven, walks with him still. Some who begin the year with us will end it with God. God alone knows what of trial this year has in store for each of us. But above all the sounds of life's trials shall be our note of triumph in God, who will bring us off more than conquerors, and in eternity the sweetest strain of our immortal song shall be: "He hath done all things well." If trial shall come, may God help us to say:

"If from thy ordeal's heated bars
Our feet are seamed with crimson scars,
Thy will be done!"

—Robert Stuart MacArthur, D. D.

INDIVIDUALITY OF BUSINESS GIRLS.

Last winter a bright, wide-awake girl took a clerical position with a firm famous for its petty treatment of employees. She was set to work in a small, untidy room, lined with desks and tables. At each desk was a girl, dissatisfied and churlish; her individuality fading, her ambition rising no higher than to enter that room each morning just on the stroke of eight, not a minute earlier, and to be the first out of it when the clock struck five. Most of these girls had lost interest in their office attire, saving every penny possible for Sunday or party frocks. All of them were hoping to secure positions with other concerns.

Into this maelstrom of office anarchy stepped the girl whose individuality and self-respect still lived. She came to work in a new tailored silk waist with immaculate lawn turnover collar and cuffs. The other girls sniffed and warned her that the blouse would be ruined. The office was filthy.

"We have an office porter and two boys," she replied. "There is no reason why we can't have this place cleaned up."

And somehow it was done. A lot of trash had been thrown out, and the first layer of dirt had been removed from the floor, a ray of hope seemed to illuminate the staff of girls.

The new-comer brought down her own desk fittings simple and inexpensive, but with a note of individuality—a letter-opener and a box for clips in brass, a burnt-leather blotting-pad and some personal stationery in case she wanted to write a little note during the noon hour. The office manager sarcastically advised her to lock them up every night, and the girls exchanged significant glances; but nothing was ever taken from that desk. Finally, one of the girls timidly suggested that the new-comer might broach the question of their wretched wash-room facilities to the manager—and she did it.

In less than a year the atmosphere of that entire office has been changed, cleared, uplifted, by one girl. She did not preach. She did not demand. She did not stir up trouble. She simply lived her own life despite poor conditions, and made others first envy, then emulate her.—Anna Steese Richardson, in Woman's Home Companion for January.

THE LEGAL RIGHT OF PROHIBITION SETTLED.

"The question of the right of prohibition is absolutely settled for all time, so far as it pertains to the legal or constitutional right," declared Mr. Patton in a recent debate.

"For over half a century the highest court of the land has held tenaciously to the doctrine that the people have a right to absolutely prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages.

"The liquor traffic has employed the ablest legal talent and tried in every conceivable way to undermine the solid foundation upon which prohibition rests, but it remains intact. They have had their day in court, and stand defeated, but still they fill the land with the clamor of the untenable positions the courts have so completely and unanimously overruled.

"We have with us upon all the vital questions at issue the decisions of every state court of last resort where the issue has been raised, as well as that of the United States Supreme Court.

The importance of the fact cannot be overestimated. I believe there has never been a time in the last half-century when the traffic would not have gladly given up one-half of all its accumulated wealth to have reversed these decisions.

Unable to do this, their effort seems now directed to get the people to overrule these decisions and declare these courts to be wrong in their conclusions.

"We have no fear that, while reason and honesty sit upon the bench, or while these principles control the American people, there will ever be such a reversal."—Associated Prohibition Press.

REMARKABLE CONTRAST OF ABSTAINERS AND DRINKERS IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

"Twenty-five per cent of the soldiers in the British Army are now total abstainers, and in some depots sixty-six per cent of the recruits before enlisting are total abstainers," declared Colonel L. G. Fawkes, R. A., honorable secretary of the Royal Army Temperance Association, in his address before the Congress on the subject, "Alcohol and the Efficiency of the Army." "The consumption of drink in the British Army is rapidly decreasing," declared Colonel Fawkes, who noted the fact that there are now 203 branches of the Royal Army Temperance Association in England and the colonies; that in India the temperance room is recognized as part of the regimental institutions. King Edward VII is patron of the Association, and every encouragement is given the movement by Field Marshal Earl Roberts, and almost all others among the leading military men.

The director general of the Royal Army Medical Department says that in India the hospital admissions have fallen from between 14 and 15 per thousand to between 2 and 4 per thousand within the last twenty years. At Sierra Leone (perhaps the worst climate the British soldier has to serve in, notes Colonel Fawkes), the following comparison has been received from the senior medical officer for the first ten months of 1909:

Strength—Total abstainers, 60; non-abstainers, 213.

Admissions into Hospital—Total abstainers, 29; non-abstainers, 321.

Lord Kitchener states that in India, with the diminution of drinking, the number of courts-martial is reduced one-half. There were 32 courts-martial at Singapore, but not one among the abstainers.

Chairman A. Faulkner, J. P., of the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union, noted the fact that the movement organized in 1882 now has a membership of 44,000, in addition to which there are probably 60,000 more total abstainers in the service of the English railways who are members of other societies. This organization has its own official organ, "On the Line," having a circulation of 160,000 a year. In conclusion, Chairman Faulkner declared:

"The information which I have been able to put before you, gathered from the best sources, proves that in all civilized countries, those who direct the railway services are awaking to the important fact that alcohol is not conducive to efficiency, and that in those countries which are comparatively new, and which are untrammelled by ancient traditions and customs, the abolition of intoxicating drinks from the railway service is most drastic. The verdict, therefore, of the railways is, that alcohol is dangerous, and the signals are set against it, for without doubt it impairs the brain power and physique of the workers, and it is essential that it be abstained from by the railway men, that they may be as efficient as the service requires and the safety of the public demands."

"PROVE ALL THINGS," HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD

WHOLE No. 2814

Editorial.

The serpent tongue does exist. It is not confined to official households, nor to any particular sex, but in the office, in the shop, at the club, on the street, in the home, in fact nearly everywhere, its hiss is heard and its sting is felt. The gift of speech is one of the credentials of man's greatness, but how to use it wisely and well is one of the hardest lessons he has to learn.

It is not the individual only that suffers from a "shrunk ideal." States and churches have likewise suffered. A heroic age, followed by an age of degeneracy and decay, has been the usual history of nations and religious denominations. There is no escape from the consequences of a low aim. It will be a sad day for Methodism, should she ever substitute an educational, philanthropic, or any other ideal, for that of a world-wide evangelism.

The weight of words depends upon who stands behind them. Simon Newcomb, the great astronomer, complained that he could not talk anywhere without his utterances being jotted down. Men were keen to learn the thoughts of the highest living astronomical authority. The man who knows is the one for whose voice the anxious world is listening. And this is true, not only with reference to things material, but also with reference to things spiritual.

Christ has been spoken of as "The Great Companion." Such he surely is. Along life's rough, uncertain way, he walks with every disciple. In the sunshine he vouchsafes his presence; and when the shadows fall, he yet abides. Decrepit old age may lean upon him, and by his strong arms, the dying are supported. This fellowship is the richest boon of earth, and its continuance will be heaven's highest glory.

Some astronomers imagine that beyond Neptune there is another planet in our solar system. Day after day, with upturned telescopes they are sweeping the heavens to discover it. Myriads of beautiful stars shine down upon them, but they care naught for them, such is their eagerness to discover a new planet. The attitude of these astronomers aptly illustrates that of many of our theologians to-day. With ecclesiastical telescopes they are desecrating the theological heavens in searching for something new. The grand old doctrines that cluster around the Cross appeal to them in vain. They are wholly absorbed in trying to discover something before unknown. It is needless to say that these are not the men who are leading souls to Christ or making Christianity a potent force in uplifting the world.

A RELIGION OF POWER

Christianity is not only a religion of truth, but also a religion of power. It not only makes a revelation, but also puts to work in the human heart a mighty force. It not only rears aloft a high standard of truth and righteousness, but taking hold of man, it lifts him to the realization of the exalted ideal held up before him. In this more than anything else lies its vast superiority to all other faiths. To be sure, its doctrines are immensely more sublime and ennobling than theirs; it teaches more of God and man and eternity than their founders ever dreamed of; but it must be conceded that all false religions have in them a modicum of truth. They are, however, wholly destitute of anything like divine power. They have no Holy Ghost. They leave man fettered and enslaved by sin, and promise no relief except in the vague and shadowy future of another world. The doctrine of immediate deliverance, they dare not preach. Only Christianity has a present-day salvation to offer, and this is its crowning glory. Waiting for nothing except the right attitude of the human will, it breaks the power of sin in the soul, and bids him who has been the slave of evil to walk the way of righteousness in his new-found strength.

Not is one impartation of power all that is to be had. Fresh supplies are ever accessible. Having begun his work within us, the Holy Spirit will perfect it, if we will but allow him. What is expected of us is acquiescence and co-operation. These being secured, the task of purifying, ennobling, and fitting us for the heavenly home will go steadily on. As the greatest of the apostles has beautifully said: "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Of all the religious fads of our time, Christian Science is the most absurd. Its very name is a glaring incongruity; for as some one has truthfully observed, "it is neither science, nor Christianity." Science teaches that all matter is made up of certain elements, each of which has its distinctive chemical affinities and physical properties, so that no two of them are alike. But this new ism flies in the face of chemistry and physics and announces that all matter is fundamentally the same; that whatever differences appear to exist are the products of our own thinking, and that if mankind were only properly taught, our cooks might, with perfect safety, make bread of strychnine, instead of flour.

Nor is it less out of harmony with true Christianity. Its votaries claim to believe in the Bible, but their interpretation of it makes it virtually a new and different book. God is no longer a person, but an attenuated and all-pervading influence. Their Christ is not the Christ of the gospels. Man is to have no individual and conscious existence beyond the grave, but is to be reabsorbed into the great infinite mind of which he is but a temporary reflection or emanation.

Some seem disposed to regard this queer faith as an innocent delusion to be laughed at rather than taken seriously. But in this they are wrong. For an hallucination that causes parents to leave their children in the clutches of a deadly disease without medical attention is far from harmless. And furthermore, doctrines so thoroughly heretical imperil the safety of the soul. It is difficult to see how those who accept them are to be saved except on the ground of mental unsoundness.

Christian Science has grown rapidly, but that is not strange. Any superstition, no matter how grotesque, can find followers. In a nation as large as ours, there are millions of people afflicted with some form of mental aberration, and who are peculiarly susceptible to any kind of mysticism. Diseased minds are as numerous as diseased bodies. There is not a little truth in the old French proverb, "The world is full of fools, and he who would not see one, must shut himself up alone and break his looking glass."

IT CAN NOT BE DONE

Utterly vain is the attempt of man to get away from the supernatural. The most stupendous of all miracles was creation, and nothing is more incomprehensible than the riddle of the existing universe. What upholds the mighty fabric, what feeds the fires of the massive suns which light it, whence come and whither go the various forms of life that adorn it, and what is to be the final end of it all, are problems in the presence of which the human intellect stands hopelessly perplexed and overwhelmed. We find the mysterious not only in religion, but in nature, and in fact everywhere. Birth is a mystery, life is a mystery, and death is a mystery. For him who turns away from the light of divine revelation to rely upon his own little intelligence, there is naught but darkness, deep, intense, and hopeless. We would respectfully suggest that until men are able to eliminate the supernatural from the physical realm, they would do well to cease to inveigh against the mysteries of revelation and religion.

Cling to your seasons of devotion. In this busy, bustling age, the temptation is to shorten or abandon them. But to do so is perilous. Time spent apart with God is never wasted. From those precious moments, come inspiration to holy service and strength to stand firm in the stress of life's battle.

Secular News and Comment

New Orleans is a city of some 200,000 people and in it some children. The people of the city are for them a pleasant surprise.

The battle of New Orleans was generally celebrated in the city on last Saturday. The most Old Hickory famous figure will deserve some commemoration.

Since 1860 Alaska has produced $100,000,000 worth of gold. The output this year is a little less than $2,000,000. That was a record for the United States in 1872.

A visiting Canadian teacher observed that textbooks are not often changed in the public schools of Canada. Happy country. We should like to know how they manage to escape the influence of the publishers.

The construction of the Panama Canal is reported to be progressing favorably. The Senatorial Committee just returned expressed themselves as pleased with the situation and warmly commended Col. Goethals, the engineer in charge.

The Louisiana State University was fifty years old a few days since, and elaborate centennial exercises were conducted. Many eminent educators from a distance were present and Dr. Luman Abbott delivered a memorable discourse.

In a strong editorial, the Philadelphia Press shows that the postal deficit is nothing new; that it is less than it was in 1904-05, and yet a little larger than it was a dozen years ago. When there was no rural free delivery. Why, then, should so much ado be made about it?

The magnificent Carnegie Temple of Science at Washington, which cost twelve million dollars, was recently dedicated. It is designed to encourage investigation, research, and discovery. If the people of our day do not become wiser, it will not be because of a lack of facilities.

A movement is on foot to erect at the capital of each of the original Confederate States a monument to the women of the Confederacy. The design proposed by Miss Belle Kinney, of Nashville, has been adopted, and it was agreed to pay the gifted young artist $5,000 for her work.

The City Council of Greenville, Miss., has adopted an ordinance requiring every owner of an automobile to take out a license. The vehicle will also be plainly numbered, so that they can be distinguished in case of an accident. This is wholesome legislation, and ought to become general.

According to the press dispatches, the bubonic plague is spreading in California; several counties have been affected. The disease is spreading rapidly. The health authorities are doing their best to control it.

Church News

Granbery College, Brazil, has nearly four hundred students. Its present facilities urgently need enlargement.

The Virginia Conference contributed for missions last year $109,000, slightly over $1 per member. It will be their aim to advance to $2 per member by the time of their next session.

The Dukes have lately made Trinity College, North Carolina, an additional gift of $500,000. That institution is now the foremost college in Southern Methodism, and, if it keeps growing, will soon be treading on the heels of Vanderbilt University.

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, is eighty years old, but is still an industrious worker. The sight of one of his eyes has been gone for some time, and a cataract is forming on the other. With such a record as his, even if he should have to lay his armor off, his place as a religious leader will be secure.

Not including the German Mission Conference, Texas Methodism reported last year a net gain in membership of 12,500. Our total membership in the State is now well past the 250,000 mark. Of the delegates to the approaching General Conference, fifty-four will hail from the Lone Star State.

The second Biennial Convention of the Laymen of the Southern Methodist Church will be held at Dallas, Feb. 19-22. The first Convention met in Chattanooga two years ago, and was a memorable one; but it is said that the gathering now being arranged for will far outstrip it. No matter how large it may be, it will find plenty of room in Texas.

The Protestant Pastors' Association, of New Orleans, is a wide-awake and active organization. It maintains Miss Violet M. Bell as its representative at the Charity Hospital, and has secured for her the same rights in the institution as are accorded the Sisters of Charity. Concerning many things, the voice of united Protestantism needs to be clearly heard.

Two large oil portraits of Bishop Galloway are now being painted in Nashville; one for the chapel of Vanderbilt University, and the other for the chapel of Millsaps College. It is probable that they will be finished in time to be unveiled in June. There is also a likelihood of the Mississippi Press Association placing a similar portrait in the State's Hall of Fame at Jackson.

Saint Demol's, at Hawarden, is the church at which William E. Gladstone was wont to worship. In its outer walls have been prepared four niches, in which it is designed to place figures of Aristotle, St. Augustine, Dante, and Bishop Butler. Indeed, all of them except the last have already been put in place. It is said that these are the four men whom the great English statesman most admired.

At the expiration of the time allowed the American Bible Society to raise the $500,000 necessary to secure Mrs. Russell Sage's gift of an equal amount, the directors found that they were $42,000 short. But Mrs. Sage has permitted an extension of the time and the requisite sum will soon be in hand. It is said that since the Society has been in operation, it has distributed about 60,000,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures.

The Bible League of North America, which has its headquarters at 86 Bible House, New York City, will inaugurate a vigorous campaign to counteract the widespread influence of skeptical teaching in the colleges of the United States.

The plan contemplated is to raise $100,000 annually for the preparation and dissemination of wholesome religious literature, both among the young people attending institutions of learning and the people generally. The movement is timely, and doubtless will accomplish great good.

Immediately preceding the World's Sunday School Conference, which is to be held in Washington City, May 19-24, an inspirational tour embracing many of the leading cities of the United States will be conducted by prominent workers. Among those in the touring party will be Rev. F. B. Meyer of London, Bishop Hartzel of Africa, Prof. E. O. Excell of Chicago, and Mr. Marion Lawrance, the General Secretary of the International Association. The cities visited will be New Orleans, Dallas, Mobile, Nashville, Louisville, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapolis, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Pittsburg, Newark, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia.

The Methodist Recorder, the general organ of the Methodist Protestant Church, is endeavoring to project a widespread revival campaign. The names of ministers who will pledge themselves to co-operate are being secured, and a systematic plan of work is being formulated. We think our worthy contemporary is placing the emphasis on the right thing. There is no substitute for an evangelistic spirit. Scholarship, eloquence, and all else, fail to build up the divine kingdom where it is lacking. In our own Southern Methodism, what we need is the lighting of revival from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. That would do more good than all the legislation that could possibly be enacted at Asheville.

The Wesley Memorial Hospital, of Atlanta, Ga., has had a prosperous year. The fourth Annual Report, just sent out, shows that 750 patients, from 21 States, have been treated. The total income of the institution was $27,253. Of this amount, $22,672 was received from pay patients, and the remainder from the Christmas collections taken in the Methodist Churches of the State. The property is now estimated to be worth $100,000, and since the establishment of the hospital four years ago about $30,000 has been dispensed in its charity work. Three nurses were graduated last spring, 21 are taking the training course, and 150 applications have been received for admission into it. The general outlook for the institution is very bright.

A TRIBUTE TO A FRIEND.

The following remarks were made by the Rev. W. L. Duren, of Tupelo, Miss., at the funeral of Mr. G. R. Page, of Clarksdale, who passed away, Dec. 31, 1909.

My Brethren and my Friends: The grim messenger has sounded again his bugle blast. We heard it not in the ringing echoes from the hill about us, neither was its sounding softened by distance; but the shrill blast was sounded in our very ear. So we have responded to an unexpected summons to do as tenderly as we may, that which love bids us do. We were friends—he was my friend to the hour of his going away, and I am persuaded that he bears the feeling still. So, while I shall not purposely intensify your grief, I could not be true to the memory of the friendship he bore me without pausing to place a flower upon his bier.

History has given us the record of but one perfect life, and that life comes more and more to be the measure of human worth and of human greatness. So, out of our vision of this standard of worth, we instinctively ask upon the passing of any man: What has he left? Whither has he gone?

Answering, then, the natural questions of the heart: What has he left? What has he left as an imperishable legacy to his family and to his friends? What has he left to which a loving memory can cling when we shall have put him away from our sight?

I think of him, first, as the embodiment of a clean manhood. A manhood so clean that his memory brings no suggestion of shame. Where he went no hands were uplifted in horror, while the people cried "unclean." There was not even the shaking of the head, nor a pointing to blemish and stain. And he was not just negatively clean, he was positively clean. Like the eucalyptus tree sweetening the air about it, so at all times and everywhere by his life he was the dispenser of moral healing. He enriches us by the example of a clean life.

Our friend is more to us than clean. He was the incarnation of integrity and the soul of honor. He might and did often differ from his friends in his thoughts, and the result was a certain difference in action. But I record it as my sincere conviction that, whatever he did, he did because he thought it was right. I have heard his friends dissent from his view; but I have yet to hear the first one impeach his honor or question his integrity. But it is unfair to him to leave the impression that he was a frigid expression of justice. He was as chivalrous as a knight; and his heart-throb was as tender and sympathetic as any that ever beat in human breast. He enriches us by a life, correct, courageous, and tender, according to his power of vision.

To the bleeding church his memory brings no blush. But when we think of how faithful he was to every call, how loyal he was to her every institution, and how true he was—how we shall miss him from her courts! He enriches the church in that he shall always be a servant resting from his "loved employ."

By the stamp of that indefinable thing we call personality, he enriches us all. Our institutions, our progress, our very lives will bear the stamp of his personality to the end of our days.

Then, whither has he gone? A measurable correctness of life is of small consequence unless he were a good man. Cleanliness and integrity and fidelity must be rooted in right that is eternal, if they are to receive the reward of righteousness. I think that, outside of his own, no one is better prepared to speak for him here than I am. I enjoyed his confidence and he opened his heart to me—I'm the richer for it. I am as sure as human mind can be sure that all is well. That from the eminence upon which he lived in this world, he went to be with the redeemed forevermore.

He has fallen—

And when he fell * * he went down
As when a kingly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky."

Under the shadow of a great sorrow we have come together. For death has stolen a trail, but princely form, home, church, city, and a wider circle still mingle their tears together because of a "lonesome place."

But his bier is no wailing place. His very passing is laureled with a crown of victory. As the traveller in the weird twilight of the evening-time faces the west, he sees not the vanished sun; but lifting his face to the sky, 'tis illumined with his reflected glory—he knows the sun is there; so looking toward the land whither he has gone, we see not his manly form; but lifting our faces about us, we catch the radiance from the life of our princely brother and friend—he is just beyond the horizon in the beautiful land, and we shall see him again, for we shall soon be there. So, out of the faith that triumphs over sorrow, we say in the words of the adapted lines:

"Lord, he was thine, and not our own.
Thou hast not done us wrong.
We thank thee for the precious loan Afforded us so long."

THE MENACE OF THE CARNEGIE FUND

The world appreciates Mr. Carnegie's benefactions in behalf of extending the democracy of education. Running the finger up the list of his major gifts throughout the world direct to colleges, libraries, and his funds for pensions to teachers, etc., one is overwhelmed at the total benefaction. They reach the neighborhood of seventy million dollars. This amount of money is beyond comprehension, and unless the future brings some cataclysm at present beyond our comprehension, these great benefactions can but go on in their potent ministries until the end of time.

It is not to bring forward any cheap fling at the spirit which prompted these tremendous gifts that we speak of the Carnegie Foundation as a menace to the real welfare of humanity; but to express the hope that this menace may be counterbalanced and removed.

In establishing this "Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching," providing for the higher institutions of learning in America a system of retiring allowances, Mr. Carnegie had in mind not only "the relief of men who find themselves helpless after long years of honorable work," but also "the freshening of the work of the colleges themselves, by enabling them to put new men into the places of those whom old age and disability has rendered unfit for service." In his letter creating the trust, signed April 16, 1905, Mr. Carnegie said:

Gentlemen:—I have reached the conclusion that the least rewarded of all the professions is that of the teacher in our higher educational institutions. New York City generously, and very wisely, provides retiring pensions for teachers in her public schools and also for her policemen. Very few indeed of our colleges are able to do so. The consequences are grievous. Able men hesitate to adopt teaching as a career, and many old professors whose places should be occupied by younger men, cannot be retired.

Acting on this conviction, Mr. Carnegie set aside and transferred to the trustees of this foundation the sum of ten million dollars in 5 per cent first mortgage bonds of the United States Steel Corporation, and he made it of obligation that the fund should not be restricted in its application because of race, sex, creed or color. He excluded State schools. He also excluded "sectarian institutions," and in these words:

Many of these established long ago were truly sectarian, but to-day are free to all men of all creeds, or of none—such are not to be considered sectarian now. Only such as are under the control of a sect or require trustees (or a majority thereof), officers, faculty or students, to belong to any specified sect, or which impose any theological test, are to be excluded.

In making up his first board of trustees, Mr. Carnegie selected not only the heads of such institutions as Columbia, Harvard, Yale and Cornell, evidently non-sectarian, but of such Methodist colleges as Allegheny (Dr. Crawford), Lawrence (Dr. Plantz), and De Pauw (Dr. Hughes), which certainly are under denominational control. This is evidence that Mr. Carnegie scarcely intended his gift to be construed as anti-religious.

But in fact can it be otherwise construed? The fund is anti-denominational. Colleges which are under the control of a denomination are excluded from participation in the foundation. And the paragraph quoted from Mr. Carnegie at the outset of this article puts the whole weight against such colleges, since "able men" will "hesitate to adopt teaching" in them "as a career," and old men "whose places should be occupied by younger men" will not be retired, all of which will tell, more and more as time goes on, against any college under denominational control. Indeed the prophecy has been made that during the next generation half of the denominational colleges in America will be wiped off the slate. Is this best for America?

We wish to consider this matter from another viewpoint. Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell is a trustee of the Carnegie Fund, and Cornell University is a beneficiary, and at least nine of its retired professors are pensioned for life, on a total allowance of $10,570 a year. But Dr. Schurman nevertheless has recently expressed himself thus:

Benefactors die; universities abide. At least, that has been the case in the past. But in this age of organization, benefactors have learned to perpetuate themselves as corporations. And we now have institutions chartered by acts of Congress to disburse for educational purposes the charities of millionaires. The rich philanthropist who objectifies himself in such a benevolent corporation of course names the trustees, and subsequent vacancies in the board are filled by co-optation. This is a new species of corporation, but the two or three already organized hold large funds, which are likely to be greatly augmented in the future. And there is no limit to the number of such corporations except the limit to the number of persons who possess wealth and desire to distribute it in this fashion.

I cannot but think that these corporations create a new and dangerous situation for the independent and privately endowed universities. Just in proportion as these are supported by these benevolent corporations is their center of gravity thrown outside themselves. It is no longer a case of a rich man giving his money, going his way (eventually dying), and leaving the university free to manage its own affairs. The purse strings are now controlled by an immortal power, which makes it its business to investigate and supervise and which lays down conditions that the university must accept, if it is to receive grants of money.

Dr. Schurman pursued this argument for some time and closed it by speaking as follows:

I make no exception of the Carnegie foundation for the advancement of teaching, to which Mr. Carnegie has given such large endowment for the pensioning of professors in the colleges, technical schools, and universities of the United States and Canada. And I certainly speak with no prejudice as I regard that endowment as the best thing any benefactor has ever done for higher education in America, and I have myself the honor of being one of the trustees. But I look with concern and anxiety at the influence of such corporations on the free and independent life of our institutions of learning and research.

The influence of the Carnegie foundation is to put this center of gravity not only outside of the college or university, but also outside of the great organized Christian forces—the Christian denominations. We are so situated at this moment—the forces of heredity and of endowment are so vital—that this change of the center of power may for now be concealed without fear. But to-day is but the start. This outside power and this constant pressure of the purse strings, which is also outside organized Christianity, is intended to go on over into coming generations. The capital, now fifteen million dollars, is not to be impaired. Its power of pressure can only increase. As Dr. Schurman says, "It is immortal." The acorn will become an oak; the crack a crevasse; the egg a python.

Let us see how this pressure has operated, when as yet the Carnegie foundation was scarcely two years old. If we cite a definite institution it is not that we depreciate that institution; its charter is contemporaneous with the signing of the treaty of peace between George III and the American Colonies, and its alumni rank with the greatest educational foundations in all the land. The college, moreover, had the distinction of having had Mr. Andrew Carnegie on its board of trustees; and as for sectarianism, to it Mr. Carnegie had given the imposing building named for the famous free thinker, Alonzo D. Conway, "Conway Hall."

On July 29, 1905, (two months after the creation of the trust) Dr. George Edward Reed, president of Dickinson, sent forward the information why Dickinson College should be a beneficiary of the fund. A year later he wrote stating that under the charter "Clergymen of any body can never have more than a definitely restricted representation on the board of trustees," and that no Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has, or can have, official representation on the board of trustees. But this was not enough. On January 7, 1907, President Reed wrote to ask why the college did not appear in the list of accepted institutions. We quote from the official record:

The president of the Foundation replied that the trustees considered it inexpedient for us to announce as nondenominational an institution which is classified in a formal way by a denomination as a representative institution of that body notwithstanding the absence of denominational control, and pointed out that Dickinson College appeared as in official list of educational institutions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Methodist publications.

Its offense was that the name of the college appeared in the Methodist Year Book. Even that he was too intimate.

On February 19, President Reed, in the official record, wrote that "a few days previously the board of trustees of Dickinson College, at an adjourned meeting in Philadelphia, legally called, passed a series of resolutions" from which we quote the following:

That Dickinson College is under the friendly auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but has never been owned or controlled by any church body.

That the publication in any periodical of any church, or in any educational report, or elsewhere, that Dickinson College is under denominational control is not in harmony with facts and is made without authority of the board of trustees.

That in order to avoid misunderstanding on the part of the public, the president of the college is directed in the future to report the college as non-sectarian.

Is there anything left? The name of Dickinson College is not even to be in the Methodist Year Book. If it is there, it is "not in harmony with facts."

In the general list of colleges published in 1903 Dickinson College appears as "Methodist." In the general list of colleges published in 1900 Dickinson College appears as "non-sectarian." Dickinson College is on the list of "Accepted Institutions" of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

We have not a word of criticism of any of the parties concerned with this denaturizing of Dickinson College. We bring it forward to show what complete and irrevocable denaturizing is required to bring a Christian college up to the ever flowing crucibles which let out the molten yellow metal into the treasury of what once were great and inspiring institutions. Bowdoin actually sent back an endowment it had had for a generation; then it might approach the molten stream.

We do not know how it affects others, but to us it brings a mood of regret and of forboding as we see in the list of colleges which push their molds under the molten metal flowing from the Steel Trust converter, twenty which the educational tables of denominationalism are now verberating. When "non-sectarian" is defined in the above report on Dickinson College, and when any future Methodist or other Christian school must go only that identical road up to the molten stream.

Centlemen, it is paying too high a price. The center of gravity is in the wrong place.

II.

The lowly road traveled by Dickinson was traveled also by Randolph-Macon Woman's College of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This important institution, on one of the knolls in the vicinity of Aundburg, Va., is one of the foremost woman's colleges in the South.

In July, 1906, the president of the college presented a formal application to the trustees of the Carnegie Foundation for the admission of the college into the mystic list of beneficiaries of the Fund. He explained that there was no legal relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The trustees had no necessary connection with the Church. Nor did the college have any support from the Church. (We are stating his claim to recognition.) But the trustees of the Carnegie Foundation replied:

The matter of the adoption of the resolution by your trustees has not seemed to us so much a matter of course as it has seemed to you. Inasmuch as Randolph-Macon trustees have invariably been chosen from one denomination, it had not seemed to us possible to pass this resolution without a very radical change in its policy.

The board of trustees of Randolph-Macon met on August 16, 1906, to consider this memorandum just quoted. The trustees duly certified to the executive committee of the Carnegie Foundation that in the conduct of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College no denominational test is imposed in the choice of trustees, officers or teachers, nor in the admission of students, nor are distinctly denominational tenets or doctrines taught to the students. Furthermore, Bishop J. C. Granberry, president of the trustees of Randolph-Macon, wrote Oct. 4, 1906, that as far as the future:

Any effort to impose a denominational restriction in the choice of trustees * * * would doubtless be rejected as inconsistent with our obligation to the Carnegie Foundation.

But this was not enough. It was essential that in the official publications of the Board of Education Randolph-Macon Woman's College was included in the list of colleges of that Church. Moreover, a resolution passed by the Virginia Conference in 1906 chanced to say: "our Church schools * * * Randolph-Macon Woman's College, etc., was commended to the Church. This declared the Executive Committee of the Foundation would in the future be inconsistent with the spirit of the resolutions by which the Randolph-Macon trustees hoped to get at the Fund.

Still lower, the President of Randolph-Macon Woman's College then stated that any reference to the college in the publications of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was without the authority of the college, and he proposed that in future publications it should be made clear that the college was "independent."

But the track was not yet clear to the following molten metal. President Smith agreed that the trustees should call attention in an official way at the next gathering of the Virginia Annual Conference to the ownership and control of the college by a self-perpetuating board.

It seems that nothing else could be thought of which might be wanting in denaturalizing the college. The last shred and shadow of denominational contact being shorn away, the bars were let down and Randolph-Macon Woman's College started down its lowly lane to the ever-flowing converters of the Steel Trust.

It is but fair to say that when the report above translated was made to the Virginia Conference which had been kept in ignorance of the correspondence with the Carnegie Foundation—there was music in the air. And the music is still reverberating.

Brown University, founded in 1764, came up to the same denaturalizing rule. Brown has an endowment of three and a half millions. The alumni were shocked. After a sharp clatter of swords the outcome is, Brown was not denaturalized. Brown is not in the List of Accepted Institutions.

III.

We are not uttering one word of criticism of Mr. Carnegie. He has helped some four hundred of Christian colleges, many of them Methodist. We are not making any argument that he should not provide a pension-fund for the hapless working men who have spent their life in the high service of humanity, and on their superannuation, are with no means of support. Bacter, the historian, paid a tribute to the silent and unassuming man who, as preceptor, inspired and influenced Bacter's entire life. Mr. Carnegie has done a great thing in lifting clouds which darken the sunset.

But why should Mr. Carnegie so strenuously plan against our great Christian schools? Compelling them to cast aside their charters, compelling them to erase or scorn the resolutions on their records, which bear testimony to the sacrifice of Christian men and women, without whose heroic self-denials the colleges would never have survived? Mr. Carnegie cannot have it in his mind to crush such institutions. He is too well read in the history of America and the evolution of her institutions to need to be reminded what is their origin, and, equally to the point, what has been the service of Christian schools to American life and prestige.

IV.

And yet the pressure of this Pension Fund is tremendous. The state universities have come in. The report of the secretary of the Carnegie Foundation says as to their admission:

The admission of these institutions was urged not only on account of the apparent hopelessness of a retiring allowance system being instituted through any other instrumentality, but also because it seemed advisable that the tax-supported and privately endowed institutions should have the mutual benefit of being associated together in the same educational agency.

In their petition to Mr. Carnegie the state universities wrote this plea:

State universities are unsectarian and not under control of denominations and therefore are in the class of institutions which the founder of the retiring allowance system desired to aid.

We may be permitted to add one more paragraph given among the reasons for the admission of state institutions to the Fund:

In the absence of retiring allowances for professors in State universities, one important section in American higher education would be placed at a disadvantage in securing good men.

Let us summarize. The reasons for admitting other than "non-sectarian" institutions to the check books of the Carnegie Foundation are:

1. The "hopelessness" of a retiring allowance system from any other source.
2. All institutions "should have the mutual benefit of being associated together in the same educational agency."
3. Where this Pension Fund is beyond reach even the State universities are at a decided disadvantage in getting good men.

V.

What does this all mean for all Christian colleges? It means that the Christian colleges of America must knuckle to conditions which are little short of treason to their past, or face the alternative of being slowly ground to powder. If the State universities with their millions income a year would be placed at a decided disadvantage in securing good men, what will be the future of those Christian schools who can offer no expectation of a comfortable pension for life when their teachers are past their productive and elastic period of life?

Already the denominational schools are bowing to the rod of gold. In 1900 the Congregationalists had seventeen colleges which bore the denominational name on their high banners. The banners of ten have been taken down and "Non-sectarian" ran up in their place.

But, gentlemen, it is not worth the price. The center of gravity is in the wrong place. The great steel works pour out their molten metal, but it seems to us that that molten metal would burn the fingers and the consciences of those once Christian schools, which now are on the Accepted List.

As far as the officers of the Carnegie Foundation know, no institution in America furnishing to its students the usual branches of a higher education requires of those students as a prerequisite for entrance, as a condition of remaining in good standing, or subscription to any religious belief or membership in any church.

This is the language of the Carnegie Foundation itself. Well, if this language is truthful, what hope, pray, can Mr. Carnegie ask? Can we expect to maintain our great Christian schools when once they have been clean divorced from the Christian churches? Mr. Carnegie's trust, the Carnegie Foundation, distinctly affirms that these Christian colleges do not require "a subscription to any religious belief, or a membership in any church." In that light, how can we understand Mr. Carnegie's great, undying, tremendous, omnipresent hand, even in future generations the dead hand, reaching into the education of America to embarrass, to harass, to minimize, to thwart, to destroy our great Christian schools?

Mr. Carnegie has done many noble things. His motive in creating this peculiar Foundation we do not question. But we do not hesitate for one moment to say that if the logical result of his millions—such a logical result as we see in Dickinson and Randolph-Macon—is achieved, future generations will rise and say that it had been better for the world if Andrew Carnegie had never been born.—Central Christian Advocate of the M. E. Church.

PROTESTANT MINISTERS MEET.

The Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans met in regular monthly session in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. Monday morning, with eighteen members in attendance.

Mrs. J. A. Kinabrew, president of the Travelers' Aid Society, accompanied by Mrs. J. T. Halsey and Mrs. Benjamin Ory, vice presidents, appeared to solicit the co-operation of the ministers in raising funds for their organization. In a brief talk Mrs. Kinabrew told of its objects and purposes, how it specially aims to care for unprotected women and girls who come to the local railway depots, by means of women agents stationed there.

Each of these agents—there are now four—is paid a monthly salary of $35. Their maintenance is a greater financial burden than the society can bear. She asked that the ministers appoint some special Sunday on which to lay the matter before their congregations, inviting them to membership or to contributions. This request was agreed to, and the clergymen promised to state the case to the members of their churches, either from the pulpit, or in some other way, as they may upon reflection deem suitable.

An invitation from the Board of Administrators of the Charity Hospital, to the association's Committee on Hospital, to meet with it was reported. At the meeting the recently agitated question of allowing Miss Violet M. Bell, the official representative in the hospital, free access to the maternity wards was discussed. There were present for the hospital Dr. E. S. Lewis, Hunter C. Leake, Louis Valloft, Dr. Joseph Dana and Capt. L. Delahoussaye. The association was represented by the Revs. J. C. Barr, W. W. Holmes, E. F. Schuessler, W. H. Bringle and B. L. Bolton. All points at issue were amicably discussed, and at the conclusion of the debate Dr. Lewis said he was in favor of permitting Miss Bell to visit all parts of the institution, including the maternity wards, as freely as is possible to the ministers themselves. He promised to urge the recognition of Miss Bell for this privilege at the meeting of the administrators. Miss Bell was re-elected as the association representative in the hospital for another year, and provision made for her salary.

Satisfaction was expressed at the report that the first Protestant Christmas celebration ever held in the hospital was given last Thursday afternoon in the new Delgado Chapel. This was very much of a success, with the attendance of visitors and patients greater than the chapel could hold. The association again expressed its hearty interest in the laymen's missionary movement, and promised active co-operation in the meetings to be held in its behalf Feb. 12 to 15, inclusive.—Times-Democrat.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SPECIAL STEAMER.

DELEGATES TO THE WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Transportation Committee of the American Committee of the World Missionary Conference, which will convene in Edinburgh Tuesday, June 14, 1910, take pleasure in announcing that the Bureau of University Travel of Boston has secured the large new steamship Kroonland, 12,760 tons, of the Red Star Line, as the special World Conference Steamer, sailing from New York at 10 a. m., on Tuesday, May 31, 1910.

By this steamer we have been able to secure, for delegates and their friends who are to attend the Conference, a reduction in rates amounting to 10 per cent from the regular printed schedule of the company, the minimum rate being $82.50.

The Kroonland is due to arrive in Southampton, Thursday, June 9, 1910. From Southampton a special train will take the passengers direct to Edinburgh, so that members of the eight commissions can attend their pre-conference meetings, which are arranged for Friday, June 10. For those delegates and their friends who prefer to utilize the four or five days preceding the Conference in seeing something of England, the Bureau of University Travel has arranged an interesting itinerary, for which a special train throughout will be engaged. The route will include Oxford, Stratford, English Lakes, and Melrose.

The advantages of going by the special steamer are evident. It will bring the delegates and members of the American Executive Committee and Commissions and others attending the Conference into sympathetic touch and mutual acquaintance before arriving at Edinburgh, will give ample opportunity for any pre-conference meetings.

As the arrangements made for the special steamer are conditioned upon the Bureau of University Travel's receiving application for 300 berths by Jan. 1, 1910, it is important that the full quota be made up by that date. Moreover, as many of the delegates will be accompanied by their families, it is important that prompt application for accommodation be made, so that in the event of an overflow there will be ample time to arrange for additional accommodations. It is advisable, therefore, that delegates and members of commissions act as promptly as possible.

If you find that you cannot go by the special steamer, the Bureau of University Travel will be glad to arrange for your passage by other line or steamer at the minimum rate.

WORK WANTED.

Any presiding elder needing a local preacher to serve as a supply, may address me at Waynesboro, Miss. I have been preaching for four years and can give the best of reference.

E. A. MOODY.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The price of the Advocate is $1.50 a year with a commission of fifteen cents to agents to cover expense of collecting and remitting. The rate to preachers and widows of preachers will remain at one dollar a year.

The club rate for 1910 will be $1.25 each in clubs of five or more. We offer the club rate as a privilege that has been requested of us, and we will give a commission of ten cents, per subscriber, only when it is requested. This commission must cover the cost of remittance.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks, we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the regular price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by the thousands, it becomes a serious matter. We are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Owing to the rush caused by many changes of address at Conference times, it will be several weeks before the dates on the labels of your papers are all changed. But if the date is not correct by January, 10, or if you know of any who are not receiving their papers, we will esteem it a special favor if you will notify us.

THAT LITTLE HAPPY THOUGHT.

A helpful little happy thought went hastening on its way.

All in the early morning of a long and busy day.

"I've neither hands nor feet nor tongue," it mused, "but I'll not sorrow."

For boys and girls are plentiful, and so I'll merely borrow.

Now little Nell was skipping by, to visit little Jane.

Presto! the little happy thought was beaming in her brain.

And so she turned, and hurried back, and stayed at home instead.

Reading, with merry, tripping tongue, to poor blind cousin Ned.

Off went the little happy thought, and saw some idle feet

Drumming their heels against the steps upon a quiet street.

And soon those feet were carrying, upon an errand hot,

Their smiling owners, who had whined and said he'd rather not.

If "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do,"

Why, then, a little happy thought can set them working too.

And, judging from a many things I notice every day,

That helpful little happy thought is still upon its way.

—Minnie Leora Upton in St. Nicholas.

THE LESSON OF DOING WITHOUT.

The crying sin of the day is dishonesty. One hears so much of it in public life, but it is sad to say there is too much of it altogether in private life. And its cause is to be found in the want of self-control in the indulgence of tastes and appetites. Reckless, extravagant living is at the bottom of it all. If this living had any true foundation in any hearty desire for any desirable things, there would be more hope of amendment. But when one comes to see what things ill-gotten gains are spent upon, the outlook is a sad one. Dress, display, amusement, costly things bought just because they are costly, wealth won evilly, merely that it may be wasted foolishly, these are the signs of a time which is not a pleasant thing to contemplate. If a man loves any one thing, say rare books or pictures, or objects of art of any kind, or of the one thing in which he would be rich, he is willing to be poor in everything else, no matter though his choice be an unwise one according to the best standards of choice, he will yet have a motive which will help to keep him upright. But for those who love none of these things, but simply desire them because it is the habit of the time, because like pampered children, they must needs to cry for whatsoever they see just out of their reach, for them is needed the wholesome self-discipline which shall teach them to let alone whatever is not theirs.

And the beginning of self-discipline is in the home. Parents must teach their boys and girls the great lesson of doing without whatever can not be truly theirs. There need be no niggardly restraint, but in some way, the first lesson for childhood should be that of earning pleasure.

To get whatever it craves as soon as it asks for it, is the worst training a child can have.—Dominion Presbyterian.

GOOD MANNERS.

An essential condition of the perfect manner is the absence of self-consciousness. There is a kind of self-consciousness that is most excusable, and sometimes pretty and attractive. It is the shyness of the young. This often comes from the feeling that they are not understood, and they have not the means of making themselves understood. They do not possess, or at least they do not know how to handle, the weapons of society. Sometimes it has a less worthy source. It springs from a great egotism. Young people should be quick enough to see that their elders are not scrutinizing them and judging them as they imagine. Elderly people who retain their shyness are, as a rule, distinctly disagreeable. When great personages who have been unpopular through life, on account of their rude, brusque manners, pass away, the newspapers explain that they meant very well, but that they were shy. These explanations are seldom felt to be satisfactory. Egotism is inconsistent with good manners. I need hardly say that a person who is always thinking about etiquette is sure to make blunders, and to convey an impression of vulgarity. The true gentleman is infinitely above such paltriness. He is not thinking about himself; he is thinking about others. He is not miserably comparing his station and his fortune with those of the people he meets. He meets them as a gentleman meets ladies and gentlemen, and his business is to give and receive what pleasure he can. It is an essential of good manners that they should always be maintained. I do not say that we can always be quite the same. Moods and feelings come and go, even in the strongest. One day you are well and bright, another day you are ill and in pain. It is perhaps impossible to be just the same in one condition as in another, and I fancy for most of us the safe rule in days of mental or physical suffering is to say as little as possible, and to keep as much as may be out of other people's way. Still, we can do our best. We should try to be constant in our ways. If we have taken what we think reasonable offense at the doings of a friend, we ought not to show it by an icy manner. It is our business to explain to our friend where he has apparently come short, and to hear what he says about it. In all probability with his explanation the misunderstanding will pass like a summer cloud.

Young people are often gloriously insolent in the way they talk about age. They will refer to a man of sixty as an old man when there are men and women in the room well over sixty, but unwilling to admit they are old. There is a pleasant sense of safety in the company of some people. You know they will not say anything to fret and chafe you. In the company of other people you are sure to receive a wound. No wonder if you shun that company.—British Weekly.

More money was given for benevolent purposes in America in 1909 than in any preceding year. The total sum contributed amounted to more than $150,000,000, about half of which was distributed as gifts and the other half as bequests. It was divided among the various causes as follows: To charity, $47,000,000; to education, $47,000,000; to religious institutions, $23,000,000; to art museums, galleries and public improvements, $1,000,000; to libraries, $3,000,000. It is now scarcely considered respectable for a man of means to die in the North without making some philanthropic bequest. Yet, strange to say, Mississippi, one of the most progressive of the Southern States, has in her Constitution a clause which forbids the bequeathing of property to any religious or eleemosynary institution. Such a provision is an anachronism, and ought to be stricken out.

THE VANDERBILT QUESTION.

The issue concerning Vanderbilt University has been squarely joined, and will be fought to a finish. Stripped of all complications, the question, as we see it, amounts virtually to this: Shall the institution be under Methodist auspices, or shall it be owned and governed by the Methodist Church? For reasons unnecessary to mention, we take a stand in the controversy with great reluctance. But in a matter of such vital importance, neutrality is a thing impossible. Every man owes it to the Church and the cause of Christ to advocate bravely and openly what he conceives to be right. Personalities should not be indulged in, or motives impeached, but the principles involved should be discussed without fear or favor.

It may be possible that a larger and more influential university could be built up under denominational auspices than under denominational control. It is quite probable that such a policy would bring more generous donations from the millionaires of the North, and pile up more rapidly a munificent endowment. It is said that nearly all of the greater so-called church schools, such as Princeton, Harvard, and Yale, are denominational only in name, and that no educational institution of national influence has ever been developed under the complete control of a single church.

All this may or may not be true. We have no present inclination to discuss the subject. We will say, however, in passing, that we consider it very doubtful whether the large institutions, with their millions of endowment and thousands of pupils, are doing more for the nation and civilization than the smaller colleges, where the teachers come into closer contact with the pupils. The test of any institution of learning is the men it makes, and, judged by that standard, the small college need not shrink from comparison with the larger.

But be that as it may, so far as Vanderbilt University is concerned, the question of policy is not an open one. That has already been determined. Admitting an undenominational management to be desirable, it can not now be had without the repudiation of obligations the most sacred and binding. Vanderbilt is a Methodist institution. Its very charter so proves. It was born of a movement inaugurated by Methodist preachers in Methodist Conferences. Its cradle was rocked in infancy by Methodist hands, and the constituency which has made it the foremost institution in the South is a Methodist constituency. Not until Mr. Carnegie's millions began to wrench church schools from their denominational moorings was it ever remotely suggested that Vanderbilt University is not under the complete control of the Methodist Church.

But arguing for a moment the desirableness of a policy less denominational, it is pertinent to ask, if the grip of the Church may now be weakened somewhat, why may it not later be further weakened? And why may it not finally be thrown entirely off? And suppose, with the hold of the Church less firm, things undesirable from a Methodist point of view should be introduced into the institution. How are we to help ourselves? Could we depend upon a board of trustees, largely independent, and perhaps many of whom hold membership in other communions, properly to reflect the views and sentiments of our people?

No, no; the Methodist Church cannot afford to yield one inch in the present contest. But at the General Conference she should assert her complete ownership, and take entirely into her hands the election of the trustees. A mere confirmatory right is not enough. She should also have the initiatory right, that she may place on the board whom she pleases.

We have heard it said that this is a fictitious issue—that all believe the Church owns Vanderbilt University and has the power to constitute the trustees—that there is no division of sentiments on these points. We think those who hold this view are mistaken; but if they are not, since the question has been raised, it will not hurt to re-affirm the complete ownership of the Church and claim a conceded right. Indeed, this is the only thing which will allay the feeling of apprehension that exists among many Methodists of the South, and stop the unhappy agitation which now extends throughout the Connection.

LAYMEN'S MEETINGS.

Three Laymen's Meetings are soon to be held within the patronizing territory of the Christian Advocate, viz: Jackson, Miss., February 8-10; New Orleans, February 12-15, and Shreveport, February 16-17. Thorough preparation is being made for each of these gatherings, and they promise to be of unusual interest. Many eminent speakers will be present, and the programs will be of an exceptionally high order. It is hoped that the pastors and lay leaders in Mississippi and Louisiana will lend a diligent hand in making these meetings a success. Nothing proper should be left undone to secure a large attendance. Such occasions impart information, kindle enthusiasm, and increase the working forces of the kingdom.

AN INTERESTING DISCUSSION.

We desire to call special attention to the able editorial, entitled "The Menace of the Carnegie Fund," which appears elsewhere in this issue. It is the product of the pen of the editor of The Central Christian Advocate, of Kansas City, and is a vigorous handling of a live question, one which we fear is destined to become more prominent with the passing years. Mr. Carnegie's discrimination against church schools will, no doubt, be felt more appreciably as time goes on, and it will become increasingly difficult for them to hold their own in competition with subsidized State institutions.

But, after all, it may prove best for our religious institutions to be shut off from Mr. Carnegie's benefactions. They may have less means, but they will have independence, and that is better than money. It has long been charged that many of the pastors of wealthy city churches are under such obligation to the rich in their congregations, that they dare not speak their honest sentiments from the pulpit. May not professors of sociology and political economy, who are soon to retire upon pensions supplied by millionaires, feel some restraint in teaching principles of which their wealthy benefactors would not approve? At any rate, the place of the question is worthy of consideration.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The General Conference, which will convene at Asheville, N. C., early in May, will be composed of representatives from all of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Not only those in the United States, but also those in foreign lands will send delegates.

This is the one law-making body of the Church, and every part of it is accorded the right of representation. The apportionment of representatives is equitable, and the smallest conference is not left without a voice and vote. Southern Methodism is democratic in her great legislative assembly, if nowhere else.

The membership is composed of an equal number of clerical and lay representatives. The laymen may, if they wish, sit as a distinct body, and no legislation can be enacted which does not carry a majority of their votes. Thus it will be seen that no law can be written in the Discipline which does not command the sanction of the people of the Church. In view of these facts, how utterly without foundation is the charge that the membership at large have no voice in the government of Southern Methodism!

The personnel of a General Conference is usually of a very high order. It brings together many of the most widely known men in the South, and in the scholarship, eloquence, and general legislative ability of those composing it, it would not compare unfavorably with the American Congress or British Parliament.

Many have written of the approaching session of the General Conference as if they expect its assembling to mark almost a crisis in the history of the Church. We do not entertain any such view. True, the waves of radicalism for some months have been dashing high, but we do not doubt that at Asheville the voice of conservatism will bid them to be still, and that they will obey. So far as our observation has extended, but little of the suggested legislation is new. A vast deal has been written concerning the presiding eldership, but scarcely anything has been said that has not over and over again found utterance at former periods. The episcopacy has come in for a share of attention, but no new light has been thrown on the subject. The time limit is again under discussion, but by no means for the first time in the history of American Methodism. Dr. Winton, whether wisely or unwisely, has opened wide the columns of the General Organ to all who wish to suggest changes in our doctrines, ritual, and polity, but most of what we have thus far had has been merely the threshing over of old and discarded straw.

Indeed, as it appears to us, only two questions of unusual importance, which have not before been confronted, are certain to come up at Asheville. One is that which involves the ownership and government of Vanderbilt University, and the other is the memorial from the women of the Church, asking that they be accorded all the rights and privileges of laymen. Nor do we see any reason for taking fright over the fact that five or six Bishops may have to be elected, and proposing extraordinary methods of choosing them. The Church, when much smaller than it is now, has chosen four at one time and made no mistake. Why then should it be considered unusually perilous to elect a slightly larger number at the present time, when our membership is 1,700,000 strong? Our conception of what a Methodist Bishop should be is a lofty one, but we entertain no sort of doubt that among our many distinguished pastors, educators and connectional men may be found as many who would wear the episcopal robes worthily, as the Church may conclude are needed.

We sincerely hope that our people generally will not be disturbed by the agitation going on in the press. This display of radicalism comes with quadrennial regularity. Revolutionary spirits are always turbulent. A few can make the noise of a host. The great working masses of the Church are too busy to engage in needless disputation. But we doubt not that they will be heard from in no uncertain tones at Asheville. We do not believe that Southern Methodism is ready to abandon a single salient feature of the doctrines and polity under which she has forged her way forward, and written her brilliant history.

DO NOT NEGLECT IT.

President George L. Harrell, of Mansfield College, and J. C. Yarbrough, Secretary of the Board of Trustees, have informed us that the observance of Mansfield College Day was not as general throughout the State as it had been hoped it would be. They urgently request that those who did not observe the day last Sunday, do so next Sunday. This is a matter of unusual importance, and we trust that their suggestion will be carried out without exception. By every token, Mansfield College should be given relief in this hour of need, and every congregation in Louisiana should count it a privilege to contribute to a cause so meritorious. The Methodist Episcopal Church is industriously at work in this territory and Southern Methodism must be up and doing. Our colleges must be strengthened, if we are to measure up to our opportunities. Let them lie our safety and our hope. Let no pastor fail to do his part in this important campaign.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. W. Chisholm, of Decatur, Miss., has recently been sorely afflicted in his home. His wife has been critically ill, and at the time he wrote, was still not out of danger. He earnestly desires the prayer of the brethren in this hour of need and trial.

We are not surprised to be informed that Rev. W. C. Gale, of Rosedale, Miss., is pleased with his charge at Rosedale, Miss. He serves a choice and high-minded people. We acknowledge our indebtedness to him for a list of subscribers, and his kindly words and good wishes.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of the Okolona Methodist, a neat little monthly issued by Rev. R. A. Clark, in the interest of his congregation. It is a creditable publication, wide-awake and newsy, and doubtless renders the pastor valuable assistance in his work.

A card from Rev. J. A. Randolph, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is now a chaplain in the United States Army, informs us that he has left Montana for Manila, in the Philippine Islands. Through the Advocate, he desires to say good-bye to the many friends left behind.

Rev. C. V. Brethaupt, of Houma, La., writes under the date of Jan. 3: "We had our first service in our rebuilt church at Bourg (which was blown away by the storm) yesterday, and had a large congregation. The outlook for the year is very bright in this part of the French Mission field."

Rev. W. L. Duren has begun his work with encouraging prospects at Tupelo, Miss. He has a fine opportunity in that inviting field, and we doubt not that he will give a good account of himself. We extend our thanks to him for a club of nine subscribers, sent from Clarksdale, his old charge.

We were pleased to receive a note from our long-time friend, Rev. R. T. Nolen, a few days since. "No one feels a greater interest in the Advocate than he, and no one does more to extend its circulation. We wish him a happy New Year and abounding success in his work for the Master."

Rev. A. J. Coburn, of Farmerville, La., has been hindered in his work by sickness, and preached for the first time in his new charge on Jan. 2. He has been alive to the interests of the Advocate, however, and forwarded a list of twelve subscribers. We wish him large success in his pastorate.

The largest club of subscribers (forty) which the Advocate has recently received has come from Rev. W. T. Woodward, of Haynesville, La. We assure him that we appreciate what he has done, and we pray that he may be equally as successful in caring for all of the other interests of the Church.

In a communication, just received, Dr. Murrain, President of Millsaps College, says: "Everything is moving on satisfactorily in our college work. The boys are back after the holidays, and are busy getting ready for the semi-annual examination. Our second term will begin Jan. 31, and that will be a favorable time for new students to enter."

We are informed that two new churches will soon be erected within the bounds of the Bossier City charge: one at Bossier City, and the other, by the Queensborough congregation, at Shreveport. These buildings will be on modern plans, with adequate Sunday school facilities. We congratulate the energetic pastor on these forward movements.

The many friends of Dr. Richard Wilkinson in Louisiana and Mississippi will be pleased to hear of his good fortune in having had presented to him as a Christmas present by one of his friends in Augusta, Ga., a handsome $1500 automobile. Dr. Wilkinson has been returned to the Saint James Church in that city, where he is preaching to large congregations and having a most successful pastorate.

Rev. Ivy Yoak, of Inez, Ky., writes us of the marriage of Rev. C. T. Barton, of Corinth, Miss., and Miss Hazel Dempsey, of Inez, Ky., which occurred at the latter place on Dec. 25, 1909. The groom is a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and a very promising young minister. The bride is a young lady of many accomplishments, and the daughter of a prominent Kentucky business man.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, in charge of the Sailors' Rest and Gulf Coast Mission, is just back from Nashville, where he attended lectures at the Missionary Training School, and met the Executive Committee of the Joint Commission on Home Mission work. To that Committee he submitted a report of his work at Gulfport, which is highly gratifying, and a summary of which will appear in the next issue of the Advocate.

The big guns are still in action, but the seat of battle has been shifted from St. Louis to Dallas. In the last issue of the Texas Christian Advocate, Dr. Winton and Bishop Hoss are hard at it over the Vanderbilt question. The Bishop fights on the defensive, but, like General Joseph E. Johnston, when he does face an opponent, it is to destroy him. A more brilliant piece of writing than his last reply to Dr. Winton, we have nowhere seen.

On Christmas evening, at 7 p.m., at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. L. S. Clarke, Mr. Joseph O. Carson, a prominent educator from Missouri, and Miss Nellie K. Lyons, daughter of the late Dr. J. F. Lyons and Mrs. Frances A. Lyons, were united in holy wedlock, the Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D., officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Carson left at once for Lake Charles, La., where they will reside. Mr. Carson is professor of mathematics in the Lake Charles High School.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, pastor of the Second Methodist Church, has issued a handsome folder extending New Year's greeting to the members of his congregation, and announcing the programme of his services for the month of January. His general theme will be: "Jesus and Our Inner Life," and the subjects of the discourses grouped under that head are well chosen and appropriate. Work so admirably planned can hardly fail to be productive of great good.

The parsonage at Long Beach, Miss., was burned on Tuesday night, the 4th inst. The press dispatches state that there was $1,500 insurance on the house and $200 on the furniture. The pastor, however, lost everything, he and his family barely escaping with their lives. Elsewhere is published a communication from Rev. W. B. Jones, the presiding elder of the district, asking assistance in supplying Brother Alford with necessary books. We hope that his appeal will meet with a prompt and generous response.

Rev. J. A. Bowen was appointed one of the Conference missionary evangelists at the recent session of the North Alabama Conference. His host of friends in Mississippi will be glad to know that he is to devote himself to evangelistic work, for which he is so admirably qualified. He has few equals as a revivalist, and will no doubt exert a wide influence in the new sphere of service to which he has been assigned. Persons desiring to communicate with Brother Bowen may address him either at Leesburg, Ala., or at Birmingham, in care of the Alabama Christian Advocate. Later in the year, Birmingham will be the place of his residence.

From the Port Gibson Reveille we clip the following: "The celebration of the 20th anniversary of the marriage of Rev. and Mrs. G. H. Galloway, on the 17th ult., was an enjoyable affair. There were about fifty guests present to wish the happy couple many more years of wedded life. After a short informal reception and words of congratulation, the guests were served with refreshments by a number of young ladies. The evergreen decorations were very pretty, and the gifts of china were numerous and handsome. The Advocate heartily joins in felicitations to Brother and Sister Galloway, and wishes them a long life of unalloyed happiness."

Mr. Marion Lawrance, General Secretary of the International Sunday School Association, after an extended visit to Cuba with Secretary T. V. Elzey, of the Louisiana State Sunday School Association; Prof. Walter Miller, of Tulane University, and Mr. H. L. Baker, of Plattenville, La., reached the city last Saturday, and remained over Sunday. Saturday evening Mr. Lawrance was given a luncheon at the Christian Woman's Exchange, after which he proceeded to St. Paul's Episcopal Church, where he addressed a gathering of Sunday School workers. On Sunday, at 11 o'clock, he delivered an address at the Parker Memorial Methodist Church and installed the officers of its Sabbath School; and on Sunday afternoon spoke to a great audience at the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Lawrance is one of the foremost Sunday School workers in the world, and it is needless to say that he made a profound impression upon all who heard him. Particularly interesting was his discussion of the condition of the work in Cuba, where, he said, there are 8,000 Sunday School scholars, and the interest is steadily increasing. Among other things, he announced that the Louisiana State Sunday School Association has pledged itself to raise $1,000 a year for three years to place a general secretary in charge of the Cuban work. From New Orleans, Mr. Lawrance went to Alexandria, and thence to Shreveport.

A GOOD WOMAN ASCENDED.

Dear Brother Meek: On the afternoon of January 5, we buried our mother, Mrs. M. E. Holliday, in the family cemetery near Canton, Miss. For nearly forty years she had been an intelligent reader of the Advocate. Her life has been a benediction to many. A great and good woman has left us. We mourn not as those without hope. T. B. HOLLOWAYS.

We deeply sympathize with Dr. Holloman and the other members of the family in the loss of their mother, and pray that God may comfort and sustain them. We trust that a memoir will be furnished the Advocate for publication in the near future.

HOW TO HEAR GOD'S VOICE.

Acts xxiii:17; John viii:43, 47; Rev. i:10.

We have no question that God spoke to men of old, and that hearing these men wrote for us the oracles of God. We doubt not that Abraham and Isaac and Jacob responded to the call of God, and that their lives bore testimony to the message which they had received. We, who believe the Bible, are sure that Paul and John both heard the voice of their ascended Lord. But into the heart comes the question, does God still speak to men? And if so, how may we come to hear his voice and know that we are being led of God?

While we believe that the special revelation to mankind was closed in the Bible, and that it contains all that men need to know for salvation, we do believe that God is still speaking to his children, and that through the Holy Spirit he will speak to any heart that comes to him aright. The Spirit testifies to personal salvation, throws light upon the Scriptures, admonishes men of duties to be performed, and administers the affairs of the kingdom of Christ. To cover the field of the operations of the Spirit and his revelations to man, would be to canvass the whole history of the Church and to enter the secret experiences of all the children of God.

But if you were to spend all your days reading books, and listening to testimonies, naught would clear away your difficulties except the touch of the Spirit upon your own heart, and the path of approach to God may be suggested by a few experiences as shown in the Bible. When Paul saw Christ in the Temple (Acts xxii:17), he was in the house of God and in prayer. All through the lives of earnest Christians run the experiences, when, in the house of God, the soul saw its vision, and duty became a pleasure, and sorrow's bonds were loosened, and the pathways of service became plain. Of old, when the Lord planned the tabernacle, and the mercy-seat upon the Ark of the Covenant, he promised "And there will I meet with thee." (Exod. xxv:22). The Publican who really prayed in the Temple went down to his house justified. To the Christian Church the command went forth that we should not forsake the assembling of ourselves together. And through all the ages God has been meeting his people in the house of prayer.

When John received the wonderful vision on Patmos he was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day. The rush and turmoil of life tend to make men oblivious of the things of God. The man who stops life's tasks to keep the Sabbath holy will find that its seasons bring him to the point where he may hear the things of God. With John, we may be brought face to face with the glory of our Lord. The more truly the day that belongs to your Lord is kept by the help of his Spirit, the more truly will it be to you a day of communion with your Lord.

But there is more than being in church, or in keeping the Sabbath, or in finding a place of secret prayer; the heart must be open to God. The Master repeatedly exhorts: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." There may be a dozen groups of people in a large room, and many persons talking at the same time. You will only hear the one to whom you give attention. The soul must be open for the Spirit to speak to it. We must not only come with our messages and our petitions, we must wait on God, and hear what the Spirit hath to say to us.

Then, as the Spirit never contradicts himself, that we may be doubly sure that God speaks to us, also hear what the Spirit saith to the Church, and compare our heart experiences with the word of God, and as the spiritual life grows it will increase the spiritual heritages of the soul and the sense of the reality of divine things.

HOPE FOR DRUG ADDICTS?

Free Distribution of a Successful Remedy Has Done Untold Good.

It is estimated that within a comparatively short time nearly three thousand persons, addicted to the use of opium or morphine in some form, have taken advantage of the generous offer of the Waterman Institute, 124 East 25th Street, Branch 3, New York, to send a free supply of a truly remarkable home remedy for these insidious and dangerous habits. The expressions of satisfaction derived from the continued use of the remedy are practically unanimous. It is said that the free distribution will be continued for a time.

LESSON FOR JAN. 16, 1910.

THE BEGINNING OF THE GALILEAN MINISTRY.

Matthew iv, 12-25.

Golden Text.—The people that sat in darkness saw a great light.—Matt. iv, 16.

Levi gives his written testimony of Christ's ministry as beginning in Galilee, where already Jesus had done many mighty works, and had already set forth a principle of gospel preaching on which the whole Christian doctrine rests, that of the birth of the Spirit. It appears that this apostle only wrote of the things happening and bearing on the time of his own call to the apostleship.

Before preaching the gospel of the kingdom in Galilee, Jesus had acted on the truth that he afterwards set forth, and that was that "A prophet hath no honor in his own country." It is true that he had been in Cana and there performed a wonderful miracle, but that work would only teach a power like that of Elisha or Elijah, for it was as he told his mother, his hour was not yet come. It was in another country, in Judea and Jerusalem, that he confined himself to work that testified of his divinity. So, after leaving Cana, and spending a short time in Capernaum, he went to Jerusalem for the Jews' passover was at hand, and his first act there was cleansing his father's house from being an house of merchandise. On a night of one of these days in the city, Nicodemus came to Jesus, and in the discourse to that Pharisee, there was set forth the great need of regeneration. God's love to man, the state of condemnation of unbelievers and salvation through faith, doctrines never taught until taught by him that came down from heaven.

He then left Jerusalem, for he knew that the Pharisees had heard of how he increased and John the Baptist decreased. He went to Galilee, and his way was through Samaria, where he sowed a seed that brought an abundant harvest. Arriving in Galilee, he made his second visit to Cana, and while there he performed a second miracle, healing the nobleman's son, unlike the first miracle, for now he began to teach faith in his word and power.

His next preaching was in the synagogue at Nazareth, where he taught the fulfillment of Isaiah lxi, 1, 2, in himself, and where he was not accepted by the people of his native town, but suffered persecution near unto death. The sorrow caused by this was added to, for he heard that John the Baptist had been put in prison. No more would he dwell in Nazareth; he came there to his own, and his own received him not. Capernaum hereafter would be his home in Galilee, for there lived Simon and Andrew, and James and John, friends that he knew would never forsake him. Not only in Capernaum, but in all the country round about, the land of Zabulon and Naphthaliim, were people sitting in darkness, and even in the region and shadows of death. He was the great light to shine upon them and to them he began to say "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The light shined but the people would not see. For Jesus afterwards said of them and of Bethsaida and of Chorazin, that if the mighty works were done in Sodom that had been done in Galilee, repentance would have saved that doomed city. At this time Jesus was alone in his work, the four that had been called to discipleship when John had been preaching at Bethsaida, had gone home and had resumed their work as fishermen. One day not long after he came to Capernaum, Jesus was walking by the seaside, and seeing Peter and Andrew, and James and John, gave as to call forth favorable editorial them their second and final call, not content from the newspapers.

only to discipleship, but to what he intended to be, apostleship. You are laboring to catch fish now and are skilled in your work, but come and follow me, learn of me and I will make you more skillful in catching men. They had heard the Master speak and they were in a manner familiar with his figures of speech, so at once they left ship, nets, and two of them left their father and came and ever afterwards, during the time of Jesus' earthly life, they followed, learning of the work for which they had been called.

Their work began at home among people they had known all their lives, for throughout all Galilee Jesus went and they followed him. With every Christian a beginning is made at home. Even in the dwelling, for if a man is not religious at home he can not teach religion away from home. In their own synagogues Jesus taught from the Scripture of the Prophets and the fulfillment in the gospel of the kingdom. Not only ministering to their spiritual needs, but healing their bodily infirmities. He healed the sick and fed the hungry, and then gave them the gospel.

Jesus preached by his actions; he went about doing good.

The master did not command Andrew and Peter, and James and John to go, but he called to them to follow. He went before through all Galilee, and he not only preached the gospel, but he healed the sick and cast out devils, the fame of him that reached all Syria was that of a great physician come to relieve suffering, and the Syrians came to him bringing their afflicted ones and he healed them, everyone. He then had a claim upon them when he told them of the cure for a sin-ridden soul, they harkened to his words.

Why should not this "common people" this part of the masses, hear and accept his doctrine? He went about them as one of them, doing the work himself, and there was no suggesting any superiority as regards social station. He was the first great Christian socialist, and his doctrine of the brotherhood of man was in hand with his gospel of salvation. This truth is the message of the church to the restless multitude who call "Peace, Peace," when there is no Peace away from the Prince of Peace. The study of plans and theories is good, but personal work is better, for Jesus has shown how it succeeds. Sending a doctor to a sick man who is too poor to pay for such service, or sending a ham and a bushel of potatoes to a hungry family will open a way to tell of God's great love for the poor and lowly. Such work cometh not from those of soft raiment in king's houses, but from him who was not like the foxes that had holes, and the birds of the air that had nests. The first choice of apostles was made from among fishermen, for the work in hand needed only a preparation of heart, and they were to learn that from following the Master. People of today are sitting in darkness, but they require not the glare of a scholarly search-light, rather let your light be given from the humble candle on a candlestick, for "it giveth light unto all that are in the house."

EFFECT OF OPIUM AND COCAINE.

When improperly used, opium and cocaine are two of the most powerful life-destroying drugs in the world. But even worse is the slavery these drugs make of those who acquire the habit of using them, first in small and subsequently in gradually increased doses. It is practically impossible for anyone, even with an iron will, to break such bondage. There is a man over in Alabama, Ga., however—Dr. B. M. Woolley—who for over thirty years has made a business of curing opium and cocaine habits. Unlike many specialists he treats these habits as diseases and claims that in most cases the sufferers are not directly responsible for their conditions. His success in effecting cures is something phenomenal—so remarkable, in fact, that he has been called forth favorably editorially from the newspapers.

Let your spiritual life be formed by your duties and by the actions which are called forth by circumstances. Do not take overmuch thought for the morrow. Be altogether at rest in loving, holy confidence.—Francis de Sales.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The first session of the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting for 1910 was held on Monday morning in the pastor's study of the First Methodist Church. Present: Rice, Holmes, Werlein, Atkinson, Foster, Sutton, Townsley, Sims, Parker, Carley, Lutz. Visitors present: W. G. Harbin and D. P. Haggard.

The following officers were elected: Dr. F. N. Parker, president; Dr. J. A. Rice, vice president; A. S. Lutz, secretary and treasurer.

Dr. S. H. Werlein, Rev. John F. Foster and Rev. W. W. Holmes were appointed on the program committee.

The report on Mansfield special was as follows: Rayne, $174; Feliciana, $10; Carrollton, $8.50; Second Church, $15; Parker Memorial, $3.25; Columbia, $1.

Rev. W. G. Harbin gave a short report of the revival services now in progress at Mary Werlein Mission, in which there have been a large number of conversions.

Dr. S. H. Werlein was given a cordial welcome back to the city. He gave a brief account of his itinerant life since 1888, when he left New Orleans to go to St. Louis. He has been in many cities and Conferences, but through the providence of God, believes he is now in Louisiana to stay. He said he feels at home here, and will put in the best work of his life for God and Methodism, and try to make our Church keep pace with the city in its onward progress.

Brother Haggard, of the First Church, Memphis, Tenn., gave a word of greeting to the brethren.

The preachers expressed their appreciation upon the return of Dr. F. N. Parker as presiding elder for the fourth year. Dr. Parker responded with a short address, in which he referred to the fact that Dr. Werlein was his pastor when the Quarterly Conference gave him license to preach. He admonished the preachers that a great work can be accomplished with our Gospel, and urged that we preach on the consciousness of sins forgiven. The essence of the Gospel is forgiveness. We were told to adapt our methods of work to the times, and with this message we cannot help but conquer. Our Church now is doing more for people than ever before.

The Travelers' Aid was highly commended by the preachers as deserving the support of all our people.

The program committee appointed Rev. N. E. Joyner to discuss, on next Monday, "The Advisability of Holding a Mass Meeting to Celebrate the Centennial of New Orleans Methodism."

The book contains Brother Harbin's strongest sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit, and is full of help for the Christian life.

The price of the book will be 75 cents, postpaid. Orders may be sent to C. O. Chalmers, publisher, 512 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

The Christian Guardian has this to say: "Mr. John R. Mott is the greatest missionary leader of the world, and he is a Methodist. His denominational affiliation is not generally recognized, because the occasions which command his presence and his addresses are usually of large and international character. During his recent visit to Toronto, however, the Methodist co-operating committee of the Laymen's Movement, tendered Mr. Mott a luncheon in the National Club, at which he gave a masterly address on China. In his address Mr. Mott took occasion to say that in his judgment there was no city in America where Methodism is relatively so strong from every standpoint as in the city of Toronto."

USEFUL INFORMATION FOR HOUSEKEEPERS.

The Manufacture of Gelatine.

Since the advent of the Pure Food Law, housekeepers are more than ever interested in what things to eat are made of. So many housekeepers have asked the question, "How is gelatine made?" that we are going to answer it briefly here.

The best gelatine is made of selected calf bones, such as you personally would use in your own home for making soups. This raw material comes from the plains of India and South America, and not from American packing plants, as many suppose, and it has been guaranteed by government inspection. This raw material is washed in pure artesian well water, then kept submerged in pure lime water until ready to cook.

In the kettles the gelatine stock is covered with distilled water and cooked for hours at a low temperature. The liquor is then strained, filtered and clarified, after which it is cooled (jellied) under water; this to keep it from any impurities in the air. The jelly-like substance is then dried out into clear sheets, under extreme heat, in specially prepared rooms. Finally it is ground to powder and packed by machinery into the sealed packages which you buy from your grocer.

This, very briefly, is how Boston Crystal Gelatine is made. Pure gelatine is absolutely free from any taste or odor. It may interest you housekeepers to know that in the Crystal plant all employees wear white duck suits, which are changed every day; the manufacturers maintaining their own laundry for this purpose. It is gratifying to remember that Boston Crystal Gelatine is not touched by human hands in the making.

Attention was first called to gelatine as an article of food in 1789, at the time of the first French Revolution. In the struggle to provide a cheap and useful food for the soldiers and people, gelatine was adopted as containing the most nitrogen of any food at a similar cost. While it is not practical as a steady diet for people under severe strain, its popularity remained undiminished with the coming of peace, and the use of gelatine has increased steadily for over one hundred years.

France has naturally taken the lead in the manufacture of gelatine, though the United States consumers more than any other country in the world. It is generally conceded, too, that with our improved scientific methods we make the purest and best gelatine.

Pure gelatine is very nutritious, and Boston Crystal Gelatine is especially so. A pan of gelatine liquor weighing forty pounds is concentrated into two and one half pounds. Furthermore, in order that its unusual strength may be preserved, it is packed in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

The housewife can make a calf's foot jelly at home by boiling a soup bone, but she cannot obtain the same result as the manufacturer, who not only brings a life time of experience into the problem, but the chemist and his laboratory as well. One ounce of Boston Crystal Gelatine will make two full quarts of jelly.

While gelatine may be used to advantage in making ice cream, marshmallows, etc., it is primarily a dainty dessert and is coming more and more into favor each year in all sections of the country.

Boston Crystal Gelatine sets very quickly and makes a clear, transparent, tender jelly, which can be mixed with milk or cream without curdling. By "tender" we mean a jelly which will rapidly dissolve in the mouth. Some kinds are not tender in this sense. You have to almost chew them as you would a gum drop. Some kinds are undesirable, as they show poor material, faulty manufacture, or both. In our next article we shall give some valuable information as to the various uses of pure gelatine. A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health! What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ills or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ills, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.: "I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 5 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it at once. 'Twill help you.

CONCERNING THE CENSUS.

Census Director Durand stated to-day that, as a result of his conferences with the supervisors of census throughout the country he finds that in many sections, especially in the larger cities, there have not been as yet sufficient applications for the positions of enumerators. It looks, he thinks, as if the country is so prosperous that people are not as anxious to get these responsible places as had been expected.

The scarcity is giving the Director some concern, as only a few weeks remain before the date for closing the consideration of applications. It will be impossible generally to extend the application time limit, as to examine the "test" papers, with the necessary care to insure the designation of qualified persons, will consume every moment of the time allowed for this phase of the work of selecting the enumerators, leaving nothing for an extension of the date for shutting down on applications.

The Director therefore urges all persons desiring places as enumerators to make application as quickly as possible, and he hopes that, in order to help get a perfect census, public-spirited and energetic people throughout the country will offer themselves for these positions, even though they may not care for them from the standpoint of the pay involved. He also trusts that employers will deem it their duty to give leave of absence to their employees who may desire to act as enumerators. Some slight sacrifice of this sort will be amply repaid by the improved quality of the census returns. Continuing, the Director said:

"Although the actual work of taking the census will not begin until April 15, it is essential that those who wish to act as enumerators should apply immediately. Except under unusual circumstances, no application received after Jan. 25, will be considered. About 68,000 enumerators will be required. Each will work in his own locality. Any competent person is entitled to apply for this position, and will be fairly considered for appointment. There is a census supervisor in each Congressional District, and persons should apply to the one in whose district they reside. His name and address may easily be learned by enquiring.

THE SECRET OF HIS SUCCESS.

Marshall Field, the great Chicago merchant, died two or three years ago after having amassed a colossal fortune. The key to his success is given below in his own words:

"I made it a point that all goods should be exactly what they were represented to be. It was a rule of the house that an exact scrutiny of the equality of all the goods purchased should be maintained; and that nothing was to induce the house to place upon the market any line of goods at a shade of variation from their real value. Every article sold must be regarded as warranted, and every purchaser must be enabled to feel secure."—Marshall Field.

WINE OF CARDUI Cures Sick Headache. Also Nervous Headache, Traveler's Headache and aches from Stomach Troubles or Female troubles. It is liquid—effects immediately. Sold by druggists.

THE FEEBLE-MINDED.

The condition commonly known as feeble-mindedness is one which demands special treatment under a medical specialist and special training at the hands of teachers who have devoted their lives to this particular field of pedagogy. It is impossible to obtain at home the care and training demanded by such cases. It is a sad commentary on our civilization that the majority of feeble-minded children are being allowed to grow up without the scientific care which would develop them into useful citizens.

The Stewart Home and School, Farmdale, Ky., Dr. John P. Stewart, Superintendent, is doing a noble work for this unfortunate class. It is a pity that every feeble-minded child in the South cannot enjoy the blessing of the training and care afforded by this home and school. Interested parties would do well to write Dr. Stewart.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if any one afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 704-35 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

THE LOWER LIGHTS.

"I don't believe I'll go to church to-day," said Ruth, one Sunday morning, at the breakfast table. "Some how I don't feel like it and nobody will ever know the difference, whether I'm there or not."

"My dear," said Aunt Margaret, "I've often heard you singing. Let the lower lights be burning. I wonder if you know the story that suggested it."

"No," answered Ruth. "I never so much as heard that there was one."

"Some years ago, a steamer in a terrific gale was trying to make the harbor at Cleveland, Ohio. There were two lights at the entrance of the harbor, one the upper light on the bluff's off the shore, the other the lower light on a bar at the other side of the entrance. The pilot reared out anxiously to catch a glimpse of the friendly lights, and presently caught sight of the upper one. But that alone was not sufficient, he must also see the other to know just where to go. But for some reason it was not lighted on time. Beaten by wind and wave, the steamer staggered on as fast she could while the hearts of all on board trembled with fear. If she missed the entrance, there was little hope of her escaping the rocks. Suddenly the lower light appeared, but alas, it was too late—the steamer had missed the entrance, and in the attempt to turn about, went down with all on board."

"I suppose," said Ruth, with a little laugh, "you mean that even if I am the most insignificant member of our church, and sit in the very back seat, it is my duty to be there in my place."

"You remember George Eliot's poem of the violin-maker, who said if he did not make the very best violin possible for him to make, God would miss the music? If we are not each one of us faithfully doing our duty, be it small or great, there is silence or discord where there might have been music. More than that, our lives are bound together—we must needs lift up those about us or drag them down. We are bidden to sow our seed at all times, for we know not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both shall be alike good. The cobbler, as I once heard a minister say, could not paint a picture, but he could tell a tale that the shoe-tie was not right, and so might help towards making the beautiful picture perfect."

"O, Auntie," exclaimed Ruth, "why did I say anything? I might have known you would not let me stay at home in peace. Still, I will try to keep my wee little lower light burning as brightly as possible hereafter."—Zion's Herald.

President Woodrow Wilson, of Princeton University, on preaching: "I have heard a great deal of preaching, and I have heard most of it with respect, but I have heard a great deal of it with disappointment, because I have felt that it had nothing to do with me. So many preachers whom I hear use the gospel in order to expound some of the difficulties of modern thought, but only now and again does a minister direct upon me personally the raking fire of examination—which consists in taking out of the Scriptures individual, concrete examples of men situated as I am—putting myself to be situated—and search me with the questions: 'How are you individually measuring up to the standards which in holy writ we know were exacted of this man?'

It is a good policy to leave a few things unsaid.—Exchange.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY.

Perhaps you have read of the discovery of the great scientist, Lord Kelvin, of England, the man who made so many discoveries, and whose scientific learning was used in the construction of the Atlantic cable. Not long before his death, some one came to him and asked him this question: 'Lord Kelvin, what do you consider the greatest discovery you ever made?'

What do you suppose was the great and learned man's reply? You would imagine he would mention one of his scientific discoveries in electricity or no. This was his answer: 'My greatest discovery is this, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief.' Was not that a noble response? Selected perhaps the greatest hero is the man who does his best and signally fails, yet is not embittered by his failure. A life here in which you fail of every end you seek, yet which disciplines you for a better life, is assuredly not a failure.—Kings Mess.

Editorial.

One of the rarest virtues is humility. The counterfeit of it abounds, but the genuine article is very scarce. It is one of the last and richest fruits of the Holy Spirit.

The Church has in her hands no mightier power than the ministry of intercession. The early disciples counted it their main reliance, and by means of it they accomplished the apparently impossible. Less manipulation and more recourse to prayer would improve the Christianity of our day.

"Obedience is better than sacrifice." Attempted worship by one in whose heart and life Satan is regnant is offensive to God. Only the soul that aspires to do the divine will can render acceptable praise. Chanting anthems and oratorios cannot take the place of the harder lesson of "ceasing to do evil and learning to do well."

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be." Man in this world is not made, but is in process of making. We see him only in his beginning. As the great Brighton preacher said: "Once in the world's history was born a Man." If we could comprehend what the humanity of Jesus embraced, we would know what man is finally to become. But with the present reach of our powers, that is impossible. So not until the curtain of eternity lifts may we see man full-orbed and complete.

Christianity is the religion of the forward glance. Its future is ever brightening; its best things are always yet to come. We see this beautifully illustrated in the life of the Apostle Paul. He revelled not in the heroic memories of the past, but his face was ever forward—he was always "reaching forth to the things before." Even when he stood at life's tragic close, what most engaged him was not the retrospect—not the good fight fought, the finished course, and the faith kept, but it was the vision of the awaiting crown.

It is sometimes said that if one is truly born into the divine kingdom, he need not concern himself about his growth in grace; that that will go naturally on; that just as the tiny twig in the course of time develops into the stalwart oak, so the babe in Christ will in the course of years become a mature and well-rounded Christian. Such teaching is erroneous and calculated to do harm. It arises, doubtless, from carrying too far an analogy taken from the physical world. As Bishop Keener has strikingly observed in one of his brilliant essays, "The natural realm is a realm of one will; the moral realm is a realm of two wills." Character is a joint product—in part God-made, and in part man-made. The Heavenly Father holds out a helping hand to all who would ascend the mount of holiness; but unless we ourselves climb, never shall we reach its glorious summit.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON SUFFERING

It was the bard of Avon who said, "Sweet are the uses of adversity." It was a greater than he who long before said, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." It was a greater still, the Lord of all, who said, "Blessed are they that mourn." And again, "Ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy."

Suffering is the common lot of all. It touches every inhabitant of the planet. It spares neither pauper, nor millionaire; neither peasant, nor prince; neither the ignorant, nor the man of learning. Its regnancy is everywhere and over all. Absolutely none escape. Nor is it easy, when in the grip of suffering or sorrow, to take the philosophic view and acquiesce in the utterances of the great ones quoted above. On the contrary, we often despair and cry out under the hand of affliction or bereavement. And, not infrequently, we see people whose lives and characters have long been exemplary, exhibiting a spirit of rebellion when death has invaded the home and claimed a loved one.

So it is well, since sooner or later we must all confront it, to look at this question when the eye is undimmed by tears and we have a clearer vision. The philosophy of suffering, we cannot understand in the present life. "Now we see through a glass, darkly." We have but fragments of truth; we know the whole of scarcely anything. All the nobler doctrines of Christianity, in their full significance, are beyond the grasp of finite intelligence. The trinity, the fall, the incarnation, the resurrection, the judgment and the life beyond—who can understand them? As Dr. B. M. Palmer, with characteristic eloquence, has said, "The truths of revelation are necessarily transcendental. They raise their heights above the stars, and lose themselves in the vastness of the eternal and divine, and the shadows which they cast upon earth are deeper and darker than reason's flickering ray shall ever illumine."

But while we may not here understand the full significance of suffering or the reason for its existence, there are some reflections concerning it which should benefit us and give us anchorage in the coming storms of life.

In the first place, through suffering we have a knowledge of God which otherwise we could not have had. The physical universe discloses only one class of the divine attributes. It shows the unity, the power, the wisdom, and glory of God; but gives little, if any, glimpse of his moral nature. In all inanimate creation, there is no tongue to tell of the patience, the forbearance, the mercy, and the infinite love of God. These are revealed only in that wonderful scheme of redemption, which began with the promise of the incarnation and culminated in the crucifixion. Not until we see the straying son, do we catch the vision of the seeking Father. It took the Man of Sorrows, the suffering, dying Christ, to show us the rather heart of God and our kinship to the divine.

But suffering has not only brought us knowledge, but it also aids in effecting human salvation. It is a powerful check to sinful indulgence. Most evil practices are attended by painful discomfort. The man who gets drunk at night must pay the penalty the next morning. Loathsome diseases warn the libertine to desist from his sinful course. The man who treads the downward way must do it with pierced and bleeding feet. In it, suffering stands with uplifted whip, severe and keen, to beat him back and start him up the way that leads to God. And, furthermore, suffering aids in the making of the saint. It makes him see the vanity of earthly things and the importance of striving for spiritual attainments. It enriches his experience, broadens his sympathies, refines his sentiments, makes him hunger for the divine companionship, and think of the heavenly home. The holiest Christians are those who have had much sorrow. It is in the school of suffering that we learn most of our Lord and grow to be most like him.

And in addition to blessing man, suffering makes him a blessing. It has given to Christendom many of its mightiest toilers. It was the death of little Florence Crittenden that made her father a flaming evangelist and opened the door of hope to so many fallen women in our cities. It was the decease of Leland Standford, Jr., that erected that great seat of learning which bears his name on the Pacific slope. It was "the white plague" ravaging a frail and fading form that gave to humanity that priceless hymn, "Abide with me." No one can tell what the world owes to Paul's "thorn in the flesh." John's banishment brought that vision of the celestial city which lights the darkest hour and buoys up with hope the millions marching to the tomb. So let us endeavor to endure our suffering with patience and resignation. It is not pleasant to bear, but, under present conditions, it is good for us and for humanity. The way of suffering is the way to perfection. It is the path the Savior trod, and also that white-robed host, "nearest the throne," which no man can number.

China has on the iron boots of modern progress," says a newspaper man in describing the situation in the Oriental Empire. She has 4,000 miles of railway in operation and 5,000 in process of construction. Marvelous, indeed, for "the sleeping giant," which for so long resisted all the innovations of Western enterprise; but it is scarcely a decent beginning when her needs are considered. We have in the United States, approximately, 230,000 miles of railroad, and China's territory is larger than ours. Considering not only her area, but also the density of her population, it is estimated that it would take a million miles of railway to give her adequate service. But having made a start, China will move forward. The uplifting power of the gospel will yet make of her a mighty nation.

CHRIST AND LIFE.

BY REV. W. L. WATKINSON.

For all things are yours * * * life * * * is yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.—1 Cor. iii, 21-23.

"Life is yours," that is, whatever pertains to the inner-consciousness, and whatever in the external world has to do with the development and rejoicing of that consciousness, is part of our great human inheritance. Whatever that great word "life" means of consciousness, joy, energy, liberty, diffusiveness, growth, hope, is ours in Christ.

I. We maintain that life is ours as against the Fatalist. The fatalist, a great figure in the modern world as he was in the ancient, teaches that we are subjects and slaves of time and place, of organization and circumstance. He confidently affirms that we are in bondage to the exterior universe, that we move only in the blind movement of the world of things and forces about us. We serve the external world; the individual exists for the sake of the type, for the sake of the nation, for the sake of the race, and when he has served the social or the scientific end he drops into the limbo of darkness and nothingness. Our personal life is sacrificed to the exigencies of nature and humanity; just as the Egyptian tyrant made slaves of the Israelites, and compelled them to build the pyramids, so we are simply tools in the hands of necessity, building strange structures which at last are sepulchres. Now, in opposition to this, the apostle declares that "Life is ours"—that is, everything which comes within the designation and scope of life, whatever of circumstance, opportunity, excitement, duty, pleasure, fellowship, are for our enrichment and perfecting. All is to serve us in the fullest and highest sense—to bring our nature to a glorious completeness, to secure us a blessed satisfaction. All things are for our sake—work, leisure, friendship, wealth, want, health, sickness, joy, sorrow, all the ten thousand variegated things, relationships, movements, experiences of the changing years. Life is our servant, a servant with a hundred hands, enriching us with measureless gifts and blessings.

But life thus becomes ours only as we live in the power of Christ's truth and grace. Christ liberates us from the bondage of the outside world; this is included in the glorious liberty wherewith Christ makes free. He teaches us that the whole world of circumstance is for the discipline and the enrichment of the redeemed, and he gives us that organic vitality and force by virtue of which we constrain circumstance to the building up of character. Science is man asserting his liberty as against Nature, not surrendering to storm and flood and fire, but subordinating the elements to his personal convenience and aggrandizement. History is man asserting his liberty as against the despotism of climate, situation and material fortune, as against the brute force of society, and in the sovereignty of the soul subordinating whatever happens to the glory and enjoyment of the nation and the race. And so,

Christian life is man asserting his personal liberty as against hereditary influences and current circumstances, and using these in such a way that they build up his character in the full power and beauty of righteousness. Man apart from Christ is too often the manifest creature of circumstance, altogether taking his shape and color from them, and that not the best shape and color—success inflates him; failure crushes him; plenty makes him proud and selfish; want makes him servile; leisure makes him slothful; pressure, fretful and complaining; health makes him shallow; sickness, bitter; darkness makes him blind; and sorrow hinders him a butterfly. But in the knowledge and strength of Christ we are freed from the bondage of circumstance, life becomes ours, and we use the manifold events and circumstances of the outer world towards the attainment of that ideal moral perfection which is the mark of the prize of our high-calling. Amid the multiplied and complicated changes of the outer life we select and reject, accept and resist, suppress and encourage, fight and fly, act or wait so that each day, each hour works in us a deeper inner order and spirit. The grand service of Jesus Christ to us in this matter is, he instructs us how to use the outer life for the inner life, and he so strengthens us that we constantly subordinate the outer life to the training and perfection of that inner life. "Life is yours." You are not the poor vassals of outside forces, you are not sacrificed to the type, you are not insignificant as the coral worm which builds the reef and perishes in the depths; you are free to use the world, and to be served by it in the very largest and grandest sense. The bee does not find honey in every flower, nor the diver a gem in every shell, but in Christ all things are yours, and every emotion within, every action and circumstance without shall strengthen and refine.

II. We maintain that life is ours as against the Pessimist. The pessimist holds that life is not ours at all, it is our foe, our bitter, unrelenting foe—to live is a misfortune; a curse, a woe. Many of our philosophers boldly maintain this view. Life is fundamentally vain and vicious, and it is the curse that makes all other curses possible. In their view it is little matter whether you are rich or poor; life is weeping; the rich man wipes his eyes with a silk handkerchief, the poor man with a cotton handkerchief, and it doesn't much matter. It is little matter in what you spend your life, for at last life is nothing "but buttoning and unbuttoning." It is little matter whether you are wise or ignorant, perhaps it is better to be ignorant, since he who increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow. And many secularists who have not adopted pessimism as a creed have been practical pessimists—they have felt life to be only emptiness, weariness, and despair. Froude writes of Carlyle, "Every day he told me he was weary of life, and spoke wistfully of the old Roman method. Increasing weakness only partly tamed him into patience, or reconciled him to an existence which, even at its best, he had more despised than valued." John S. Mill—speaking of his father, James Mill—writes: "He thought human life a poor thing, at best, after the freshness of youth and of unsatisfied curiosity had gone by. This was a topic on which he did not often speak—especially, it may be supposed, in the presence of young persons; but when he did, it was with an air of settled and profound conviction. He would sometimes say that if life were made what it might be, by good government and good education, it would be worth having; but he never spoke with anything like enthusiasm even of that possibility."

Now, in opposition to this, the text declares that in Christ, "Life is ours." The New Testament everywhere holds human life as a precious thing. Christ says in regard to one man that it would have been better if he had never been born, but he never says this in regard to man as such. He assumed life to be a priceless boon to be carefully watched and nourished and developed to glorious issues. And this was the view of the apostle—they all accept life with gratitude, they never dream of letting it go. According to John, man was born to be born, for he has an abiding and perfect satisfaction. Not that a Christian takes pleasure in the satisfaction in human life. The fact of seeing a man born assured his confidence that the world was made to it were the songs of life fighting and the life of the leaves, and there is a deep, not easy-going optimism which speaks of this world in a similar fashion. But Christianity never makes this mistake—it fully recognizes all the difficulty, suffering and woe of human life. Yet in life of a growing and waiting creature, it maintains that life is the crowning benediction, to be prized by us all, to be held fast with gratitude and wonder and hope. And living in Christ we prove that life is a blessing. Christ makes man to rejoice in life by discovering a great purpose within. The bees have a great urgent purpose, the birds, the butterflies, that consuming purpose makes their life an ecstasy, and if we are to enjoy life we must have a distinct and definite end to live for. Christ discovers that purpose, the grand end of life is the perfection of our immortal spirit, through the love of God and the keeping of his commandments. Here is something to live for. Christ makes men to rejoice in life by putting a great strength into it. "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." Christ makes men to rejoice in life by putting a great love into it. The great curse of life is egotism, selfishness. If our pessimists would only leave their selfish moorings and lay themselves out to help and bless all who are about them as opportunity might serve, it would soon change their philosophy. There is nothing like noble, disinterested work on behalf of suffering humanity to cure morbid brains and fill a man's life with the sense of health and joy and hope. Christ makes men to rejoice in life by putting a great hope into it. For which cause we faint not? My brother, you who are weary of life, feeling it utterly mysterious and impenetrably sad, draw near to Christ. He has the secret of living. As the living Father has sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. Assimilate Christ, drink in his spirit, live upon his great truths, join in his grand work of mercy and help, and you shall rejoice with our poet—

"No more forsaken and forlorn.

I bless the day that I was born."

III. We maintain that life is ours as against the Sensualist. There is an idea that life belongs to the man who lives to the end of self-indulgence—what eats, drinks, and is merry. To see the world of animal indulgence is spoken of as "seeing life." One following a course of license is said to be "fond of life." Such life is called "fast life," "gay life." I can imagine the man of worldly animal indulgence addressing the Christian: "Surely you have some advantage now, you have also great expectations beyond, but surely this life here and now is ours." This, brethren, we altogether deny. Life here and now, ours—it is our inheritance who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. A man who merely lives on the carnal side misses the real depth and fullness of life. You may say that the Greenlanders are alive, and that they enjoy life. He grumbles in his dark hut, lies with his dogs, eats his blubber, drinks his oil, smokes his pipe, sleeps and leaps again. This is life, but what a different thing from the life teeming with sensibility, that knows books, gardens, science, art, the manifold excitements and pleasures of civilized life! And the spiritual life of man goes still beyond. He has faculties that bring the unseen and eternal within the range of his vision. He has spiritual imagination enabling him to know and exult in the infinitely true and beautiful. We are full of yearnings for the unknown, of aspirations and yearnings for the divine. Now, the man who knows not this life, knows not the true life of man—living for meat and drink and raiment, he is dead while he liveth. He is as really out of life in the noblest sense as the coarse Greenlanders. To be carnally minded is death—the death even now of the finer faculties of the living soul.

Christ enables us to realize life in all its ful-ness. The life of the senses is ours in Christ. He is "the Lord of the body," and as we live to him the sensational life becomes ours. The very restraint and moderation which the Christian creed imposes on all material enjoyment only puts us in fuller possession of that enjoyment. We lose our life to find it. Christ leaves us free to expatiate through the whole intellectual world. And most of all, he brings out that divine nature of ours, in which we most truly and gloriously live. He who is most alive to-day, is he whose action is directed by the highest considerations, whose breast is warmest with love, who is full of holy thought, whose heart throbs true to God, whose pulse beats quick and true to man, whose hands are full of gracious work, whose faith and hope, seizing on the glorious future, fill the present moment with power and rapture—this is truly to live, and such is the life of him whose life is hid with Christ in God. Man is full of great capabilities and possibilities, and Christ has a wonderful power of ascertaining these, evoking these, fulfilling these. As the summer shines on the landscape, and brings green leaves out of the barren stems, full flowers from the sleeping bulbs, singing birds from the silent woods, a world of sweet smells and bright colors and rich music, so Christ acts upon human nature, realizing its instincts, its faculties, its powers, making it to blossom as the rose, to stretch its wings like the eagle, to thrill with joyous feeling as the harp with many strings. Our modern poet tells that "more life and fuller" is what we most need. Surely, we find this in Christ. He came that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly, and he who lives in Christ and by Christ feels in the pleasure of the senses, in the glow of the feelings, in the vision of the intellect, in the rapture of the spirit, that life is his. As the New Version puts it, they who live in Christ and live for eternity "lay hold on the life which is life indeed."

IV. We maintain that life is ours against the ascetic. The ascetic is the man within the church who denies to the Christian the pleasures of life; he considers that the more meagre, starved, and sad our life is, the safer and better it is, and the nearer to the true ideal. A gentleman in Manchester told me that he was brought up in Scotland and that when he was a boy he dare not attempt to sing his little joyous hymn on a Sunday; if his friends had heard him he would very likely have been chastised, and as he felt he must sing somewhere, he went into the fields and hills to sing where the birds sang and the brooks made music. The good people felt that anything like joy and gladness was foreign to the sacred day. This is a mistake we often make, and look suspiciously on mirth and holiday. Brethren, let us remember that in Christ "life is ours"—all good things, all bright things, all glad things.

And life shall be ever brighter with us to the perfect day. Amiel spoke of human life as "an apprenticeship to a progressive renunciation." There is a truth undoubtedly in this special view. We are constantly putting off something. As the years go, one renunciation follows another, we are compelled to renounce gifts, pleasures, prospects very dear to us for many reasons, until at last we are bare indeed and altogether disillusioned. But the whole truth is not in this statement. True life implies constant renunciation, but it implies also constant acquisition. We do not so much put away joy and gladness, as we keep changing one joy for a higher, one glory for a fuller, one gift for a more excellent gift. Christ expressed the whole truth when he said, "he that loseth his life shall find it." Christian life often involves self-denial, but every act of renunciation is followed by the acquisition of a strength and treasure, a beauty and blessedness, altogether more deep and precious. He who lives in Christ knows a life full and glad and incorruptible. Oh, brethren! many have old, withered hearts, who have not old faces. The crowfeet, the wrinkles, the dim eyes, the tear tracks, the scars, the stains are within, and such men and women have little freshness or joyfulness in life. Christ can make us all young, and fill our branches with the dew of youth. "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days forever and ever."

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

To the Bishops and Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference:

Dear Brethren—We, your Board of Church Extension, submit the following report:

We have had under our consideration a communication from Dr. W. F. McMurry, the secretary of the General Board, which shows that much progress has been made during the fiscal year 1908-9.

The receipts on the 20th assessment were $148,032.48, an increase of $27,624.56 over the receipts of last year, and the increase in the Loan Fund Capital was $30,433.27, making a total capital at the close of the year of $280,503.28, and the total collected on specials was $8,937.

Increase in Assessment.—By a unanimous vote of the General Board at its annual session in May, 1909, the assessment for church extension was increased from $175,000 to $200,000. The apportionment to our Conference for the ensuing year is $3,000, an increase of $737.

The Washington City Church—Rev. George S. Sexton of Houston, Tex., was elected assistant secretary by the General Board last May, to have charge of the special work of raising funds for that enterprise; hence we ask that our pastors give him a hearty welcome to their respective pulpits should he come their way.

Sunday School Birthday Offerings.—Again we would call your attention to the importance of giving the children a chance to make their birthday offerings to be used in Oklahoma. The birthday glass may be had by writing to the General Office.

Conference Loan Fund.—Following the precedent of the General Board, and acting in harmony with a resolution adopted by the Conference Board, Representatives assembled in Memphis, Tenn., last April, your Board has decided to set apart 25 per cent of the collection of 1910 to be used as a Loan Fund within the bounds of our own Conference, under our direction, but to be administered by the General Board.

Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.—At the annual meeting of the General Board in May, a petition from Rev. Rufus S. Saut, General Secretary of the Church Extension Department of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, was presented and referred to a special committee, which brought in a report suggesting that $15,000 be raised by our church for their relief, said amount being apportioned to the several annual conferences to be raised as they saw proper, our portion being $445. In view of the present financial condition of our Conference, we do not place that as an assessment upon the several districts, but would appreciate any special effort made by the pastors to raise the same.

Church Extension Literature.—We would call your attention to the valuable information in our work contained in the Church Extension Handbook for 1909, and also the Leaflets published in the interest of the work, and would urge you to read and circulate the same.

Meeting of Conference Board Representatives.—The first meeting of the kind was held in Memphis, Tenn., April 27-29, 1909. There were present 120 representatives from 32 annual conferences. The meeting was in every way a success, and it was decided to hold another such meeting next Spring. The Secretary of your Board has been selected as its representative next year.

Revs. W. M. Sullivan, J. D. Ellis, W. W. Moore and Hon. H. S. Stevens have been selected to fill vacancies on the board, subject to the approval of the Conference.

Rev. W. M. Williams has been elected treasurer of the Board for 1910.

Treasurer's Report.

The report of the treasurer for the year 1909 makes the following showing:

Balance from last year, $ 17.81
By cash from collections on assessments 1909, 3579.12

Total, $3596.93

Disbursements as follows:

By cash to W. F. McMurry, General Secretary, $1030.50
By cash to expense account, 65.81
By cash to printing minute, 45.00
By cash donation to churches, 1820.00
By cash to balance in treasury, 35.56

Total, $3876.87

This report shows an increase of $509.93 over last year's contributions, but which is only a fraction over 75 per cent of the assessment.

Applications for Aid.—We have had before our board 18 applications asking for the sum of $4550, but as we had only $4820 for distribution, some of the applications had to be denied altogether, and others only in part.

After careful consideration of each claim before us, we have made the following grants:

East McComb, $200; Union, $150; Prentiss, $100; McCalls, $100; Okemaw, $100; Meadville, $250; Good Hope, $50; Oakdale, $50; Poplar Springs, Meridian, $220; Mendonall, $200; McNeil, conditional, $1000; Greenfield, $25; Bond, $100; Beulah, $25; Lena, $100; Cedar Lake, $50.

Grants from the General Board.—The General Board has aided churches within our Conference this year as follows:

Prentiss, by donation, $100; Long Beach, by loan, $2500; Gulfport, 25th Ave., $2500. The latter loan was declined.

The assessment upon our Conference for the ensuing year is $5000 and has been apportioned as follows:

Brookhaven District, $2000
Hattiesburg District, 738.00
Jackson District, 820.00
Meridian District, 720.00
Newton District, 752.00
Natchez District, 650.00
Seaside District, 750.00
Vicksburg District, 750.00

Again we would urge our preachers not to discriminate against the Church Extension assessment, and that our Presiding Elders give the Church Extension cause a place on the program at their Missionary Institute and District Conferences.

Woman's Home Mission Society.—The report of the Woman's Home Mission Society makes a fine showing. They now have 116 auxiliaries, with 2000 members, with over 200 pledged to tithing.

They have raised for connexional work $2215.00 and for local work $10,300.01, a grand total of $12,515.01.

At the last annual meeting, grants were made to the following parsonages:

Edwards, $50.00
Homewood, 150.00
Magee, 250.00
Eden, 150.00
Vicksburg District Parsonage, 75.00
Gulfport, 25th Ave., 75.00

They have one city missionary employed, Mr. Clara H. Cope, of Meridian.

An effort is being made at Washington to change the date of the presidential inauguration from March to April. The House Committee having the matter in charge has reported unanimously in favor of the proposal. The object aimed at, doubtless, is to secure more favorable weather for the inaugural ceremonies.

Miss Marie Corelli, the well-known authoress, has broken into politics in Great Britain, and issued an address to the voters of the United Kingdom. She denounced socialism and pleaded for the maintenance of the long-established order. Like some of our American young ladies, she evidently has a kindly feeling for the titled nobility.

Mrs. Russell Sage presented Yale University with a New Year present of $650,000. It is said that one of her ancestors was once president of the institution. It is certainly true that the rich colleges of the country are steadily growing richer. There is a sort of force of gravity about aggregated wealth which attracts additional money to it.

New York City was visited on last Saturday by a snow storm that was second only to the blizzard of 1899. The total fall of snow was fourteen and one-half inches. Nine lives were lost and six persons injured as a result of the blizzard, and it took 18,000 men at an approximate cost of $800,000 to clear the streets of Gotham of the white mantle.

It is estimated that the cost of living within the past thirteen years has increased 56 per cent, and it is stated that most of this increment has come within the last six years. The men who suffer most from this are those who earn salaries. Especially do ministers feel it appreciably, with nothing to rely upon except their inadequate stipends. Our congregations should do their utmost to provide a better support for their pastors.

The George Washington Memorial Association has conceived the idea of raising $2,000,000 to construct a fitting memorial to the first and greatest president of the Republic. Washington City is the place selected for it, and the plan proposed is to build a splendid public hall, where learned and patriotic bodies may convene without expense to themselves. It is thought that the prospect of securing the money needed is encouraging.

For some time Missouri has been called the "Show-Me-State." Thinking this nickname lacking in elegance, Governor Hadley recently issued a public proclamation calling on the citizens of the commonwealth to suggest a new and more fitting one; but, to his surprise, he received a perfect avalanche of letters protesting against any change. So he has had to beat a retreat and leave the matter alone. This is not the first time that a name given in fun or derision has been caught up and made to apply permanently.

A considerable amount of immigration from the United States to Canada is going on. The Government records show that nearly 10,000 heads of families, representing a population of 40,000, last year entered homesteads in the Dominion. This does not include those who made private acquisitions of property. What ultimate effect this inrush of people from the United States will have, time alone can tell. It may be that in the course of decades the flag of the Stars and Stripes will wave over the whole North American continent.

There is talk of a censorship of books in Great Britain, the plan being to inspect the manuscripts of publishing houses and stop the printing of those which would exert an immoral influence. There is said to be great opposition to the proposal, but we are not sure that such supervision would not conduce to the public good. It would smack somewhat of paternalism, but as civilization becomes more complex, the governments of the world are finding it more frequently necessary to assert their powers for the protection of the people.

Mr. Dwight Lathrop Elmendorf, who is connected with the exploratory work which, for some years, has been going on in Egypt, has recently made an earnest appeal for funds. He emphasizes the fact that with the construction of the great Nile dam at Assouan, several of the richest sites for investigation will be submerged and the opportunity to explore them gone. This movement began in England in 1883, and was extended to the United States the year following. Many important discoveries bearing upon ancient history have been made, and fifty-six volumes setting forth the information gained have been published.

There is talk of the Federal Government lending a hand to promote the construction of better public roads. A bill looking to that end, and carrying an appropriation, has been introduced in Congress. Presumably, it is designed that the work shall be carried on under the direction of the Postoffice Department. The Constitution of the United States delegates to Congress the power "to establish postoffices and postroads," but it is not probable that the framers of that immortal instrument ever dreamed of the Federal Government embarking upon a general policy of building public highways. But we live in a day of liberal construction.

The Federal income tax on corporations became operative on the first of January. Several days ago suit was filed in the United States Circuit Court at Cleveland, Ohio, by a stockholder of the American Multigraph Company to enjoin the officers of the company from paying the tax. Simultaneously, another case was filed in the United States Circuit Court at Chicago, where a stockholder of the Northern Trust Company prayed for an injunction restraining its directors from paying the tax. Both suits were brought to test the constitutionality of the law, it being held that the tax is a direct one, and inter-

It is given out in the press reports that the Pope of Rome is persisting in his efforts to establish diplomatic relations with our Government. Though many times kindly rebuffed, through his agents, he warily keeps up the suit for recognition. With his temporal power waning and well-nigh gone in Europe, he hopes to retrieve the situation to some extent by maintaining at least an appearance of governmental authority in America. But this dream of Pius is destined never to be realized. Our adroit politicians will flirt with him in election times when they want the Catholic vote, but they will dare to go no further. This is a Protestant nation, and public sentiment is too strong to tolerate the interference of the Vatican in our national affairs.

According to Frank G. Carpenter, China has become a land of newspapers. Within the past three or four years 400 periodicals have been established, and half that number of dailies are now coming out in the different cities. Peking has twenty-one daily publications; Shanghai, eight; Hong Kong, five; Canton also has some, and there is a yellow journal appearing on the borders of Thibet. Says Mr. Carpenter, "The only woman's daily in Asia, if not in the world, is issued in Peking. Its editor is a Chinese girl belonging to a well-to-do family." This establishment of the press in the great Oriental Empire means that there is to be more enlightenment, a wider diffusion of knowledge, and let us hope that it also means a more speedy coming of the kingdom of God to the hundreds of millions of the yellow race.

The Louisiana Board of Agriculture has submitted its report covering the farming operations of the past year. The figures are as follows: In cultivation, 3,500,000 acres; yield, 266,023 bales of cotton; 30,745,000 bushels of corn; 664,668,000 pounds of sugar; 436,000 barrels of molasses; 42,000 barrels of syrup; 465,000,000 pounds of rice; 3,572,000 bushels of sweet potatoes; 1,338,000 bushels of Irish potatoes; 66,000 bushels of peanuts; 141,700 boxes of oranges; and 640,000 bushels of oats. The cotton crop is only about one-third of the average, but the showing in other things is very good. Particularly gratifying is the report from some sections of the boll weevil district. Monroe, for instance, reports an increase of $200,000 in bank deposits, and collections as very satisfactory. This proves that, with diversified farming, prosperity is possible in spite of the depredations of the Mexican pest.

Church News

The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago received a Christmas present of $100.000 from Mr. Victor F. Lawson, owner of the Daily News, of that city.

Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, delivered a lecture at the Goodwyn Institute in Memphis, on Friday night, the 15th inst. His theme was "The Cross, or Crescent, or Life in Turkey."

Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the New York Christian Advocate, is the new president of the General Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His predecessor was the lamented Bishop Goodsell.

Dr. John M. Moore, formerly connected with the Nashville Christian Advocate, but now pastor of St. John's Church, in St. Louis, will edit the Daily Advocate during the session of the General Conference at Asheville.

The founder of the United Brethren Church has had his name incorporated into the Sunday School literature of that organization by his followers. They now have "The Otterbein Bible Teacher," "The Otterbein Quarterly," etc.

In a letter to our Book Agents at Nashville, Bishop John H. Vincent highly compliments our Sunday School literature. It is receiving praise from every quarter and well deserves it. It appears to us to be not far from perfection.

Doctor Winton advocates gathering up the seals of our deceased Bishops and keeping them in a secure case at the Publishing House. This is a wise suggestion. We need to be more careful in preserving the historic in Methodism.

The Commission for revising the Ritual met in Nashville on Jan. 3 and 4, to complete its report to the General Conference. Its members are Bishop E. E. Hoss, Drs. H. N. Snyder, E. W. Alderson, W. J. Young, and E. B. Chappell.

Texas is the largest State in the Union, having 246 counties. There are five Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Lone Star State, with 250,000 communicants, which is about one-seventh of the membership of Southern Methodism.

The Baptists of Mississippi, Tennessee, and Arkansas are making commendable progress with their tri-state hospital, which is to be located in Memphis. They are a working folk, and deserve the success which seems to be crowning their efforts.

The Methodists of Texas are undertaking to raise $100,000 endowment for the theological department of the Southwestern University in honor of Bishop Ward. This work was much on the Bishop's heart, and the raising of this fund will be but the completion of a task which he had laid out for himself.

The Roman Catholics claim that they received 28,709 accessions from the Protestant churches of the United States last year. How many they lost to them is not known, but we dare say it was an equal or larger number. It is not her proselytism, but foreign emigration that gives the Romish Church her growth in America.

Arrangements have been made to hold a convention of the Laymen's Movement at Montgomery, Alabama, February 4 to 6. The list of speakers for this series of meetings is a remarkable one, and includes prominent men of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Methodist churches. Dr. L. A. Rice, of Rayne, General Methodist Church, New Orleans, will address the meeting on "The Reflex Influence of Missions," and Dr. Beverly Warner, pastor of Trinity Episcopal Church, this city, will speak on "The Stewardship of Life."

The Sixth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement assembled at Rochester, N. Y., and continued through Jan. 2. Seven hundred and twenty-two colleges were represented and 3907 undergraduates and faculty delegates were present. Mr. John R. Mott, the president, announced that since the session at Nashville four years ago, 1275 Volunteers have actually been sent to the field. The reports of the recent meeting indicate that it was a most extraordinary occasion. Spiritual fervor was at high tide, and many of the addresses were of unusual power. We consider this religious and missionary awakening in the colleges of America as perhaps the most significant feature of our time. It is Christ laying his hand upon the intelligent young life of the western world, and using it for the furtherance of his kingdom.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN A. B. JONES.

Dear Brother Meek: Brother John A. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, died here last night about 12:30 o'clock. After some hours of restlessness, he lay down and fell asleep. When twenty minutes later, his brother-in-law, Mr. Millsaps, bent over him, he was dead; his eyes peacefully closed in his last slumber.

This afternoon, in our Church here, the funeral services were held, participated in by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Dr. L. W. Cooper, Dr. Laird, of the local Presbyterian Church; Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. W. M. Sullivan, Rev. Dan Scarborough, Rev. J. W. Sandell, and the writer.

The burial will take place on Friday at noon, at Port Gibson, where he will rest by the side of his father and mother, Rev. and Sister John G. Jones, of sacred memory.

A more extended notice will be sent you by some one later. H. B. WATKINS.

There was paid for domestic missions, $296,771—a gain of $10,823; for foreign mission, $369,720—a loss of $4,171; Church Extension, $160,000—a gain of $12,380; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, $230,716—a gain of $26,654; Woman's Home Mission Society, $572,085—a gain of $96,041.

Epworth League members, 141,928—a gain of 3,386.

The Southern Methodist Handbook for 1910 will be out in a few days. This being General Conference year, and the year closing the first decade of the century, the Handbook will be of unusual interest and value. There will be much matter pertaining to the General Conference. It will contain the only list of delegates with post-office address. There will be a number of fine views of points at and around Asheville. The review of Southern Methodism for the decade will be a most interesting and useful summary. All in all, the 1910 Handbook will far surpass in fullness and merit any of its predecessors. — Raleigh Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS LAYMEN'S MEETING.

Several hundred laymen of the Protestant Churches of the city are preparing for the Laymen's Missionary Conference, which will be held here Feb. 12-15. New Orleans is one of seventy-five which has been selected for these meetings. The meeting here will be opened with a banquet in one of the hotels or restaurants, and it is thought that there will be 500 to take part in it.

Sunday there will be rallies in the churches, and Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 14 and 15, will be the meeting days of the Conference, with sessions morning, afternoon and night. These meetings will probably be held at the Athenaeum.

Among the many prominent speakers the following are expected to be present: W. Campbell White, of New York; Samuel B. Capers, of Boston; Dr. A. P. Parker, of China; Dr. W. H. Park, medical missionary to China; William Ellis, of the Philadelphia Ledger; William R. Hotchkiss, of British East Africa; Dr. W. B. Pinson, of Nashville, and Bishop David Sessums, of Louisiana. An effort is also being made to secure the attendance of Ambassador James Bryce, of Great Britain.

The president of the movement in New Orleans is Judge W. B. Sommerville; secretary, C. H. Wasson; chairman of the co-operating and executive committee, Warren Kearny; chairman of finances, A. Brittin. The headquarters of the local movement are at 204 Camp Street. Dr. George Summey is executive secretary.

MAKE IT FIVE HUNDRED.

We have passed the $400 mark in actual cash on Assessment No. 1, of the Ministers' Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference. There are twenty-four names presented for membership which have no credit for the first assessment. If these would pay the $5 now due, we would have $539 as a benefit fund. Let us make it $500 right away.

Send amounts at earliest convenience and remember that you are to pay 25 cents initiation fee and 25 cents annual dues. Twelve of those whose names are held for membership have paid 50 cents dues.

SENATOR A. J. McLAURIN.

Anselm Joseph McLaurin was born March 20, 1848, in the town of Brandon, Rankin County, Miss., from which place he entered into rest December 22, 1907, in the sixty-first year of his age.

The immediate cause of his death was apoplexy, and the end came quickly as he sat in his chair at home, laughing and talking with the members of his family.

His funeral took place December 24, services being conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. F. Emery, in the Brandon Methodist Church, of which he had been for many years a consistent member, and in which he held the official relation of steward and trustee at the time of his death.

The building would not hold the audience, many prominent people coming from a great distance to do honor to his memory.

His body was laid away in the family burial-ground in Brandon, beside the bodies of other loved ones who had preceded him.

Thus within the short space of six months the State of Mississippi has been called upon to mourn the death of her two most distinguished sons; both of whom were native-born, both of whom attained nearly the same age, both of whose bodies rest beneath the soil of the State which they loved so devotedly and to whose service were given the best years of their lives.

A striking parallelism lies between the lives of Bishop Charles Betts Galloway and United States Senator Anselm Joseph McLaurin.

Perhaps the death of no other citizen has produced a more profound impression upon the State at large than did the death of Bishop Galloway.

All classes of citizens, regardless of race, social condition or ecclesiastical affiliation, united in a common grief. If the reason be asked, it will be found, not in his intellectual superiority, his matchless eloquence, nor in his official relation as a Bishop of a great Church; but it will be found in the breadth of his genius, his superb patriotism, and the catholicity of his love for his fellow-men, which recognized no racial bounds.

The same may be said with equal truth of Mississippi's other great son. The all-wise Creator richly endowed both these men with gifts and graces which made them leaders among men.

Like King Saul, they towered in stature above other men, their majestic bearing commanding attention. Modest, they yet possessed that self-confidence so necessary to success in the battles of life. Both men had the vision of statesmen, and both were Christian patriots.

The childhood and young manhood of Senator McLaurin were spent on a farm in Smith county, where his parents moved from Brandon in his infancy.

The eldest of eight brothers, three of whom survive him, he grew to manhood inured to a simple country life.

Some one has well said that it makes no difference if a man is born in the pine woods; but it makes a vast difference if the pine woods are born in him.

No narrow environment could fetter the genius of A. J. McLaurin. Though he climbed round after round of the ladder of fame, no height could turn his head, and he often proudly boasted that his hands possessed the cunning to plow a straight furrow and to drive a yoke of oxen.

He was essentially a man of the people. Like his divine Master, he loved men. No wonder that they, in turn, loved him. He had a kindly feeling for the lowliest, and has more than once remarked to me, "I never pass a negro without speaking to him."

At the age of sixteen he joined the Confederate Army, enlisting in August, 1864, and served as a private soldier in the Third Mississippi Cavalry. At the close of the war he attended Sumnersville institute, in Noxubee county. Later he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He practiced his profession at Raleigh, in Smith county, until March, 1876, when he moved to Brandon, where he has since resided. In 1879 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in 1888 was presidential elector for the State-at-large. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1890, at a time when wise leadership was needed to rid the State of the grave perils following the dark period of reconstruction. It was then that a few master minds like his evolved those principles which have proven a veritable Magna Charta to the white people, not only of Mississippi, but of our entire Southland; for they have since been copied into the constitutions of nearly all of the other Southern States.

When a vacancy was left in the United States Senate by the death of Hon. E. C. Walthall, he was elected to succeed him, and the mantle could not have fallen upon more worthy shoulders. So fully did he meet the expectations of the people, that soon thereafter he was elected Governor, and, after four years of incumbency in that office, he was again sent to the Senate. Later he was re-elected for the term beginning March 4, 1907, and, had he lived, would doubtless have been his own successor.

In addition to his being a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he was a Royal Arch Mason, a Knight of Honor and a Woodman of the World.

He was married at Trenton, Miss., February 22, 1870, to Miss Laura Elvira Victoria Ranch. Ten children were born to them, seven of whom are living; namely: Mrs. Stella Berry, Mrs. Delta McLaurin, Mrs. Daisy Stephens, Mrs. Irene Catherine Pate, Anselm Joseph McLaurin, Miss Jean Wallace McLaurin, Mrs. Laura Ranch Watts.

As his pastor for three years, I have enjoyed the friendship and confidence of Senator McLaurin. It has been my fortune to conduct the funeral service over three of his brothers, and to unite in marriage two of his daughters. Thus, in a measure, I have been permitted to look into the deep recesses of his soul. He was a man of God in the best and truest sense of the term.

He loved to read the Bible. No man could have been more attentive during the preaching of the Word. He loved to talk about religion, never argumentatively, but as a theme in which he took delight; and he accepted the truths of the Gospel with the simple faith of a little child.

In the hours of his sore bereavement, time and again, he proclaimed his abiding faith in the inscrutable providence of God.

I reached the stricken home a few minutes after his great soul had taken its departure. Before loving hands began to prepare the body for burial, his saintly wife, together with her children, requested the pastor to lead in prayer. Surely, the Father of all mercies will regard such faith as that! His tender, loving hand will wipe away their tears, and the blessed Creator will console them with an infinite hope.

It has often been said of Senator McLaurin that "he never lost a battle." If that be true as concerns his successes professionally and politically, I am sure that it is equally true as regard his spiritual welfare. He loved his Master and trusted him for salvation, he loved the church, of which he was a liberal supporter, and with a peculiar love he loved the people of God.

If he had known that his last day on earth was at hand, he could have scarcely lived it to better purpose. In the morning when he awoke, he quoted passage after passage of Scripture as he lay in bed. His wife was up and happily singing some of her favorite hymns. At her request, he repeated the first Psalm. During the day he was at his office attending to his business. To his friends, he remarked that he felt better than he had for many days. During the day a poor man who owed him nearly one hundred dollars came to him with a plea of poverty, and this noble man freely forgave the debt and bade him go home and enjoy Christmas with his family. At the close of the day he went home, and while sitting chatting pleasantly with his loved ones, God called him.

May he not have appropriated to himself the words of the great Apostle: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

In the realm of the West he awaits the coming of the loved ones left behind. May the family reunion be unbroken.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," Vol. 57, No. 1, January 6, 1910.

The above title, date, and numbers awaken reflection on the past and thoughts for the future of our beloved church paper.

Think of 59 years of weekly visitations to thousands of homes in Louisiana and Mississippi and elsewhere, bearing as editors such names as Holland N. McVie, John C. Keener, Louis Parker and Charles B. Galloway, who became Bishops in the Church, and of C. W. Carter, W. C. Black and J. W. Boswell, able and worthy men.

These all wrought well, their works abide and their names are held in affectionate memory.

And now comes the new editor, Rev. Robert A. Meek, with his "Salutatory," which I am sure every one who reads it will join in saying, "It has the right ring."

It deserves to be read and reread until both the sentiment and spirit thereof are imbibed by every one who feels concerned for his church paper and for what it represents, and until there is a fixed purpose for co-operation, as modestly requested. As a token of responsiveness and of the sincerity of resolutions adopted by the recent annual conference, there should be made with the opening of the new year, in every pastoral charge, energetic effort to increase the circulation of the Advocate.

Surely at the very low rates of subscription offered by the publisher, and with the large increase of church membership, and in view of the coming General Conference, there ought to be thousands of readers added to the list for 1910.

To this end let there be prompt, unflinching and vigorous work, specially during the first quarter of the year.

May the Lord bless the editor, publisher, printers and readers of the Advocate.

A LIVING HOPE.

I like the sweet, old-fashioned phrase
"A living hope in Christ."
How many saints of elder days
To God so truly sufficed!

"A living hope"—why, then, it breathes
And in hushed, kindly speech
With every song its life enweaves
With courage dares to teach.

"A living hope"—why, then, it walks
With steady step and swift
Where legions crouch and evil stalks
And brings the needed gift.

"A living hope"—it labors then,
It laughs and prying it
It lifts the life of earthly men,
It lives—and never dies.

—Inez R. Wells.

PURITY OF SPEECH.

Purity of speech means something more than the omission of vulgar phrases that ought not to be used by any self-respecting person. A young girl should carefully avoid falling into slangy or careless modes of speech. You can shut your eyes and tell whether the woman next to you is a lady or should I say, a gentleman? by listening to her conversation. There has been in recent years a reaction against the word "lady," because it has often been misapplied. There is really no reason why we should not use it in describing an attractive, polite and agreeable woman.

A charming writer has given the definition of lady as woman in a high state of civilization. I am sure you prefer to be considered highly civilized to being thought "savage and barbarous." When a girl says, "Gee whizz!" it was something fierce, or "You're up against it," you need nothing more to convince you that she is not altogether a lady. She may be a good-hearted, well-meaning girl, but, friends, she proclaims to the universe that she is common.

Nobody wants to be stampped as common. To say to anyone that she is kind-hearted, good-natured, willing to serve a friend, and that she honestly pays her way, is to say that she is a respectable member of society, but to add to this that she is common and ordinary, is to indicate a fatal defect.

Purity of speech requires the omission of slang and silly, frivolous phrases. The latter, while perhaps not of a low, are often not refined, and show that one's associations have been with ill-bred persons.

To think before you speak is an excellent rule. You should make up your mind once for all to use only grammatical words and phrases to represent the thing you mean to say. Never say, "hain't ought," or "ain't," or use a singular verb with a plural noun.

Most girls have gone through the grammar school, if not further, and they have been taught what is right and what is wrong in framing sentences in English.

Vocabulary is another matter.

We acquire a good stock of words for daily use, a working vocabulary, that is, partly by our own pains and care, and partly by listening to others who use good language, and partly by every day reading a few pages in a book that is worth attention.

No matter how busy one is, he should try to keep one good book on hand and read it through page by page, although to do so may occupy several weeks. More than most people think, they enrich their vocabulary by regularly attending church services. The habit of listening to sermons does more for you than its first object, which is to lift the mind into an atmosphere of devotion.

Let us, little by little, to your treasury of beautiful and well-chosen words.—New York Evening Telegram.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY'S WORDS TO BOYS.

Our country is one in which there is entire freedom of speech. The newspapers discuss not only the public actions of our officials, but picture their private life and their individual failings with a completeness of detail known in no other land. In the main, this newspaper criticism is doubtless a wholesome influence in our political life. But at times so much has been said of the shortcomings of our public men that many readers lose sight of their faithful service, and come to suspect the motives of all men in office.

When I resigned my Government post under Mr. McKinley, the President, he said a word of good-bye to me, spoke of his interest in the boys of the United States, and of his wish that they might have a high appreciation of a life spent in their country's service.

Some years ago, he remarked, I had an experience with a boy of eighteen which made a deep impression upon me. I was in Congress at the time, and under the operation of the law an appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis was at my disposal. I was anxious to send a good representative, and looked about the district for a bright, capable boy, ambitious for a naval career.

None of the candidates seemed promising, and I finally decided to submit the choice of a cadet to a competitive examination. A day or two after this announcement had been made and a date set for the examination I received a visit from a boy who desired the appointment.

He was an alert, active, fine-looking fellow, who at once won my heart, and as he seemed most eager for the appointment and excellently qualified for the life, I sincerely regretted that I had not met him earlier, so that I might have given him the appointment outright. As it was, I urged him to enter the examination, and felt sure that with his fine preparation he would have no difficulty in winning the place.

A few days later I received a letter from the young man stating that he felt he would be most unhappy if he failed of the appointment, and requesting me to withdraw the announcement of the public examination and appoint him without competition. Inclosed in this letter was a check for several thousand dollars, drawn on a New York bank to my order.

"Never," said the President, "in all my public life have I suffered a moment of such humiliation as the reading of this letter cost me."

When I felt that I could speak calmly, I sent for the boy, gave back to him his letter and his check, and explained that my relations with him were at an end.

"And now," said I, "let me ask you one question: What have you known of my life, public or private, and what have you known of other men in office, which could make you at your age, imagine that a Congressman of the United States would accept a bribe?"

"I was profoundly moved," said the boy, "I was deeply affected, perhaps more by my manner than my question. And his words explained that he had desired a place in the navy beyond all other things, that he had read in some paper that all Congressmen accepted money for such appointments, and that he had consulted a politician in the neighboring village, who assured him that the payment of such a sum as he had tendered would secure the appointment he sought."

"I sent the boy away," said the President, "with such words as I thought might minister to his self-respect, and might give him correct ideas of his relations with honest men. But the experience has ever since left a sore spot in my heart. I had never before realized how a bad man and a careless newspaper could pervert the ideas of a boy's mind."

"God knows," there is enough of selfishness and of greed in public life, as in all our human relations. But I wish there were some way in which boys in their school days might be shown that these qualities are stumbling-blocks, not stepping-stones, in the way to political success. I would have our boys taught that to serve the government faithfully is one of the noblest of callings. I would like to see them led to some better appreciation of the service of good men in public life, and I would keep before their minds the fact that dishonesty and trickery work out the same consequences in political life, upon those who use them, which their practice brings in any other calling. I would have the boys of this country know that its public men are honest men, and that they have high ideals and noble ends in view.

The man who spoke these words will never speak again. In his death he has drawn to him, in larger measure than any other American of his generation, the love and the confidence of his fellow-countrymen. It would be fortunate indeed for our future if these words of his to the boys of America might be heard by them and received in the spirit of him who spoke them.—Century's Companion.

THE NAME OF THE CHURCH.

The question of changing the name of the Church is now being generally discussed throughout Southern Methodism. The trend of sentiment seems to be generally against it, though there are some who are earnestly pleading for it. The demand for alteration comes chiefly from those in the West and along our Northern border. They imagine that the word "South" is a hindrance to their success, and that with that stricken out they could make more progress in reaching and enlisting the people.

The merit of this plea depends upon what the future policy of the Church is to be. If it be our purpose to invade other sections and undertake to plant our branch of Methodism generally throughout the Republic, then, manifestly, we should not have a name of limited geographical significance. The word "South" attached to the name of a Church existing to any considerable extent in the North would unquestionably be inappropriate.

But if, on the other hand, we adopt the policy of confining our operations in the United States chiefly to the South and Southwest, there is no show of reason for changing the name of our denomination. And we do not hesitate to say that we think the latter course is the one which should be pursued. There is too much to be done in our own section, and in foreign lands, for us to waste our strength in trying to reach people who are naturally inclined to be hostile to us and who can be better served by other denominations. It takes more than a building to make a church. A great structure in a great city (built by money brought from a distance), with only a handful of worshipers, presents a spectacle little less than pathetic. A rich people in the home land, who are not enough interested to build their own houses of worship, will not be won by having churches constructed for them. Our view is that our Church should operate throughout the entire South from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and let other parts of the Union alone, save in exceptional instances. And in doing this, we should retain as a part of our name the word "South," which is both honorable and distinctive. If our Northern brethren would practice a little of the fraternity which they are so given to preaching and stop trying to make new invasions of our territory, the Methodists of the South would be less disposed to carry their banners across Mason and Dixon's line. There ought to be some understanding between the two Episcopal Methodisms in America concerning the sphere of their operations.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

It is most gratifying to be informed that this historic college is having a profitable session. Its president, Doctor W. L. Weber, is one of the most capable educators in the South; and he has associated with him a competent and energetic faculty. From its present position of vantage, the outlook for the institution is considered highly encouraging. Its proper maintenance and enlargement mean much to the future of Louisiana Methodism. From its halls must largely come the young men who are to fill its pulpits and carry forward its various interests. Dr. Weber has requested us to announce that the second term for the current year will begin Feb. 2, 1910. Young men planning to enter should take note of this, as it is the proper time for the matriculation of new students. The atmosphere at Centenary is thoroughly Christian and Methodist, and our people in the State and territory contiguous will find no better place to educate their sons.

A BLESSING TO ALL.

Dr. Oscar Haywood, formerly of Mississippi and Tennessee, but now of somewhere in the North, recently made a tour through the South, and, in discussing his observations made during the trip, is said to have affirmed that the negro alone is being benefited by prohibition in this section. We do not know whether the Doctor has been correctly quoted; but, if he has, his insight into the situation in the South was extremely superficial. It is true that whiskey has long been the black man's curse, and that the striking down of the saloon has been to him an incalculable blessing. It has lessened his inclination to crime, and made of him a more thifty laborer.

But its good effects have not been confined to a single race. It has also been of immeasurable benefit to the white man. Many given to strong drink have become sober, and scores who were affected adversely by the blighting influence of the saloon have become better and more useful men. The fact is, prohibition helps every worthy institution and cause. It blesses the home, improves business, purifies politics, clarifies the moral atmosphere, strengthens the churches, and gives to the State a more dependable and patriotic citizenship. Not even the saloon-keeper, himself, escapes its benign and uplifting influence, for not a few of them enter the avenues of legitimate business and acquire a creditable standing in society. Dr. Haywood needs to come again, stay longer and examine more carefully into the situation in the South. If he will do so, we venture the assertion that he will not again give out an utterance which the liquor journals will parade with flaming headlines in their columns.

NO CONFLICT.

"Bear ye one another's burden." "For every man shall bear his own burden." There is seemingly a contradiction in these two statements of Paul standing close together in his Epistle to the Galatians. But in reality there is no conflict. The more exact language of the Greeks discloses the fact that the Apostle used two different words where the English has only one. In the first instance, he used the word "bare," and, in the second, "phortion," showing clearly that he meant two different things. There are loads of sorrow, disaster, and even of certain kinds of responsibility we may help one another bear, but the burden of accountability to God which springs from man's free moral agency no one can share with him. That tremendous weight must be borne alone. Each individual has his eternal destiny in his own hands, and must answer wholly for himself before the judgment throne.

REV. J. N. WARE DEAD.

Just as the Advocate is about to go to press, the dispatches announce the death of Rev. J. N. Ware, of the Mississippi Conference, which occurred at Waynesboro on the 17th inst. For some days he had been critically ill with pneumonia, and his decease was not unexpected.

Brother Ware was widely known throughout central and south Mississippi, having for a number of years been one of the most active and useful members of his Conference. He was superannuated about ten years ago on account of failing health and ever since has sustained that relation. The interment took place at Waynesboro. We hope that some friend will furnish us a more extended account of the life and services of the deceased for our next issue. May divine grace be vouchsafed to the stricken family!

A VETERAN TRANSLATED.

In another column we publish a communication from Rev. H. B. Watkins, of Magnolia, announcing the death of Rev. John A. B. Jones, which occurred at that place on Jan. 13. For some time he had been in feeble health, but his end was sudden and unexpected. Having been somewhat restless, he retired late, hoping, doubtless, to secure refreshing sleep, but he had scarcely lain down before the death angel came.

Brother Jones has left behind a long and shining record. He was one of the oldest members of the Mississippi Conference, lacking but little of having attained to his seventy-ninth year, and for more than half a century had carried the credentials of a Methodist preacher. In the course of his long ministry, he filled many of the most responsible places in his Conference, and in every field wrought worthily for the Master. He ceased to be active in the work in 1904, and since that time has held a superannuate relation. At the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, when his name was called, he made a talk which thrilled the entire body, and a summary of which was published in a recent issue of the Advocate. But the veteran's course is finished, and he has passed to his bright reward. From the Church Militant, he has ascended to the Church Triumphant, there evermore to adore and praise the risen and reigning Lord. To the stricken ones, whose hearts are bleeding, we extend deepest sympathy, and pray that the Heavenly Father may comfort and sustain them.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. M. Sullivan is in his third year at McComb City, and the outlook in his field is highly encouraging. We thank him for an invitation to visit his charge, which we hope to do in the not far future.

Rev. O. W. Bradley is fast winning his way into the hearts of the people at Holly Springs, Miss. He is a favorite everywhere, and so is Mrs. Bradley. Together, they are equal to almost any task in the pastorate.

Rev. J. A. Alford, lately transferred from the Mississippi to the Louisiana Conference, and stationed at Selma, has reached his new field and is pleased with the situation. A kindly reception has been accorded him.

Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of our Church at Franklin, La., spent one day last week in New Orleans, and honored the Advocate office with a visit. Brother Wier is enjoying good health, and speaks in high terms of his work.

Rev. R. A. Jones, of Dothan, Alabama, requests us to state that he would be pleased to assist in revival work in Mississippi and Louisiana. He has had experience in conducting evangelistic services, and desires opportunity to aid in extending the Master's kingdom.

The work moves on smoothly at Zwolle, La., under the guiding hand of Rev. J. C. Price, who is faithful in caring for all the interests of the church. The Conference Organ comes in for its proper share of attention, for which we make grateful acknowledgment.

Rev. W. W. Perry, of Terry, Miss., is one of the Advocate's substantial friends. He secured thirty-five subscribers last year, and hopes to hold them and enlarge the number this year. His work in his charge has opened favorably, and the prospect is gratifying.

Rev. Walter G. Harbin has just closed a very successful revival in the Mary Werlein Mission in this city. There were quite a number of additions to the church and new life was imparted to the revival work, which needs to be continuous in a church situated as it is.

In a personal communication, Rev. W. M. Young, presiding elder of the Sardis District, says: "The preachers associated with me in the work have begun well, and there is promise of a great year." They are a choice band, and it is their habit to make a fine record.

We learn from a friend in Aberdeen that Rev. J. R. Countiss has been warmly welcomed to that city and that every indication points to a successful pastorate. "Cultured, capable and attentive to his work, he is one of the most acceptable preachers in the North Mississippi Conference."

Rev. N. E. Joyner, superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, this city, called at the sanctum a few days since, but the editor was out. He regrets having missed him. The brethren speak in the highest terms of Brother Joyner's activity in behalf of the important work committed to his hands.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of the Mississippi Conference, has arrived at Hernandeville, the new charge to which Bishop Hoss assigned him, and is pleasantly situated. He has already gone energetically to work and sees the promise of success. We are grateful for his brotherly New Year's greeting.

The Tupelo (Miss.) Methodist Church will support its own missionary. By selection of Dr. Lambuth, young Mr. Fryer, who is connected with the Anglo-Chinese College, Shanghai, will represent that congregation abroad. We applaud this forward movement. The activity of our former parishioners in all good works greatly delights us.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, Miss., in sending a list of subscribers, writes: "Fifty-seven New Orleans Advocates are taken in First Church, but we want to increase the number to a hundred." That he will succeed in doing so, we do not doubt. He always succeeds. Moreover, Columbus, the prettiest town in the South, never does things by halves.

Mrs. W. L. Weber, writing under date of the 10th inst., says: "Mr. Weber is in the sanitarium as a result of a surgical operation and is quite sick, though improving slowly. His mind is constantly on the college." The many friends of Dr. Weber will be glad to know that he is growing better, but will not cease to feel solicitous until he has fully recovered.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell is happy in his new field at Bay St. Louis, Miss. Elect ladies met him and his family at the train in automobiles and escorted them to the residence of Congressman E. J. Bowers, which they will occupy until the parsonage is remodeled. A bountiful supply of everything needed was provided and every possible kindness shown. The Progress, of that city, states that the new pastor has made a fine impression.

The Advocate is the servant of every Methodist in Mississippi and Louisiana, but it has an especial appreciation of its friends. Among these, we are pleased to enroll the name of Mr. J. T. Otts, of Homer, La., who, a few days since, enclosed us a list of seventeen subscribers, and ended his letter with best wishes for our new editor and the dear old Advocate. "Thank you, brother, and may the blessings of heaven fall upon your path!"

At the late session of the North Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. A. Hall, of Winona, was elected president of the Conference Board of Missions, in place of the Rev. W. W. Woollard, who resigned. This important work has fallen into competent hands, and will be wisely directed under the new leader. The brethren having business to transact with this Board will need to note this change in the presidency in conducting their correspondence.

Dr. G. Morgan, of Woodside, La., in a letter to the Advocate states that Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, of the Simsport Charge, has been ill with nervous prostration ever since the last session of the Louisiana Conference, and that his condition is now serious, with a probability of him having to give up his work for at least a year. We extend sympathy to our brother in his affliction, and pray that his restoration to health may be more speedy than is expected.

The Church in Algiers is exhibiting commendable activity under the efficient administration of the present pastor, Rev. J. F. Foster. All departments of the work are well organized and the attendance upon public worship is increasing. The Sunday school is wide awake and growing, and there is much interest in missionary work. The New Orleans District Epworth League Union held its last meeting with this congregation, and the occasion was both a pleasant and helpful one.

Rev. W. W. Woollard has favored us with a copy of the programme of the Preachers and Laymen's Meeting of the Greenville District, which is to be held at Cleveland this week. It is beautifully printed, and the subjects to be discussed are well arranged and of exceptional interest. We confess that while reading it we felt not a little homesick. Brother Woollard has already firmly gripped the work in the Delta, and that field is fortunate in having so capable a leader.

We were delighted a few days since to receive a cheering message from Rev. I. D. Borders, of Los Angeles, California. He writes that he is in a land of flowers, but that there are many difficulties to be overcome in the Master's work. We doubt not that Brother Borders will accomplish much in his new field. He sends love and greeting to the brethren in Mississippi. We trust that ere long he will find time to tell the readers of the Advocate of the wonderland in which he now makes his home.

We were honored this week by a visit from Doctor W. B. Murrah, the accomplished president of Millsaps College. A rare man is he—whom to know is to love, and in whose very presence there is health and sunshine. Viewed from any standpoint, he is one of the first men in Southern Methodism. A great preacher, a capable administrator, a wise counsellor, with a judgment almost unerring, and, best of all, an orthodox Methodist and a stainless, Christian gentleman, there is no sphere which he would not adorn, or scarcely any task to which he is not equal.

The Hazlehurst Courier gives the following account of the reception accorded the new pastor in that city: "All congregations in our city united in a welcome service to the new pastor of the Methodist Church, Rev. W. L. Linfield, on last Sunday evening at the Methodist Church. Mr. Linfield preached an able sermon, and good talks were made by Rev. S. C. Caldwell, Rev. R. H. Tandy and Hon. J. S. Sexton. The new pastor was made to feel cordially welcome to our city, not only by his own people, but by the other denominations. Mr. Linfield is not a stranger to Hazlehurst. He spent many years of his boyhood here, his father having lived in a home located about where The Courier office now stands. And our people open wide their hearts and homes to welcome him and his interesting family to our city."

The January number of the Methodist Review furnishes a feast of good things. The opening article, "The Neglect of the Atonement in Present-Day Preaching," is by Doctor F. N. Parker, of New Orleans, who is both a vigorous thinker and a fluent writer. The theme of his discussion is a vital one, and he handles it in a masterful manner. "The Old-Time Circuit Rider," by Doctor J. A. Rice, of the Rayne Memorial Church of this city, is a beautiful tribute to the simple, but heroic men, who planted Methodism in the Western world. With characteristic eloquence, Bishop Hendrix writes of "Gladstone, the Christian Statesman" and Professor Charles Forster Smith has an admirable appreciation of "Dr. James H. Carlsle," of South Carolina, who was one of the really great men of Southern Methodism. Of the other interesting papers, space will not allow us to write. As usual, the editor's work is of exceptional merit. The Methodist Review is a credit to the Church, and should have a wide circulation, both among the preachers and the laity.

Mr. Knox, Secretary of State, has addressed a circular note to the other great powers, proposing the centralizing and neutralization of the railroads in Manchuria. The scheme suggested is that they be sold to China, the purchase being financed by an international syndicate, which also is to administer the system. It is claimed that such an arrangement would tend to promote peace in the Far East by removing a prolific source of friction between Russia and Japan, and safeguard the interests of all the nations by guaranteeing to each its proper commercial rights. Germany and Great Britain are said to regard the proposal favorably. France and Russia are somewhat hesitant, and the attitude of Japan at this writing is problematical. It pleases us to see our Government wide awake to the situation in the Orient, where an open door and equal opportunities mean so much to American commerce.

The fight between Mrs. Eddy and Mrs. Stetson as to who shall control the First Christian Science Church of New York city is not yet ended. It will be remembered that the latter some weeks ago was accused of teaching heresy and that a pronouncement of excommunication was issued from Boston; but she has retained a considerable following among the officials of the congregation and the contest is still on. Time is the test of everything. A few years ago Dowieism was in flower and the papers were full of it; but now few are "so poor as to do it reverence." The death of Dowie ended it. May it not be that the passing of Mrs. Eddy will also mark the passing of the queer faith which she has sought to establish? The usual history of false prophets is that they have no successors. The feuds of weak followers generally tear down what a corrupt or misguided genius has builded.

The spirited political contest in Great Britain is drawing to a close. The taking of the poll began on the 13th inst., and the result will soon be known. The cause of the government has been ably championed by Premier Asquith, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Winston Churchill, and other effective speakers. The opposition has been ably led by ex-Premier A. J. Balfour, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Curzon, and a number of other capable campaigners. Lord Roseberry, the most brilliant orator in England, is with the opposers of the present administration, but he does not seem to have been very active in the fight. It was thought in the beginning that it would be a one-sided battle, but if the press dispatches may be trusted, there is now considerable doubt as to the outcome. We do not concur in the view that the very existence of the House of Lords is at stake in the contest, but necessarily it involves the extent of power which that body is to exercise in the future.

President Taft is reported to favor adhering to the plan of constructing two battleships a year, and thus maintaining the strength and efficiency of the American navy. In this we think he is right. We believe in peace, and pray that the time may speedily come when the roar of the cannon will never more be heard; but, with the other nations building great fleets, we do not think the United States can afford to do less than measurably keep pace with them. Our commerce and our citizens must be protected, and, in the present state of human society, we think the Christian nations should exercise a kind of police supervision of the world. Such atrocities as the Armenian massacres and the inhuman treatment of the African natives by Leopold, should not be tolerated. And how, without an adequate navy, is the United States to perform her part in this great humanitarian work? A nation has no more right to shirk obligations and live to itself than an individual. It must shoulder its responsibilities and figure in the mighty movements that mold and shape human history.

JANUARY MAGAZINES.

The January Century is up to its usual high standard. "The Passing of the Antique Rug," "A Study of the New Plan of Chicago," by ex-President C. W. Elliot, of Harvard; "Modjeska's Memoirs," "Tramping in Palestine," and "Personality in Football," are some of the leading articles. "The Pioneers of Mound Bayou" is an interesting description of a unique Mississippi Village, inhabited only by negroes.

The Housekeeper opens the new year with a beautiful number. The exterior is most attractive, and the interior is not less so. Many helpful features are contained therein. Particularly pleasing and instructive is "The Story of Wheat, Flour and Bread."

Health-Culture makes a good beginning in 1910. Practical matters, such as dieting, the health of children, and vaccination are discussed. But it also embraces some of the speculative in its contents, as Mr. Warman's discussion of "Spiritism."

The leading features of the January number of The American Review of Reviews are the several discussions bearing on the nation's water power and resources. One is by Secretary Ballinger, who has lately been much in the lime-light. The leading events of the world are discussed in the usual discriminating manner.

On Dec. 19, 1909, the death angel claimed as his victim Brother ISOM HALL, who was a faithful member of the Methodist Church, and who was loved by all who knew him. He was fifty-five years old and no one in his community had more friends. I lived near him for eleven years and always found him at duty's post. He leaves a wife and several children to mourn his departure. All we can do is to point the bereaved to the home beyond this vale of tears. We shall see him again. May God bless and comfort every sorrowing heart!

A BROTHER IN CHRIST.

Mrs. MINNIE SLOAN PARNELL, of Senatobia, Miss., has passed away. Our loss is her eternal gain. We mourn for a loving daughter, a faithful wife, a devoted mother, an affectionate sister, and a steadfast friend. We weep and she is not near to comfort us, but she the gentle spirit of her life hovers round and bids us be cheerful and happy and be ready to join her with the other loved ones in the beautiful city. Asleep in Jesus, blessed thought! Sleep on, dear one, and take thy rest, and some sweet day we'll meet to part no more.

L. P. T.

Miss ELIZABETH L. WOODWARD was born May 26, 1844, on Canaan plantation, Tensas Parish, La., daughter of John S. Woodward and Elizabeth Ann Pritchard. Sister Woodward joined the Methodist Church, South, at Wesley Chapel, Tensas Parish, when seventeen years old, under the ministry of J. D. Adams. She was a consistent member and communed as often as the opportunity offered. Having been a cripple since the age of four years, she was deprived of many pleasures and advantages of this life which others enjoy, though she always felt there were many blessings to be grateful for. She died in full assurance of faith.

A FRIEND.

Nov. 5, 1909.

Mrs. RHODY ANNIE BASS was born in 1851 in Barber County, Ala., moved thence to Glasgow County, in 1855; thence to Clarke, Miss., in 1858, and thence to Jasper County, in 1867. Here she met Mr. P. E. Linder, son of Rev. Thomas Linder, and on Dec. 22, 1909, they were united in marriage. She joined the Methodist Church at or near twelve years of age. Her death occurred Sept. 8, 1908. The writer, having formerly been her pastor, visited her just before her death and found her in the possession of a strong faith in God. She leaves a devoted husband, three children, and six grandchildren to mourn her loss. May we all live so as to meet Sister Linder in the beautiful home of the just.

L. J. JONES.

APOLLOS E. DANIELS was born in Clark County, Miss., March 27, 1873, Clark County, Miss., March 27, 1873, and died in Chicago, Miss., Nov. 21, 1909. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Womack Hill, Choctaw County, Ala. Brother Daniels was a faithful member of the church, a good steward and an attentive Sunday School Superintendent. He was always ready to do what his church put upon him. It was a pleasure to be associated with him. On Dec. 1, 1896, he was married to Miss Della Virginia Hanks. He leaves a widow, five sons and four daughters to mourn his death. He was a kind father and a loving husband. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved and keep them until they are called to meet the one who has gone on in the mansions of light.

R. E. RUTLEDGE.

Mrs. HARRIETT E. GILLILAND, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John R. Norfleet, was born in Marshall County, Miss., Jan. 18, 1818, and died in Coldwater, Miss., Aug. 11, 1909. Sister Gilliland had the best school advantages in childhood, and at the early age of fifteen she graduated from the Marshall Institute, which, at that time, was a popular and thorough institution of learning. On Jan. 1, 1839, she was happily married to Mr. John F. Gilliland. For thirty-six years their lives were joined as one and flowed on together in the tranquil waters of a gentle stream. Death severed the union by claiming Brother Gilliland Jan. 11, 1897. To this union was born eleven children, seven of whom survive: John F. N. Gilliland; W. R. Gilliland; E. J. Gilliland; Mrs. Lena Harold; Mrs. E. H. Turley; A. P. Gilliland; and M. S. Hall. She was a sufferer for many months before her end came. She was much emaciated in body, but her mind was strong and vigorous to the last. She took an active interest in current events, and by constant reading, kept well informed. Sister Gilliland united with the Methodist Church when quite young and remained a faithful and devoted member till the Father said it was enough. She knew the doctrine of her Church and rejoiced in their triumph. The spirit of devotion characterized her life. She was a constant and careful student of God's Word, and had daily communion with the Father. As her strength grew weaker, her faith grew stronger, and at the last, it was a triumph. With an angel in her spiritual skies she passed over the river and joined the countless hosts on the other side. She has gone, but we know where to find her.

V. C. CURTIS.

MRS. MARY TEMPERANCE GIBBS—The subject of this memoir was born near Jackson, Tenn., April 27, 1831, and died in Jackson, Miss., Dec. 29, 1909. Between these two dates a long, beautiful and useful life was lived. She was the daughter of Dr. T. W. and Elizabeth A. Pulliam. When a child, she moved with her parents to Oxford, Miss., where she grew to young womanhood. In the fall of 1845 she attended a Methodist Conference at Grenada, where she met Julius G. Gibbs, and in January, of 1847, she became his wife. This devoted couple lived together for nearly fifty years. Death robbed the home of its husband some years ago. Eleven children, were born to these parents, eight of whom still survive: Mrs. Dr. J. M. Smith, Coffeeville, Miss.; Mrs. Anna P. Ball and Mrs. Kate H. Mauldin, Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. J. F. Hurley, Little Rock, Ark.; Edward E. Gibbs, Oakland, Cal.; Henry W. Gibbs, Arcata, La.; and Mrs. Mary S. Ward, Endicott, Ark. For thirty-seven years Brother and Sister Gibbs lived at Gibbs Spring, three miles west of Grenada. There they reared their children, lived in peace, and dispensed a generous hospitality to a large circle of friends. Many a weary Methodist preacher has found a resting-place beneath their roof. Sister Gibbs was one of God's saints—she was amiable in nature, gentle in disposition, unselfish in heart, and devoted in friendship. She was as sunny as the Southern sky, and as loyal to her friends and her Lord as Ruth to Naomi. She was a Christian practically all her life and was one of the most perfect Christians I ever saw. When the spirit slipped out of the body on that cold December night, it went straight to the Father who had given it. Such lives enrich the race and make heaven sure. To her devoted daughters and loyal sons, I extend heartfelt sympathy.

ANOTHER CALL.

By May 1, 1910, we are expected to have $10,000 in cash from the Methodists of Mississippi to make another payment on the Endowment Fund of Millsaps College. We have less than $4,000 in cash now on hand. Our subscription list at New Albany, West Point, Myrtle, and a number of other places, is practically paid up.

But in a number of other places the list is far behind. At Lumberton, Natchez, Gulfport, Hattiesburg and Jackson there is much to be done. May I ask the pastors in all the places where we have subscriptions to call attention to this matter? Please send your money to me as early as possible. T. W. LEWIS, Columbus, Miss. Agent.

THE MINISTERIAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Members: When thirty days passed after the adjournment of our Conference, we had seventy-six paid-up members; sixteen who have paid the 50 cents and sixteen who have given their names but paid nothing. May I say to these thirty-two brethren that they cannot participate in the benefits of the Ministerial Relief Association until they have sent the $5 mortuary fee and the 25 cents membership fee. The annual dues of 25 cents will help defray the expenses—buying stationery, postage, etc.—and also help some superannuated brother pay his $5 mortuary fee. Better borrow the money and send it to Brother Park at once. T. W. LEWIS,

LOST.

At the close of the North Mississippi Conference, at Okolona, Miss., on Dec. 6, 1909, at the depot, one leather suitcase, I think someone carried it away on the north-bound train through a mistake. If so, they found the suitcase reports, also report from Courtland School in it. If anyone who reads this has it, please ship it to me by express at Courtland, Miss.

All those who have business with the Board will please take notice. Write to Rev. L. E. Alford, Secretary, Long Beach, Miss., for blank applications for aid from the Parent Board. W. B. LEWIS, President.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The publisher begs to thank those who have sent in advance orders for "Modes of the Heavenly Life" by Walter G. Harbin, and takes this method of acknowledging them. It has been deemed advisable to extend the autograph edition. Instead of the first 100 copies, all copies ordered in advance of publication will be included in this edition. Those desiring a copy of this edition should order at once.

The book contains Mr. Harbin's strongest sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The introduction is by Rev. R. A. Meek. The book will be handsomely bound in cloth, and will be printed on heavy paper in large type, and illustrated with the author's portrait. The price will be 75 cents. Those desiring the autograph edition should send in their orders at once to Chas. O. Chalmers, publisher, No. 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

LETTER FROM REV. P. H. HOWSE.

Mr. Editor: Please let me say to the brethren of our Church, that I stand ready to hold revival meetings as soon as the season is open. I did not go to the work assigned me, and I beg leave to explain:

First, the stewards told me that the work would not pay over $600—that is, for preacher and presiding elder. I did not pay that much the past year.

Second, there is nothing there, on the charge for my boys to do, and practically no school for my children.

Third, I would have had to buy a horse and buggy out of the—say, $540, and then feed my family of ten, which would be a moral impossibility. I could not serve the work without becoming involved in debt. And it goes without saying, that debt ruins a preacher. Respectfully,

P. H. HOWSE.

Carriere, Miss.

FROM SALLIS, MISS.

Dear Editor: We are comfortably domiciled in the nice, little parsonage at Sallis, our new charge, and feel at home again. We have never met a larger-hearted people. They know just how to treat a preacher, as was shown by the generous "pounding" they gave us last night, consisting of an abundant variety of eatables—just the things always needed in the pantry. Then to see the smiling faces of the boys and girls, as they led the crowd of young people and older ones into the parsonage, was enough to make one happy indeed. May the Lord bless them in basket and in store, and especially in spiritual things!

We believe that we have the best charge in the North Mississippi Conference. At any rate, we do not desire to exchange places with anybody. We are expecting great things this year, and do not see how we could fail amid such surroundings. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be able to take up the work where my worthy predecessor, Rev. J. D. McWhorter left off, and continue to lead the flock homeward. E. B. SHARP.

For Carbuncles, Boils, Sores, Etc.

If the figures could be obtained, it would probably be found that during the last half century Gray's Ointment has been the means of curing millions of carbuncles, and hundreds of thousands of boils and sores. For more than fifty years it has been the main reliance of parents in millions of homes in America and foreign lands. Gray's Ointment was first prescribed by Dr. W. F. Gray, a prominent physician of Nashville, Tenn. It is without doubt the most perfect prescription ever written for boils, carbuncles, old sores, chronic ulcers, festering wounds, burns, sprains, poison oak and all inflammations in man and domestic animals. Get a 25c box at your druggist's or write for small trial box which we gladly send free, postpaid, to demonstrate its value. Address Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. E. B. Virgin, of New Orleans, La., writes: "I can cheerfully recommend Gray's Ointment for cuts, bruises, boils, carbuncles, etc. Have used it in my family 25 years."

BABY SAVED HER

"I was sick for three years," writes Mrs. Nolie Jones, of Russellville, Tenn. "I had a doctor and took medicine regularly, but grew worse, until last spring I was past going out and was just skin and bones."

"One day I noticed my baby playing with one of your Ladies Birthday Almanacs. I picked it up and from it learned of your Wine of Cardui."

"I have taken 4 bottles of Cardui and am well and hearty. Weigh 145 pounds. I believe Cardui saved my life and I hope all women who suffer as I did will try it."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable medicine for women. It has been found to relieve or cure nervousness, headache, backache, pain in the side and other female ailments.

HOW TO HAVE A CONSCIENCE VOID OF OFFENSE.

ACTS XXIV:16; 1 Tim. I:5-19; 1 Peter III:15-16.

There is a voice that speaks in the heart of every man, telling him the path of duty, and admonishing him as to whether he measures up to the standards of his soul. This voice, which we call conscience, is almost infallible, insofar as it comes to determining whether you have done right or wrong in the light which your soul possesses. It is fallible, in that a false sense of duty, or a degraded sense of good or bad, will invariably effect the judgments of your conscience. Killing is a part of the religion of the Thugs of India, and their consciences would naturally condemn where no sacrifice of blood had been offered. A certain legislator stated in private conversation, that hoodlums was so common in the State where he served a decade ago, that men took money for legislation, with no thought that it was wrong. Conscience is somewhat like certain scales, that you may set for a fixed price or weight, and that will indicate exactly as to whether you reach that standard or not.

There are many people young and old, who never try to do their whole duty, and who live from day to day, with a sense of condemnation. Among these are many professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, who feel that it is impossible to live the life that has been set for them. They fancy that only dreamers and fanatics talk about living with a clear conscience. To these persons, the habit of their lives has seemed to be the necessity of all lives.

But when you turn to the gospel messages of the New Testament, their continued testimony and requirement is that you live with a conscience void of offense. This was the glory of Paul that he had always a conscience void of offense.

You should have a clear conscience, if you have done the things which you believed that your Lord wanted you to do, and done nothing which he would not have you do. You sometimes hear men say, "I ought to have done this piece of work, but I could not." This is a contradiction; the Lord does not make anything your duty, which you cannot do. You may confuse "cannot" and "will not," but your Lord never set a task for you which it was not possible for you to do, nor permitted a temptation to assail you from which there was not a way of escape.

The Master has said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He who shall keep his conscience clear in the sight of his Lord, must seek to know the Master's will. The light of the Holy Spirit, and the guidance of the revealed Word, must be sought. Your conscience can hardly be void of offense, if you have not sought to find out the things which the Christ would have you do. It is not enough for you to meet the demands of a worldly conscience; you want a conscience taught of your Lord.

There is not a Leaguer who cannot for one day do just what you believe your Lord wants you to do. When you have asked for his guidance and finished a day as in his sight, you should be able to look up into his face, and say, "My Lord, insofar as I have known it, I have done thy will this day; give me a clearer vision of my duty for to-morrow." When you have completed one day of loving, faithful service, then are you ready for the next, and so one day at a time, by the grace of your Lord, may you live your life with "A conscience void of offense."

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

The life of every man is a diary in which he means to write one story, and writes another; and his humblest hour is when he compares the volume as it is with what he vowed to make it.—J. M. Barrie.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-five years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 23, 1910.

TRUE BLESSEDNESS.

Matt. v. 1-16.

Golden Text—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. v. 8.

Following the preaching of the Kingdom of God and his work of mercy and love among the poor and unfortunate of Galilee, the fame of Jesus had gone out in all directions: they of the decapolis, or the ten cities, hearing of this great goodness and his wonderful power, passed the news along to all Syria, on the east of them. They of the south, in Judea and Jerusalem, had seen him and had told of him to others who had not seen him. Just as now when those that know and love him are continually talking of him to those who know him not. To know a little of our Lord Jesus only increases the desire to know more. So, with the great crowds that followed him in Galilee there came more from the places to which his fame had gone. Some had heard the Lord tell of this new kingdom and others had been told of it, but now came the time to tell them of better things to come after the knowledge already gained.

There was no comfort, no life-giving spirit, in the things taught them by the scribes and the Pharisees. There was now a longing for more satisfying truths, increasing their expectancy of the coming of the Messiah. That is why they seemed as sheep having no shepherd and why Jesus looked upon them with so much compassion.

When Jesus saw the great multitude he at once sought a place where he could best be seen and heard; then his disciples being near him he began to teach the most wonderful truths or principles ever given to mankind. The people before him had been accustomed to have facing them the penalty of a broken law; they had never heard of such mercy as was shown by the Son of God in his works and preaching. If then there were among them any who judged themselves as being poor in spirit, theirs is the blessedness of the kingdom of heaven, where the humble and unworthy enter only by faith. If any mourn, having a godly sorrow for sin, they have striven against alone, longing for some power to aid them to resist, they are blessed, for the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sin, and together with this they shall be comforted by the Spirit that shall be given them, who will not only be a Comforter, but a Monitor who guides them into a knowledge of Christ and his righteousness. To the meek, the lowly and uncomplaining ones, it is an inheritance which is the Lord's, the earth, the whole earth and the fulness thereof, for to them is the inheritance of a new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. The poor in spirit and those that mourn are meek, but not such meekness as is especially referred to as inheriting the earth; such meekness comes to those who have heard and followed the Master as he said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness. Not such as that of the scribes and the Pharisees, but the righteousness which is of Christ by faith; with this righteousness will the hungry soul be filled; for he will bring forth thy righteousness as the light. Ps. xxxvii, 6. "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." He is merciful who is ready to pardon an offence, even when an offence is intended, and when there is no desire to be forgiven. Such are the merciful that shall obtain mercy; for God is kind to the unthankful and the evil. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." God is omnipotent and can be seen always; it is when one becomes pure in heart he can be seen by him. He sees God because God can be seen by only the pure in heart. He is made pure in heart so that he can see God. The pure in heart sees God in his own life, for he believes that God worketh in him both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

It requires great spiritual discernment to see God in all the wonderful achievements of science in the present time; to see that such wonderful things are done and accepted by men with little surprise, for according to Scripture and in the mercy of God, events must come to pass that, while the reading or the telling of them is true, they seem to the worldly-minded as idle tales.

The world is being gradually prepared for all that the Scripture clearly states must certainly come to pass. Such wonderful things are yet to come that have never entered into the mind of man. "Blessed are the peace-makers; those who devote their lives to preaching peace, the reconciliation of the world unto God through the gospel; telling of our Father being the God of Peace who will not impute trespasses unto his children." For they shall be called the children of God, because the Father is the God of Peace.

Now all these who have been named as blessed must suffer persecution, just as all will who live godly in Christ Jesus.

The hatred toward and the persecution of a good man, because he is a good man, is a characteristic act of Satan himself. Jesus came to destroy the works of Satan; he makes the persecution for righteousness sake of more effect by bestowing on the persecuted ones the kingdom of heaven. There is also a comfort in knowing that such persecuted ones are among the great company of the prophets of old. Remember Ahab speaking to Jehoshaphat of the one who in prophecy said, "I saw all Israel scattered as sheep having no shepherd." Just for this and for his godliness, Ahab answered, "There yet remaineth one, but I hate him."

All these blessings bestowed are not only for the good of those receiving them, for after having merited them they become "The salt of the earth," and, if this salt loses not its savor, they go about saving others. They are the light of the world. They cannot hide their light because "If any man love God the same is known of him." I Cor. vii, 3. Then let your light shine, not that men may see what good you have done, but they may glorify God for using man as an instrument for good.

Look not through the Beatitudes for one personally merited, but rather wait until the Master bestows the first one. Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things will be added. Also remember that the first will be last, and the last the most humble and lowly; the one that said "When saw we thee, Lord, suffer all these things, and ministered unto thee?" shall be first of all.

A Doctor in the Family.

Royaline Oil, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., answers so many useful purposes in the home that it is even spoken of as being like a doctor in the family. Its timely use saves, not only much suffering and time, but also physicians' bills. Cuts, aches, inflammations, swellings or any other soreness can be quickly alleviated by the application of Royaline Oil, the great antiseptic. Price 25c a bottle. At your druggist.

FROM DR. SAWYER.

At the last session of the Louisiana Conference, I was, on my own motion, granted a location. Being in good health and preaching condition, and having an experience of years as a soul-winner, and the fire of love for souls burning never more brightly than now in my heart, I desire to do all the evangelistic work open to me. To this end, and foot-loose to go anywhere in Louisiana, Mississippi, or beyond these States, I offer my services to the pastors of the Methodist Church, and of other denominations, as well, to hold for them revival meetings. In all my ministry, I have never had an off year in soul-saving, but have under God witnessed the conversion of many hundreds of souls. Last year what meetings I held in this State and elsewhere received the divine blessing.

Brethren, write me promptly at 2330 Valence Street, New Orleans. I desire to get my dates for meetings arranged as soon as possible.

Fraternally,
JOHN T. SAWYER.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

Reports by the pastors on Public and Charitable Institutions revealed the fact that the following are being looked after by our preachers: Charity Hospital, Shakespeare Alms House, Fink Home, St. Anna's Home, Memorial Home, Soldiers' Home, Convalescent Home, Orphans' Home for Destitute Boys, and the Parish Prison.

An interesting discussion was led by N. E. Joyner on "The Advisability of Celebrating the Centennial of New Orleans Methodism in 1910." He took the position that such an event should not pass without some kind of a great celebration, and that it should be big enough to show the whole church our great need in this, the largest city in our territory. A committee will report at the next meeting on the time and nature of the celebration. Some of the brethren are anxious to make this event the occasion of a great revival—of an effort to bring the gospel to bear on the community as never before.

ALBERT S. LUTZ, Secretary.

New Orleans, Jan. 17.

THE ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Programme Committee of the Ecumenical Methodist Conference met at the Conference Headquarters, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Thursday, Jan. 6, all the members being present, except Dr. William Briggs, of Toronto, who was kept at home by temporary illness. A provisional programme was laid before the Committee by Dr. H. K. Carroll. It had been prepared from a list of 230 topics suggested by Bishops, presidents and professors of literary and theological institutions, editors of church papers and other representative men, including members of the committee. Careful consideration was given by the committee to the draft presented, and, after being amended, it was unanimously approved and the Executive Secretary was directed to transmit it to the Eastern Section for its consideration.

Bishop Hamilton was in the chair, and Dr. Claudius B. Spencer served as temporary secretary in the absence of Dr. Briggs. Other members present were Bishop E. E. Hoss and Drs. H. M. DuBose and T. N. Ivey, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Drs. N. Luccock and H. K. Carroll, and Mr. George F. Washburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mr. Justice J. J. MacLaren, of the Methodist Church of Canada; Dr. F. T. Little, of the Methodist Protestant Church; Bishop C. S. Smith, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church; and Bishop J. S. Caldwell, of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church.

A MAN'S CHRIST.

A Chicago professor from one of the big universities, himself a clergyman, in addressing a convocation of his brother ministers of the same denomination in the West, expressed himself as being wholly dissatisfied with the Christ as we know him, claiming that he is too feminine, too sissified, fit only for anaemic women. He pleaded for a man's Christ, one who had the weakness and strength of real men and who could sympathize with sinners. He maintained that sinners can be Christians, that atonement and forgiveness are unnecessary for the sinless, and that without sin there could be no repentance. He wanted a Christ who was a man of the world, full blooded and masculine.

These questions the laymen must touch lightly, as though they were wounds; only the men of the cloth can take a muscular grasp of them and handle them as they would things material.

In passing it may be observed that the Chicago professor is a Mont Pelee that erupts at unexpected times and belches forth most curious things in the form of intellectual lava. His passion is to amaze and confound his hearers with startling pronouncements; but it was not expected that he would find fault with and condemn the Son of God, one of the Trinity, cognate with and a part of the Unity. After this we may expect anything from these swashbuckling iconoclasts, as nothing is safe or sacred with them.

Of the Christ we know from His birth in the manger until He is found, at the age of twelve, arguing with the doctors in the temple. Then He returned with his parents, "and was subject unto them," and we hear no more of Him until, at the age of thirty, he meets John in Judea, and was baptized by him in the River Jordan.

There is a hiatus of eighteen years of which we know nothing. We have "lives of Christ" in abundance; from the work of Renan down to the most humble witness, but their rapturous writings are mere speculative empiricisms. They had no more data than we. They had access to no information that is not open to every one. We know nothing about the Christ at this time, and He may have been fully as masculine as the Chicago professor would wish. That He possessed physical courage there can be no doubt. When He scourged the money changers and those who sold doves and other offerings and overturned their tables, he displayed no effeminacy.

The Chicago professor should revive the worship of Mars or Minerva, Hercules or Orion, or any of the Titans of the gods of ancient Greece. Or, if he wants to worship mere force, he can typify it by erecting an altar to a trip-hammer, a Corliss engine, a thirteen-inch gun or a mule's hind hoof. The Christian's God is no object of his adoration.

The fact that we know so little of the Christ is fortunate. It prevents much controversy. We know enough of Him to enable us to obey His command, "Follow me," and that is sufficient.—Memphis News-Scimitar.

STRENGTH AT DIFFERENT AGES.

According to excellent authority, says the London Globe, the muscles, in common with all organs of the human body, have their period of development and decline, our physical strength increasing up to a certain age and then decreasing. Tests of the strength of several thousand individuals have been made and the following figures have been given as the averages derived from such tests:

The lifting power of a youth of 17 is 280 pounds; in his 20th year this increases to 320 pounds, and in his 30th and 31st years it reaches its height, 365 pounds. At the expiration of the 31st year the strength begins to decline, very gradually at first. By the 40th year it has decreased 8 pounds and diminution continues at a slightly increasing rate until the 50th year is reached, when the figure is 330 pounds.

Subsequent to this period strength falls more and more rapidly until the weakness of old age is reached. It is found impossible to obtain trustworthy statistics of the decline of strength after the 50th year, as the rate varies greatly in different individuals.—New York Witness.

THE SCHOOL OF THE SOUL.

My soul, thou art receiving a music lesson from thy Father. Thou art being educated for the choir invisible. There are parts of the symphony that none can take but thee. There are chords too minor for the angels. There may be heights in the symphony which are beyond thy scale—heights which the angels alone can reach. But there are depths which belong to thee, and can be touched only by thee. Thy Father is training thee for the part the angels cannot sing; and the school is sorrow. I have heard men say that he sends thy sorrow to prove thee—nay, he sends thy sorrow to educate thee to train thee for the choir invisible. In the night he is preparing thy song. In the valley he is tuning thy voice. In the cloud he is deepening thy chords. In the storm he is enriching thy pathos. In the rain he is sweetening thy melody. In the cold he is molding thine expression. In the transition from hope to fear he is perfecting thy light and shades. Des-pise not thy school of sorrow. O my soul! It will give thee a unique part in the universal song.—Rev. George Matheson.

PIGEONS IN HISTORY.

Doubtless you admire the pretty, graceful creatures that perch upon the eaves of your house, or daintily trip across your yard, but did you ever think what a factor they have been in the history of the world?

Pigeons, as commonplace as they appear, are characters of antiquity. We hear of them when the waters of the Deluge covered the face of the earth, when the faithful dove flew from the hand of Noah and returned to her master, bearing the significant olive branch. Dove is the Anglo-Saxon name; pigeon, the Norman name.

During the fifth Egyptian dynasty, three thousand years before Christ, it was the fashion to domesticate pigeons, and to train them as carriers and messengers. The promptness with which Caesar was informed of the rebellions in Gaul, and thereby enabled to cross the Alps before those uprisings could possess the entire province, was due to the use of carrier pigeons. In the Crusades these birds were skilful and faithful messengers.

The price of a handsome pair of pigeons in ancient Rome was not a trifle, for Axius, a Roman knight, once sold a pair of pigeons for forty denarii—about thirteen pounds in English money, and about sixty-five dollars in our currency. At that time, too, they were by far the swiftest conveyers of news, and were much in demand at the celebration of the Olympic games.

Among the many pathetic incidents connected with the imprisonment of Mary Queen of Scots, she begs earnestly for a pigeon, and writes in a letter: "I beg you to procure for me some pigeons. I wish to rear them in cages; it will be such a pastime for a prisoner."—The Household.

From the Washington Herald we take the following: "In 1801 English was spoken by 20,500,000; French by 31,450,000; German by 30,320,000; Spanish by 26,200,000; and Russian by 30,770,000. In 1901 English had grown to 130,300,000; French to 52,100,000; German to 84,200,000; Spanish to 46,500,000, and Russian to 85,000,000. The proportion to the whole shows that English increased from 12.7 per cent. to 29.2 per cent., that French showed a relative loss of nearly 50 per cent., Spanish a heavy loss, and the German and Russian stood still."

If I might speak, after careful and extended observation, to our splendid young people in this Southland, I would say, Be strong and keep strong by using only the interest (at a low rate) of your physical, intellectual, and spiritual capital. There is much folly, and little satisfaction worth the name, in prodigality of any kind.—President W. A. Betts.

Let us be quiet. In quietness there is strength. Many a life is distressed and distracted because its owner does not take time to get himself quiet.—Exchange.

There are two freedoms—the false, where a man is free to do what he likes; the true, where a man is free to do what he ought.—Charles Kingsley.

A good word is an easy obligation, but not to speak ill requires only our silence, which costs us nothing.—Tillotson.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 27, 1910.

C. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

VOL. 57—No. 4.

"PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

WHOLE No. 2810.

Editorial.

The principle of reciprocity is regnant in all life about us. The friendly have friends; the lover is loved, and the self-sacrificing have the treasures of earth laid at their feet. To the man who is cold the world is cold; toward the cynic, other men are cynical; and he who lives alone, must suffer alone and die alone. The divine Man spoke truly when he said, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

It is Tennyson who speaks of the "jaundiced eye." The world is full of them. Critics abound everywhere. Many affecting the highest holiness are most given to fault-finding. But true religion is not disposed to think evil. It is not ceaselessly engaged in searching for the weaknesses of men, but it delights to discover the good and is not sparing in the word of praise. Its proper symbol is not the uplifted club, but the outstretched hand of helpfulness.

In adopting the method of revealing himself direct to the human consciousness God planted the Christian religion upon an impregnable basis. That which the soul intuitively knows, is lifted forever out of the arena of debate. As long as the human spirit directly apprehends the divine spirit, the shafts of infidelity will fall harmless at the foot of the cross. The shibboleth with which the Christian may rout all the legions of darkness is that of the man whose sightless eyes Jesus opened: "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

Not a few are given to prating about what they pay to the Church. Such talk is the most unjustifiable twaddle. We do not know a single person who is being hurt by what he contributes to the support of the gospel. But we do know some who are being injured in their spiritual life by a lack of liberality. If our people would only measure up to the old Jewish standard of giving a tenth, our Church treasures everywhere would overflow. And surely under the fuller light of the Christian era, we should be ashamed to fall below what the Jews did under the old dispensation.

"Procrastination is the thief of time," but it is more. It is the thief of opportunities. Satan blinds us to the wide-open doors about us, and tells us there is nothing to do now—that the favorable time for achievement has not yet come. So we wait, and let the hours which should be filled with loving ministries pass by unimproved. The lesson we ought to learn is that the present is our time for activity; that the generation now living is the one which we must serve, and that our age is not more lacking in opportunities for worthy work than those which have gone before or those which will follow. It is the near-by vision that we need.

SHALL WE REMOVE THE TIME LIMIT?

This subject is being discussed more generally throughout the connection than almost any other likely to come up at the approaching session of the General Conference. There is a large contingent in Southern Methodism which sincerely believes that the enforced removal of our pastors at a stated time often operates to the detriment of the work, and that this arbitrary requirement should be stricken from the Discipline. To the best of our ability, we have considered this question in all of its bearings, and it is our deliberate conclusion that the removal of the time limit would be an extremely hazardous piece of legislation.

We have heard the plea of those who speak for the work in the city, and who so earnestly contend that a pastor must reside for years in the great centers of population in order to accomplish the largest results. They say he scarcely gets acquainted and secures the vantage ground necessary to the highest efficiency before the time mandate speaks and he must move to another field. There may be something in this, but we think the extent to which our city work is hindered by the operation of the time limit is greatly exaggerated. In proof of this we point to the fact that Southern Methodism is fully abreast of the other Protestant denominations in most of the cities of the South. If the enforced removal of our pastors every four years is so prejudicial to the work in our larger municipalities, then why is it that we are not behind our sister churches in St. Louis, Richmond, Atlanta, Nashville, Birmingham, Memphis, Dallas, and Houston? And, though we are not strong in New Orleans, we are not as weak as some of the denominations whose pastors may remain indefinitely.

But even if the city work suffered appreciably under the present order of things, it would by no means be conclusive that the time limit should be stricken from our law. The territory of Southern Methodism is overwhelmingly rural. We have no great metropolitan municipalities like New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. For every hundred in our cities, there are thousands and tens of thousands in the country. Legislation to be wise must have respect to the needs of the great majority. It must operate on the principle of "the greatest good to the greatest number." The city is important, but it will not do to let it give type to our legislation unless it, at the same time, be good for the vastly larger membership in the interior. In supplying materials for the work, the rural sections in some instances have already been too much overlooked.

But the advocates of the removal of the time limit do not hesitate to contend that striking it out would be beneficial to the whole Church—to the work in the country, as well as in the city. They say, if the preachers need to be frequently moved there would be nothing to stay the hand of the Bishop. That sounds well theoretically, but we have learned from observation to distrust an optional administration. In most cases it is wholly ineffective. Where is the pastor to-day who administers discipline? The plea upon which a probation for church members was done away with was that the pastor could keep them out for testing and instruction as long as he pleased. But where is the man who keeps them out for a single day? Make it possible for a pastor to remain for an indefinite time at one place, and, if he is popular, there will be found reasons innumerable why it will not do to disturb him. Any man who is attractive and who knows how to gather about him a personal following, could so anchor himself in his charge that he could not be changed without stirring up trouble. And we fear that there soon would be presented the spectacle of the better places securely held by the stronger men, and no open doors to a larger sphere for the deserving and growing toilers in the poorer fields.

We are aware that it is urged in rebuttal to this that they have had more changes in the Methodist Episcopal Church without the time limit than with it. This argument is inconclusive for the reason that it takes more than one test to establish a general rule or principle. There may have been some cause operating with them which does not exist with us. Moreover, they have had it for too short a time to tell what the final and permanent effect will be. And, in this connection, it may not be amiss to note that the percentage of our growth has been considerably larger with the time limit in operation than theirs with the time limit repealed. If the time limit is so hurtful in its influence, why have we been outstripping our sister Methodism?

But it is said, because of the time limit, many of our brightest men go from us. We should like to see the facts adduced to sustain this claim. Anything can be asserted. But we want the names and the proof that the time limit carried them to another fold. True, we have occasionally lost a minister to some other denomination, but so have all the churches. Even the Church of England lost from its roll the bright names of Newman and Manning. The most eloquent Presbyterian preacher in Mississippi was for many years a Baptist. And if the Baptist Church, with its extraordinary adhesive powers, cannot invariably hold its preachers in place, any hope that we may ever be able to do so is an iridescent dream.

Our view with reference to the time limit and many other proposed changes in our polity is that we had better let well enough alone. Reckless experimentation can certainly find no justification in a period of such remarkable prosperity as our Church is now enjoying. Our gain in membership last year was 57,000; we are now 1,800,000 strong, and the next quadrennium will likely place us well past the two million mark. Less talk about legislation and more evangelization is what we need. In an infusion of larger life from above, and not in the magic of any new enactment, is to be found the remedy for any apathy or lack of success, which in some sections may exist. We have the best doctrines of any denomination in existence; we have an admirable form of government, and, if we will but be apostolic in faith and fervor, the best days of Southern Methodism are yet to come.

The only ascent of man is up the shining pathway of the just.

ABOUT PREACHING.

By John T. Sawyer, D.D.

Our Methodist Review for January is a number of superior merit, and every article in it is first-class. Three members of the Louisiana Conference, Drs. F. N. Parker and John A. Rice and Prof. Thos. Carter, are among its contributors.

"The Neglect of the Atonement in Present Day Preaching," by Dr. Parker, is timely, as undoubtedly many prominent preachers of to-day neglect to present frequently to their people this vital and central doctrine of revealed truth. Well does he say: "The trouble with all merely humanitarian or social conceptions of the work of Christ is that they contain the germs of a subtle self-righteousness. The consequence is that those who preach and those who believe according to this gospel fail to develop the peculiar characteristics of Pentecostal Christianity. This is due to the fact that, so long as man looks upon his salvation as fundamentally a process within himself, rather than a process resulting from a great work done for him, he is at heart saving himself. He is more or less self-centered in the supreme issue of his life. But the atoning sacrifice sweeps all this away. He finds himself redeemed by a powerful act of sacrificial love, a love that suffered for him and bore his sins: his sins and Christ's work become identified. Out of it comes the gracious repentance, the humble trust and thankful love, and the serene peace which is the gift of Christ. A man really discovers his true life when he has lost himself at the cross."

Prof. Carter's subject—"The Epistle to the Romans: The First Philosophy of History"—is ably treated, as the following extract clearly shows: "When the Greeks came with the request, 'Sir, we would see Jesus,' Jesus fully realized that to see him in any saving sense men must see him on the cross. This is the sight that saves. Christ is beautiful in the cradle as he lies there, a heaven-horn child; Christ is noble as a lad of twelve, recognizing thus early his divine vocation; Christ is wonderful as a worker, healing the sick and ministering in a thousand ways to men in their physical need; Christ is brave, as he faces the stern opposition of the hierarchy in his deep desire to free people from ecclesiastical despotism; Christ is majestic, as he waves his hand and stills the storm; Christ is glorious, as he stands on Hermon's heights, dimming, by his own effulgence, the glory of the law and more than fulfilling the brightest vision of the prophets. But Christ is omnipotent when he dies on the cross, the just for the unjust, and in that mighty act of condescending grace places the leverage of infinite love on the fulcrum afforded by the obvious fact of a sinful humanity and lifts men out of the miry pit, and sets them upon a rock, and puts a new song into their mouths, and establishes their goings!"

Dr. Rice tells about "The Old-Time Circuit Rider," and the glorious early days of American Methodism. His article is interesting and inspiring in its description of the men of those first days, and their splendid achievements. In its deductions there is much of value; if only our present-day preachers would heed and profit thereby. The Doctor says of them: "Like their Master, they went about all their days trying to give themselves away. If the essence of oratory be the actual moving of the human will, they were great orators, for they could not be surpassed in bringing men face to face with the issues of life and death and forcing decisions. They would picture the sinner "hair-hung and breeze-shaken over the bottomless pit," until he would fall paralyzed with terror and cry aloud for mercy or sink away trembling to fight it out alone." And again: "They were not tax gatherers, spending one-fourth of their time or more collecting money. And they did not have to prepare two formal sermons a week for wooden men and women who were too much occupied with other thoughts and things to apply the truth which they tried to give them." And this: "The average Sunday service is now so formal and stiff that nobody expects conversions. Probably the only religious word that is said in nine out of ten of the average church meetings is said by the pastor. There is little heart-to-heart fellowship among members and no effort to help anybody into the kingdom. And if an earnest seeker after God is courageous enough to venture in and join the church, he is received formally, enrolled, and turned loose to go on as he fore, no man apparently caring for his soul. What, therefore, is church membership to the average man or woman, outside of its social advantages? And if the outcasts should come it would be exceedingly embarrassing, both for them and for the members." Just one more extract: "Their preaching was always vital. There was but little about Christ, about religion; it was Christ, it was religion in its heart's core. It was not simply the Bible; it was the things the Bible was made out of. And the message had a man behind it, an heroic personality transparent to all. They knew what was going on back of the guns. They could see behind the breastworks. Nothing is a sermon that does not bring results, visible or invisible; and nothing delivered in His name that does, is less than a sermon. Measured by this standard, they were without peers in the annals of the American Church."

In a late St. Louis Advocate, Rev. Joseph King says: "This scribe was in Wichita, Kans., a few weeks ago and spent the Sabbath in that flourishing city on the Arkansas River; and, while there is no Southern Methodist Church in that place, our Methodist proclivities led us to worship in a Methodist Episcopal Church. When the preacher announced his text, it almost took our breath. It was Psalms ix, 17: 'The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.' The sermon that followed was to the point. The trumpet gave no uncertain sound." Times have changed, and conditions are vastly different from what they were, but human nature has not changed, and men to-day, as of old, are utterly lost—"dead in trespasses and sins"—and must needs be thoroughly awakened by the preaching of the Law, that they may be saved by the gracious provisions of the Gospel: both the righteous Law of God and the Gospel of Infinite Love, "saving to the uttermost," must be set before them. The people would be amazed in many a church of to-day were their pastor to announce as his text that which the Kansas preacher took, or some other text like it.

Brothers Parker and Carter are right in their insisting on the more frequent preaching of the atonement, and that men are saved only at the cross; but the ground must be well broken by the preaching that rouses the conscience and makes men fall at the cross for mercy and salvation through the blood of Christ. During the first year of his ministry, this writer heard that saintly man, Bishop E. M. Marvin, preach from this text: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus, let him be Anathema Maran-atha." Sinai aflame, the warnings, threatenings and exhortations of God's word, the certainty of "a bed in hell" at last for all who will not "love the Lord Jesus Christ" were plainly, fully, and with a force and energy of thought and expression born of the Holy Ghost, set before his hearers. Then, convinced, smitten, and bleeding at every pore under the red-hot truth, his convicted audience, in words of such tenderness and pitiful compassion that they seemed like the very heart-beats of Infinite Love, were told of Him who is able "also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." Perhaps a hundred souls were at the altar that night, and many found peace in believing. That sermon was owned of God. He put the broad signature of approval upon the words of his faithful servant, who, taught of him, had spoken plain, pointed Bible truths.

Marvin said of the early itinerant: "Ah! these men knew where the conscience lay, and with what probe to touch the quick of it. Then, when a man fell thunder-stricken among the crags of Sinai, with what skill they lifted him and laid him at the foot of the cross, under the stream that drops warm and healing from the very heart of the Victim, who 'tasted death for every man.' Themselves knew his power to save. A free salvation—a full salvation, conditioned upon faith—that was their theme. Sin they pictured in all its blackest hue, and salvation in all its richest fullness, its present plentitude and power." In the glorious work of soul-saving, we preachers of to-day can scarcely improve upon the early itinerants and Bishop Marvin.

CONFERENCE ECHOES.

By Rev. Roht. B. Downer.

Brookhaven, Miss., was often in my thoughts, as the fall months were expiring. Would I once more be privileged to meet in Conference session at that place? I took it to the Lord in prayer, and Dec. 7, though quite feeble to walk, my prayers were answered. Several times within the past half century Brookhaven has been pleased to act as Conference host.

Some few will recall the November session, and Thanksgiving occasion, right after the close of the Civil War. Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D.D., was appointed to make the Thanksgiving address. He arose from his seat, approached a supporting column, and as the floodtide of memory rushed back over the early sixties, he leaned his shoulder upon the column as if unable to stand alone; for some minutes he seemed oblivious of the place and occasion; then with face elevated, looking into the faces of many battle-scarred auditors, remarked: "Yes, I suppose that we of the South ought to feel thankful; yet, as we remember the desolation of our fair Southland—the untimely graves—the burned homes, the desecrated church buildings—the disfranchisement of heroes—the violation of constitutional rights, it is mighty hard, brethren, to feel it; yet, we must be glad that if our homes have been consumed by fire—we still have the ashes—though our slaves are free—horses, mules, stolen, or dead; yet the grass grows, and springs of water flow. Glory to God! the Lord is yet alive." His face became illumined with heavenly radiance, our hearts were touched and thrilled with hope of the future, and upon this writer's mind, a most glorious Thanksgiving occasion was recorded. How marked the contrast of that Thursday with the Thursday of 1909, when the Conference, as a body, partook of the royal banquet at the College hall provided by Layman B. E. Brister and President J. W. Cooper, D.D., of Whitworth College.

A few thoughts about the Conference session. Possibly it may be unavoidable to devote so large a portion of time to routine business, the making of reports about material things, and allowing such small portion for special effort to grow in grace, for the preachers, and opportunity to save souls attracted to the place by the convocation of so many consecrated ministers of God.

For years I have desired and sought for a Pentecostal session—surcharing every minister and layman present with the Holy Ghost. Will it ever occur? Will we ever hear a presiding Bishop, at the opening hour make an address somewhat like this: "Brethren, my soul is overwhelmed with the awful responsibility abiding upon my office—as a chief shepherd—an example unto the flock. Recently I have been ushered into the presence of the High and Holy One that inhabits eternity, I have been stripped of all earthly ambitions, a live coal has touched my lips, I have surrendered all, and have the witness of God's Spirit with mine, that all is upon God's altar a living sacrifice. I am painfully conscious that heretofore I have been content to live an average Christian life; no doubt that some good, as men see it, has been accomplished; yet, at the same time, the reservations indulged in have hindered the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. I have crossed the Rubicon, and this morning the bridges behind me are burned. I stand before you helpless in all that appertains to me as an individual. I need your spiritual help. I want this Conference session to be memorable on account of the Divine presence manifested. We all need a closer walk with God; won't you join me in spending a half hour on our knees, right now, in silent and agonizing self-examination and prayer, that our hearts may be prepared for the out-pouring of all the fullness of God, that he may overrule all of our mistakes and shortcomings, which have proved hindrances to the coming of God's kingdom, and give unto us wisdom, tact, consecration and the spirit of love, to perform the duties now before us, and to make our presence in this town and the homes where we abide as guests an everlasting benediction? And if any brother has not the witness to entire sanctification of soul, body, spirit, time and talents unto the Lord Jesus Christ, let him resolve not to take another appointment as an ambassador of God until filled with all the righteousness of God. Brethren, let others do as they may, but as for me and my house, in the future, we will, without any reservations, serve God."

Yes, no doubt, to many it would be a surprise, possibly a few might have fears of collapse of the brain, but if it ever occurs after I am at home in "bright mansions above" I will try my best to start "the heaven bells" a ringing and have the angelic choir join in singing the long metre Doxology, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

I greatly enjoyed the privilege given me by President Cooper and Sister Lipscomb of giving the college girls a heart-to-heart talk about a mother's consecration of a son, her strong faith in God's promises, her remarkable prayers and God's replies. And then of that son's long service as an itinerant preacher, and his present joys and hopes of future life. While about the outer room one day, my old time Christian brother, Rev. J. W. Sandell, pressed into my right hand as a gift his booklet, "The United States in Scripture," asking that I read it. This I have done, and while I am not convinced that the symbolical teachings of the Book of Revelation have their fulfillment as Brother Sandell thinks, I nevertheless realize that just at this period of our country's existence, while the dominant political pressure is directed to attain to a centralized government, it is well to be reminded of the State's prerogatives that are guaranteed in the original Constitution of the United States of America. Brother Sandell clearly and in most able manner gives valuable data that all young citizens will do well to obtain. Address Brother Sandell, Magnolia, Miss., and enclose 25 cents.

Did you hear that memorable talk of Rev. J. A. B. Jones Dec. 8th? Surely he was "brushing the dew of Jordan's banks—the crossing was quite near." His sudden exit snaps another earthly tie binding me to this life. Since 1855 we have loved each other with a love increasing as the years have rolled by. His precious father, John G. Jones, in 1858, opened my eyes to the need of a fully consecrated life. May the hallowed lives of father and son abide in our Conference as an inspiration and hallowed heritage.

STUDENT VOLUNTEER CONVENTION.

By Rev. Osmond Lewis.

The Sixth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement was held in Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1909, to Jan. 2, 1910. The total number of delegates present was 3624. Of this number, 2678 were students and 329 were professors and teachers, representing 722 different institutions of learning in the United States and Canada. There were also present 165 missionaries.

This movement is interdenominational as well as international, and has for its watchword "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation." These conventions are held every four years, the last before the one at Rochester being held in Nashville in 1906.

With that master of assemblies, John R. Mott, as chairman, there is always a highly interesting and greatly beneficial program arranged. And there is never any confusion or disorder in carrying out the program, which, by the way, is never published beforehand.

Having been present at the Nashville Convention, I was enabled to better understand and appreciate the merits of the Rochester Convention. It proved to be the most notable of all the conventions in many important respects. There was not a dull moment during the five days of its duration. Long before the opening hour the Convention Hall was filled to its utmost capacity at each session. A spirit of intense earnestness was a characteristic of the gathering, little or no time being taken for sight-seeing, pleasure-seeking, receptions, or anything apart from the main object in view. No Whitworth banquet or Brookhaven photographer could have allured that body of delegates from a single session. For more than thirty minutes before the hour of opening hundreds of expectant people would throng the steps and sidewalks, waiting for the doors to open. North, East, South and West were there together, with one common purpose—yea, all the ends of the earth were brought together in a way that no one could tell but that all were from the same place and belonged to the same denomination. Whatever the place from which each came, there was a movement to one common end.

The key-note of the convention was expressed in the opening song: "Come, thou Almighty King." Mr. Mott stated the object of the meeting, viz: "The making of Jesus Christ known to the whole world: giving to all men the opportunity to know the living and sufficient Christ."

The addresses by the various speakers were all good, some better, but it was hard to tell which was best. Among the speakers was Mr. Sherwood Eddy of India, who, in a forceful, heart-searching manner, spoke on the subject, "Is Our Christianity Worth Propagating," with the emphasis on "our"—or is the Christian experience we have worth passing on? Mr. Robert E. Speer left no doubt that Christianity is sufficient to meet all the needs of all men, as he spoke on "The Value of Christianity." God be praised for an all-sufficient Christ!

Time would fail me to tell of all the good things seen, and heard, and felt. Dr. Arthur J. Brown spoke on "The Changing Conditions in the Orient." Bishop Hartzell made a stirring appeal for Africa. Dr. Zwemer, of Arabia, is perhaps the most convincing speaker. He has a clear knowledge of the situation in the Near East—"The Impending Conflict Between Christianity and the Mohammedan Religion."

But, perhaps, no appeal made such a profound impression as did that of Robert E. Speer, who spoke on "The Spiritual Claims of South America Upon the United States and Canada." The most neglected mission field is the most needy.

One notable feature of the convention was the address by Ambassador James A. Bryce. The urgency and immediacy of evangelizing the world was the burden of his message. Speaking of the heathen's need of the Gospel, he said: "It is needed now, at this precious, this critical moment." "The greatest hindrance," he says, "to the spread of the Gospel abroad is the imperfect power which it exerts at home," and here he spoke of the contrast between the standard of Christian life the New Testament gives, and which we all profess to accept, and the faint efforts we make to reach it. In keeping with the idea of the urgency and immediacy of the task, Mr. Mott spoke on the meaning of the watchword, urging that it be a personal watchword, that it may become a power, and enrich and widen one's sympathies. The emphasis is laid on "this generation," which makes the watchword intensive. It makes us in earnest and strikes a death-blow to apathy, indifference and carelessness. It makes us men of vision; wherein difficulties and death become mere details.

Other impressions were received, but space forbids relating them. But I must mention some impressions of the last, the great day of the convention. Bishop McDowell preached the principal sermon on the subject, "The Highly Multiplying Possibilities of Obedience to God." I will not try to describe that sermon. It pulsed with life in every sentence, while the heavens were rent and the soul flooded with the glory light. "Incarnating the Visions" was the subject of the last speaker, Mr. Eddy, and our hearts were deeply moved as there appeared, first, the vision of our own needs, and second, the vision of a needy world, and last, the vision of Jesus Christ.

With the singing by the Male Quartette of the song, "Still, Still With Thee," and a season of silent prayer (a marked characteristic of the convention), the convention closed. It was with reluctance that we left the hall now made sacred by the presence and power of God, who, during these days, had called hundreds into his great service and fellowship. The convention tested and found true the assertion made by Christ many years ago: "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me."

IS IT RIGHT?

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

The custom prevails in the Methodist Church, South, to endow the schools for young men, but to place less endowment, and in some instances none at all, upon the schools for young ladies. It is contended that at the girls' schools many "extras" are taught, such as piano music, art, expression, voice, stringed instruments, etc., so that the cost for educating young ladies is so great that the colleges for them can live without endowment, while the young men do not pay enough to sustain a college without endowment.

All this is equivalent to remarking that the girls and young ladies of the country can support a college and educate themselves without endowment, but that the boys and young men cannot or do not, and must, therefore, have assistance, and this, too, when probably the same parent who sustains the girl is also back of the boy, and if no parent sustains either one, it is suggested that the girl can educate herself, but that the boy cannot, or will not, without assistance.

Good it is to endow the colleges for young men, but justice would say: "If the girl must support the college without endowment, let the boy do likewise." His board and tuition should be placed at figures that would enable the college to live. The red, savage Indian rides his pony or fiery war horse, but his "squaw" must walk and carry the luggage.

Civilized people provide nice homes for their wives and daughters, and the best means of conveyance. But is the Church civilized in the true and highest sense that provides schools for boys and men and compels the girls and young ladies to educate themselves at heavy expense without the benefits of an endowed institution?

Such a method is a reflection upon the manhood of the young men, and places a premium upon light expense for them, and large expense and heavy burdens for the young ladies.

Such a procedure, too, is un-American, and smacks of defective chivalry. If a difference must occur, the finer buildings and larger endowments, with lightest possible expense, should be given to the girls' schools.

When such a plan is adopted, money will be less difficult to find for the colleges, and the young men of the Methodist schools will be better satisfied and the young ladies will have increased regard for the management.

It is stated in the Youth's Companion that the stature of American women is increasing. While the increase in height has doubtless gone on steadily for 50 years, measurements have altered more appreciably in the last decade. We are by no means sure that this last conception is not more nearly in accord with the facts.

He was an author of distinction, having written several books dealing with constitutional subjects and history, and had been accorded many political honors by his fellow-countrymen. He was a member of the Hague Court of Arbitration, and at one time was minister at the Court of St. James. It is customary when a diplomat in the public service dies at the national capital to convey his body home in an American warship as an evidence of respect and esteem.

MEETING OF THE MANSFIELD COLLEGE BOARD OF TRUSTEES. A meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Mansfield College was held in Mansfield, Jan. 18, 1910. The reports from over the State showed less than $500 received to date as results of Mansfield Day. After settling some small bills that were pressing, the President was instructed to apply all moneys received from Mansfield Special to the interest of S. G. Sample's note. The resignation of Mr. A. F. Jackson, who had been connected with the Board for twenty-five years, was read and reluctantly accepted owing to Brother Jackson's ill health. The Secretary was instructed to tender to Brother Jackson the thanks of the Board for his valuable service.

On motion of C. B. Hicks and seconded by H. T. Liverman, the following resolution was adopted: That the Presiding Elders of the Louisiana Conference urge the pastors at the several stations, circuits and missions to present the claims of the Mansfield College until every Methodist congregation in the State has been given an opportunity to contribute to the Mansfield Special ordered by the Bishop Honda, of the Methodist Church, of Japan, will attend the General Conference at Asheville and the World's Sunday School Convention in Washington City.

At the recent Student Volunteer Convention, Dr. John R. Mott took up a collection of $85,000 in twenty minutes. This amount was given principally by undergraduate students.

A writer in Zion's Herald speaks of Dr. Wilbur Chapman as an evangelist "without a club for the church or adverse criticism for the pastor." May his tribe speedily increase!

The North Georgia Conference has 115,000 members. It is in size second only to the Northwest Texas Conference, which the approaching General Conference has been asked to divide.

The Cuban Mission Conference convened in Santiago on Jan. 14, with Bishop Candler in the chair. Others from the States in attendance were Dr. A. J. Lamar, Dr. W. W. Pinson and Dr. J. D. Hammond.

The Wesley Memorial congregation of Atlanta are expecting to occupy their commodious and handsome new building about April 1. This is perhaps the largest and best equipped institutional church in Southern Methodism.

Dr. H. F. Sproles, the best loved Baptist preacher in Mississippi, will supply the First Baptist Church of Jackson, now without a pastor, until one is secured. He was many years ago the highly-esteemed shepherd of that flock.

It is reported that Dr. Len G. Broughton, the well known Baptist minister of Atlanta, has been nominated by the officials of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, for their pulpit. Whether he will accept this call from over the seas is not yet known.

The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, of New York city, has just called Rev. Henry Jowett, of England, to their pastorate at a salary of $12,000 and a parsonage, or a total of $17,000. This is said to be the largest sum ever paid a pastor in America.

Bishop W. A. Quayle, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is announced to lecture at the St. Charles Avenue Church, of that denomination, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 2, at 8 p. m. "Faith" will be his theme, and those who attend will doubtless hear an interesting and eloquent discussion.

On last Friday evening the New Orleans Branch of the Seamen's Friend Society celebrated its fiftieth anniversary with a fitting program at the Bethel, on St. Thomas street. The parent organization was founded in 1822, and covers the whole United States, having many fine homes in the various seaports. None but seamen are cared for, and many wealthy church people contribute to the work.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of Long Beach, Miss., are busily engaged in gathering material for the furnishing of the new parsonage which is to be built. The Society has decided to hold its meetings during the year at the homes of its members, taking them in alphabetical order. By these meetings it is hoped to foster sociability and good fellowship among the women of the church.

Methodism has had three Ecumenical Conferences. The first was held in London in 1881, the second in Washington City, 1891, and the third in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, London, in 1901. It was at the last Conference that the peerless Charles B. Galloway, in the presence of the representatives of all the Methodist bodies of the world, delivered the memorable opening sermon. The next Ecumenical Conference, for which the program is now being arranged, will assemble in Toronto, Canada, in the fall of 1911.

By action of their last General Conference, Thursday, Jan. 27, has been set apart in the Methodist Episcopal Church as the day when prayer is to be made throughout the entire connection for their colleges. These institutions have in them between 55,000 and 60,000 students, and from them have come 61 per cent. of those sent to the foreign field by the parent board of missions of our Sister Church within the past five years.

There are two centers of Mormonism in the United States: one at Salt Lake City and the other at Independence, Mo. The first is the capital of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, and the other is the headquarters of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints. These two sects are by no means in accord, but, on the contrary, there is not a little hostility existing between them. The Utah branch is about twice as large as the other, but the latter seems to be somewhat more in the line of apostolic succession, its official head being Joseph Smith, the venerable son of the original founder of Mormonism. It is said that the Reorganized Church has grown rapidly during the past ten years. This is regrettable, since Mormonism of any kind is a shameful reproach to our American civilization.

THE DALLAS LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE.

Dallas, Tex., Jan. 20.—Nine committees are busily engaged in preparing for the Conference in Dallas Feb. 19-22 of the Laymen of the Southern Methodist Church. It is believed that the out-of-town attendance will not be less than four thousand. Of this number, the greater part will be business men, representative of the entire South.

Judge W. B. Stubbs of Nashville, Tenn., leader of the Laymen's Movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been in close conference with the local committeemen and has advised them to expect one of the largest representative gatherings ever had in Dallas. Judge Stubbs is now on the Eastern Coast, where he is advertising the Convention to be held at Dallas. Also, in the way of advertising a great deal of literature is being mailed from Dallas, much of it from the Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

Arrangement has been made for a gigantic barbecue to be served Saturday evening, the opening night of the conference, in the Fair Park Auditorium. At this barbecue bankers, lawyers, farmers, bishops, artisans, presiding elders, doctors and all interested in the Conference will dine together on a common basis, and it is expected that the occasion will be one of the happiest of the entire conference. Immediately preceding the barbecue there will be a reception, at which it is hoped to introduce the delegates to one another.

Sunday morning the pulpits of Dallas Churches will be occupied by visiting laymen. In the afternoon, at the Fair Park Auditorium, Geo. R. Stuart, former associate with Sam Jones, and one of the most prominent platform speakers in America, will address a meeting for men only. His subject will be "Strong Men and the Need of the Hour." In the evening the pulpits will again be filled by prominent visitors.

It is contemplated that a special meeting for women will be held Sunday afternoon in one of the local churches, with Prince T. H. Yun, a member of the Korean Imperial family and at present the head of a Korean Methodist College, and Dr. Lambuth, one of the missionary secretaries of the Southern Church, as the principal speakers.

"THE OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFE TIME."

Great things are in store for all those who avail themselves of the opportunity of attending one or more of the great conventions now being held throughout the United States.

Have you seen the account of the Convention just closed at Greensboro, N. C.? If not, it will pay you to look it up and read of the wonderful effect which it had upon the men who attended; better still, make it a point to attend the convention to be held in your own State within the next month—Jackson, Miss., Feb. 8-10; New Orleans, La., Feb. 12-15—you will always be thankful for having attended.

In 1908 my pastor insisted that I should attend the Conference in Chattanooga, Tenn., April 21-23; at first I thought very little about going, but later on, having been elected as a delegate, I decided to go, and since that time I have had a different view of things pertaining to my Master's work, and take pleasure in doing anything that I can for His cause.

I desire to urge upon those who were elected delegates to the biennial Conference to be held in Dallas, Tex., Feb. 19-22, the importance of attending. In the first place you were selected as men who could be depended upon to attend the Conference; second, as men who are competent to bring something away from the Conference to be distributed among your friends; and then, it is your duty to go, because of the importance of your presence; both from a personal and religious point of view. GO! and if you are dissatisfied with your investment call on me and I will pass around the hat and return you your expense money, even paying for your lost time.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement is now entering upon its third year as a factor in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Have we accomplished as much as it was our privilege to accomplish? If not, and surely we have not, let us resolve to take advantage of every opportunity for its advancement during 1910.

When you are at either Convention, Jackson, New Orleans, Dallas, look around until you have found the ugliest little man there, then make it a point to get around and speak to him, it will be me. I want to shake hands with you all.

Pray for me that I may do just the things which our Master has laid out for me to do.

WHY ARE CONVERSIONS FEW?

The statement has recently been published that conversions are comparatively few in Protestant churches, and are becoming fewer still with each passing year. This complaint does not proceed from unreasonable and censorious critics, but from wise and good men whose word is entitled to great weight.

Does not careful observation prove that much less attention is being devoted to the conversion of sinners now than in former years, and that conversions are not so frequent as they formerly were? Is it not possible that Christians are losing interest in the conversion of sinners?

Many interests now engage the attention of ministers and churches. We are building and endowing educational institutions. We have several great publishing houses, from which we are sending out millions of pages of religious literature every year to bless the world. We have many strong organizations for the collection and disbursement of millions annually for religious purposes. We have an immense young people's organization, into which many thousand young men and women are being gathered for discipline and training for future usefulness. To all these Christian institutions and enterprises we say, God speed!

But it is possible that these may divert the attention of the Church from the chief object of its mission. The early Christians devoted their energies almost exclusively to the one aim of winning souls for Christ. The early Methodist Church sought one thing, the conversion of sinners. Those heroic ministers and laymen did not think of pleasing men or building a colossal ecclesiastical structure for their own glory. They preached, exhorted, sang, prayed, traveled, and toiled for the conversion of sinners. We cannot throw off the new burdens and responsibilities of these later days, but we must not lose sight of the conversion of souls.

We hear it whispered sometimes that a man can be a good man without conversion. What is the need of conversion? Can we not build up Zion and extend the borders of the kingdom of God and do good among men more effectually and more intelligently without conversions than with them?

According to the Scriptures, the conversion of the soul is the greatest and most important change that can take place in the history of a human being. It is a change of conduct, a change in the relation of the soul to God, a change of character, a change of heart.

The unconverted man is traveling his own way downward to perdition. When he is converted, he turns about, faces the opposite direction, and walks in God's way upward toward heaven. Some men who make no religious profession seem to be so good that one can hardly see where there is any need of conversion in their case. It is said that they are all right. Christianity has done wonders for many in Christian lands who have not united with Christian churches.

If a man is all right, his heart is right as well as his outward conduct. His heart is right with God as well as with his wife and children. He lives to please God as he lives to please his wife. If this is the case, he is a Christian, whether he can point to the time and place of conversion or not. But if he does not live to please God, he must be born again before he can see the kingdom of God, no matter how beautiful his outward conduct may be.

This work of grace is an absolute necessity. There is no other way to save a soul from sin, no other way to pull down the strongholds of wickedness and reform and purify the social order. The institutions of society will never be Christianized except as the individuals who compose society are converted to God.

Many reasons for the dearth of conversions may be given. Christian people do not expect nor desire the conversion of sinners as they should. When church members really expect and earnestly desire this thing it will not be long before they shall witness the desire of their hearts. Much of the preaching of this day is not calculated to produce conversions. The craze for entertainment and excitement in the Church cripples its energies. We do not need entertainment, but worship; we do not need sensational excitement, but spiritual excitement.

Conversions are hindered by coldness and worldliness in the Church. "I pray not that Thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldst keep them from the evil." This is the prayer which Jesus offered for His disciples. He foresaw the danger. If there is one door left ajar, the world will enter and tarnish the beautiful garments of the saints. Covetousness, selfishness, envy, dishonesty, impurity in the Church will bar the way to the throne of grace and to the hearts of sinners. Let Church members and ministers who have backslidden in heart repent and confess their faults one to another, and pray for one another. Then the husbandman who went forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall return with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.—Dr. J. M. Buckley, in the New York Christian Advocate.

WISE WORDS OF AN EMINENT MAN.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, the president of Leland Stanford University, and a scholar of national reputation, delivered an address in the assembly hall of Tulane University of this city a few days ago. His theme was "The Call of the Twentieth Century," and he both pleased and deeply impressed the overflowing audience which greeted him.

From The Times-Democrat we appropriate the following account of the distinguished speaker's notable utterance:

"Democracy is a scheme whereby a man who can do anything well can find a chance to do what he can do. It does not mean equality; this is a cruel century, and the men who are worthless are trodden down and thrown out.

"There can be no actual equality, the only place there is equality is in the absence of possession. By common sense, there can be only equality before the law.

"Therefore I advise young men to become the best possible in anything they try to do. The aim of schools and universities is to help fit the young man to become proficient in anything that he intends to do."

Dr. Jordan answered the question of what the call of the century really was, "The great demand will be for skill; only men who know how to do things will be needed; there is plenty of room for those who are energetic, for those who have backbone; good men never crowd each other." The speaker said he sometimes thought about one-third of the young men were not wanted in the world, whereas all the rest were badly needed. He said the influence of the self-made man will lessen, that a university training will be almost a necessity for a successful career in nearly any branch of life.

Dr. Jordan named character as a great demand of this new century. That the call is not for men who are only brilliant, but for men who know how, and have the added sincerity and conscientiousness.

"The temper of the country is against graft; young men are fighting it hardest and they will have affairs done in the right and honest way. Every one of the so-called Sunday school virtues has a great influence on business success. Every virtue means money in a man's pocket. The secret of success, in a large measure, is the cultivation of such virtues as truth, kindness, sobriety, fellowship, charity.

Another demand of the century is for hopeful men. The meanest day is the conflux of two eternities. Think yourself worth while and do the best you can on every day. Be certain of your fate and master of your soul is a most important advice."

President Jordan pointed out that a final demand of the new century was for men of sober mind. He said that already railroads, steamship companies, banks and large dry goods stores were the greatest agencies toward temperance, and that they would not employ a dissipated man. They found that their brains could not be counted on and that the use of stimulants made men ineffective in their work.

As a final word, the speaker gave this view: "Have an ideal, and make it your primary duty to try to live and so mold your life that you may make the ideal become the actual in yourself."

SIGNS OF A REVIVAL.

"What are the elements of readiness for a revival?" was asked of a great evangelist. He replied:

"First of all, concern on the part of ministers—a universal concern—for a great revival. Second, the attitude of the laymen. Third, overwhelming and clear evidence that men are sick of sin, and want to get right and lead better lives. I have noticed particularly that when men are sick of sin a very sharp, frank statement about sin is always responded to and appreciated. People who live in sunshine are apt to gloss over the fact of sin, to minimize it, and the response to a sharp, uncompromising denunciation of sin—if followed with the proclamation of the gospel—has been most remarkable. Our need is to have a new conscience about sin created. And to carry on that work of quickening the conscience we need to be perfectly fair and honest with the people, never be afraid to tell them where they are wrong, and always show them the way out."—Michigan Christian Advocate.

THE CLEAN MOUTH.

A distinguished author says: "I resolved when a child never to use a word which I could not pronounce before my mother." He kept his resolution, and became a sure-minded, noble, honored gentleman. His rule and example are worthy of imitation by every boy.

Boys readily learn a class of low, vulgar words and expressions which are never heard in respectable circles. Of course, we cannot imagine a decent girl using words she would not utter before her father, or teacher, or most esteemed friend.

Such vulgarity is thought by some boys to be "smart," the next thing to "swearing," and yet "not so wicked." But it is a habit which leads to profanity, and fills the mind with evil thoughts. It vulgarizes and degrades the soul, and prepares the way for many of the gross and fearful sins which now corrupt society.

"The astronomer can tell us how far it is from each star to the earth, but no human being can calculate the effect of a kind word or a kind deed. The monuments of granite and bronze will crumble into dust, but there is a monument which endures—it is the lasting influence which heart exerts upon heart."—W. J. Bryan.

STICK TO IT.

Henry Ide, who was appointed governor-general of the Philippine Islands by President Roosevelt, has what he calls a one-rule course of conduct for a successful life. It reads like this:

"If you make a good resolution—stick to it.

"If you have a good thought—stick to it.

"If you have a worthy friendship—stick to it.

"If you have an ambition—stick to it.

"If you have a good book—stick to it.

"If you have a hard task—stick to it.

"If you want more friends—stick to it.

"If you have anything to do—stick to it.

Which, when they are all summed, get into the one small sentence:

"Stick to it."

THE BIBLE WITH PINS IN IT.

It was an old Bible, a family Bible, a well-worn Bible—the Bible of an old lady who read it, and walked by it, and fed on it, and prayed over it, for a long life time. As she grew older and older, her sight began to fall, and she found it hard to find her favorite verses. But she could not live without them so what did she do? She stuck a pin in one of them, one by one, and after her death they counted one hundred and sixty-eight. When people went to see her, she would open her Bible, and, feeling over the page after her pin, would say: "Read there," or "Read here," and she knew pretty well what verse was stuck by that pin and what by this pin. She could say of her precious Bible, "I love thy commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold. They are sweeter to me than honey and the honey-comb."—Exchange.

"OUR MINISTER'S WIFE."

1. Don't criticize her.
2. Don't grumble if she visits two or three families in the congregation more than others. She has as much right to special friends as you have.
3. Don't expect her to do her share of work and yours, too.
4. Don't expect her to do things you are too shy or too nervous to do yourself. Marrying a minister does not endow her with special gifts of speech and freedom from nervousness, though it does bring special opportunities.
5. Remember that the duties to her husband and children, and her home are just as important as yours.
6. Remember to speak kindly of her to others.
7. Remember to pay her short, cheery visits, and take her a bunch of your choicest flowers.
8. Remember to pray for her.

HER FRIEND.

There is nothing like a staunch friend. At a "home" in the country which the children of the slums are allowed to visit for a short term in the summer the following incident occurred. A party of a hundred of the youngsters were on their way back to the city. The attendant noticed that one of the girls, Rosie, was walking clumsily. When the attendant heard a chorus of gibes all aimed at little Rosie, she saw that the girl was wearing a pair of shoes of large size. Then the attendant remembered that Rosie had had a new pair of shoes, and the little girl was asked about it.

"Well," said Rosie, "you see, the shoes ain't mine. They're Katie's. I know they're awful big; but her mother ain't had any work lately, so she couldn't buy her a new pair. She just gave her own shoes to Katie. Katie felt awful bad about it, and cried all the way to the station. The girls all laughed at her. So I just lent her my new ones and took hers. You see, teacher," said Rosie, raising her eyes to the attendant's face. Katie's my friend."—New York Tribune.

HOW TO TREAT YOUR SISTER.

It is the easiest thing in the world for a boy to be kind to some other fellow's sister. Why is it that some of them find it so hard to remember to be equally courteous to their own sister? Many a boy is rude to his sister without really realizing it; in other words, he forgets to be polite. Then, again, he is afraid of being dubbed as "sissy" if he should be caught paying some attention to his sister. It is a bad habit for any one to get into—that of saving one's polite ways for outside.

If she asks you a question, don't answer her in a rude or careless manner, as if you thought she did not know what she was talking about, and wasn't worth listening to.

Don't tease her and make fun of her in a way to hurt her feelings. You won't do that to some other girl.

You can depend on the boy who is kind and thoughtful to his own sister, for you may be sure he will develop into the right sort of a man, and is bound to win the respect and admiration of every one.—Sel.

AS VAIN AS A PEACOCK.

I venture to send you some curious particulars about the behavior of a young peacock that is kept here. The bird began by sedulously frequenting the stableyard, and, whenever the carriage was brought out of the coach-house, he would take his stand by it, and gaze at his reflection in the panels. He then took to accompanying the carriage up to the house, and, standing beside it, at the front door, engaged in self-contemplation. He now runs behind the carriage when it starts from the house, down to a certain point of the drive, apparently in the hope that it may stop, and allow him to continue his favorite occupation. But he seems to conclude at a certain place that the case is hopeless, though, if the carriage halts further down the drive, he will rejoice it, and resume his observations.

It occurred to us to wonder what he would do, if a looking-glass were placed on the lawn. This was accordingly done, and he at once found it out. Nothing will induce him to quit it. He will stand by it for hours together. At first he occasionally looked inquisitively behind the glass at intervals to see if a bird was actually present, but he has given this up now. He stands in front of it, entirely absorbed, often motionless for a long time, occasionally moving his head gently up and down, and sometimes softly touching the glass with his bill, appearing slightly bewildered by the contact. If food is thrown to him, he takes no notice unless it is close to the glass, when he will hurriedly gobble it up and return to his more congenial employment in haste, as though vexed at being interrupted. If the glass is taken into the drawing room, which is on the ground floor looking into the garden, he will enter the room by door or window, find the glass, and continue his favorite pursuit; and he spends the greater part of the day at the door that leads from the drawing room into the garden, in the hope that some one may bring out his glass for him.

Meanwhile, the peahen is sitting on a nest of eggs in a hedge close at hand. He never goes near her.

his only idea being to find opportunities for contemplating his own perfections. I suppose that the proverb, "As vain as a peacock," refers to the bird's habit of spreading his tail and strutting about; but it is curious to find that this instinctive vanity lies deeper still, and is not confined to the desire to arouse the admiration of his mate, as is generally taken for granted, but is based upon a genuine complacency of his personal attractions.—Arthur C. Benson, in the Spectator.

A BAG OF HEAVY STONES.

If a boy should try to run a race with a bag of heavy stones hung over his shoulder, he could never hope to win against those who were running without any such hindrance to keep them back.

Some one has said that bad habits are like a bag of stones. Every bad habit that a boy forms, keeps him down and prevents him from doing his best. Stop your bad habits, boys, and then you will be able to run a good race in the journey of life, and will not be ashamed of your record.—Selected.

A MODERN IDOL.

Men no longer worship images of wood and stone, but they have not ceased to have their idols. Money is one of them, and of late years there has developed a disposition to deify the human intellect; to exalt it as an all-sufficient standard by which truth and righteousness are to be determined. What it approves is to be accepted, and what it considers repugnant, is to be rejected. Its competency to explore any realm and pass upon any question is assumed to be beyond dispute. Thus one frequently hears it said that an affirmation contained in the Scriptures should be accepted, not because Paul said it, or Christ said it, but because it is the truth. We admit that if a thing were known to be true, no endorsement from any source could add to its weight. But without the divine revelation to teach us, we could never be certain as to what the truth is. Men would differ and we would float forever about on a sea of conflicting opinion. In the realm of abstract truth scarcely a single problem has been settled absolutely by the human mind. Proof of this is seen in the many warring schools of philosophy which have existed in every age. And where the Bible is not clear upon any subject, as baptism for instance, religious sects have fought for centuries and are still fighting. They are no nearer in accord to-day than when the controversy began.

We honor the human intellect for what it has done. Many of its achievements have been truly glorious. It has discovered many of the laws of nature and utilized some of its most wonderful forces. "It has weighed the stars; analyzed the sun, measured the orbits of circling spheres, made ice under the equator, and caused flowers to bloom in northern winters." It has given us the steamship and the steam-car, and enabled men to converse on opposite sides of the planet. But in our admiration for its triumphs, we should not forget its limitations. The known to the unknown is like a tiny island in a shoreless ocean. Of itself, the human mind has never discovered the primary cause of anything. It has only come into possession of a few surface facts. It knows not what mind, or matter, or life, or light, or gravity, or electricity is. It stands perplexed in the presence of nature's simplest phenomena. Tennyson does not overdraw the picture when he represents man,

"An infant crying in the night,
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry."

And is it not foolish for one who cannot explain the simplest things about him to essay to write the philosophy of eternal things? Is it not silly for him to presume to sit in critical judgment upon the explicit statements of God's inspired word? Others may do as they wish, but for our part, we refuse to worship at the shrine of this newly erected idol. Its reach of vision is too limited, its note of authority too uncertain, and its vacillations too many, for us to blindly follow where it fain would lead. We prefer to be a trustful disciple of him "who spake as never man spake," and whose lofty utterances are coming more and more to be the thought of the world. In fact, to discard the Bible as the standard of righteousness and religious truth, and set the human intellect up in its stead, is about as sensible as it would be to blot the physical sun out of the heavens and endeavor to light the universe with a torch.

HISTORIC WHITWORTH.

A gentleman in a position to know remarked to us not long since that this institution is in a more satisfactory condition than it has been in for many years. This is good news; indeed, for no college in Mississippi has had a more honorable career or done more to promote the public good than Whitworth. Without noise or parade, it has gone on, decade after decade, sending out from its halls cultured young women of high Christian character. These have scattered themselves through every part of the commonwealth and made their influence felt in every community. The value of such a work is incalculable. The extent of its blessing, only the Infinite One can measure. Whitworth has felt the impress of masterful hands. Its foundation was well laid by Dr. Harvey Johnson, a preacher of eloquence, vision, and majestic mold. Those who followed—Prof. L. T. Fitzhugh, Drs. Murrah, Chambers, and Watkins—were worthy successors. But the institution was never in better hands than it is to-day. Dr. I. W. Cooper has fully demonstrated his ability as a leader and administrator, and he has associated with him a faculty admirably fitted for the work to be done in a Christian institution of learning. We hope that none of the other colleges will think we are showing partiality in writing these lines. We are interested in them all, and would make no invidious comparisons; but we do confess to quite a liking for Whitworth. Perhaps it is due to the fact that we have been itinerating with a Whitworth girl for the nineteen years we have been in the ministry.

KEEP IT IN MIND.

The first Sunday in February is Orphans' Home Day in Mississippi. We sincerely trust that the pastors, without exception, are preparing to observe it. Not one should fail to present strongly the claims of this noble institution. With concerted action, the needed funds can be raised and the necessary improvements secured. Without it, the effort will fall of success, and upon those who refuse to co-operate will largely rest the responsibility for the result. Surely, with that generous and high-minded layman, Dr. Luther Sexton, giving $10,000, and others making liberal contributions, the 100,000 Methodists of Mississippi will not delay in carrying forward this commendable and absolutely necessary enterprise.

THE DEATH OF EX-GOVERNOR LOWRY.

In the death of ex-Governor Robert Lowry, which occurred at Jackson on the 19th inst., Mississippi lost one of her most honored and distinguished sons. Coming to the State in the eighth year of his age, practically his whole life was spent upon her soil and in her service. He was known in nearly every hamlet in the commonwealth, and no man was more generally trusted or more universally loved.

The career of General Lowry was long and illustrious. In early life he had only moderate advantages and to a considerable extent had to make his own way. But, bright and self-reliant, he was quite equal to the task. Embarking first in the mercantile business, he soon read law, and located at Brandon (the starting-place of many illustrious Mississippians) for the practice of his chosen profession. Gifted with mental alertness and unusual eloquence, he rapidly forged to the front and took high rank at the bar.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and for four years followed the flag of the stars and bars. He made a brave and gallant soldier; was more than once wounded in battle, and attained to the rank of brigadier-general before the conflict ended. After the war, Governor Lowry resumed his law practice at Brandon, but his well-known gifts as a public speaker soon drew him into politics, and he was one of the most conspicuous and forceful leaders in the movement which finally overthrew the reign of "the carpetbagger" in Mississippi. In 1881, after a memorable campaign, he was elected Governor, and re-elected in 1885, and during the eight years of his incumbency in that office gave to the State one of the best administrations it has ever had.

Since his retirement from public life, General Lowry has been engaged in the practice of law at Jackson. He was also an author of note, having in association with Col. W. H. McCardle written a history of Mississippi which is highly valued, and an abridged edition of which has been taught in the public schools of the State. He was interested in giving to future generations a correct account of the part the South played in the struggle between the States; and at the time of his decease was commander-in-chief of the Mississippi Division of the United Confederate Veterans.

Personally, Gen. Lowry was a genial, affable, agreeable gentleman. He was striking in appearance and possessed many graces of bearing and manner. In his church affiliations, like so many of the eminent men of Mississippi, he was an ardent and devoted Methodist. His obsequies were conducted in the First Methodist Church at Jackson in the presence of a great concourse of people. After a beautiful and appropriate sermon by Dr. W. H. LaPrade, his remains were carried to Brandon and laid away to await the resurrection of the just.

Thus passed from the stage a historic character—a man who bore himself worthily in both peace and war, who rose from obscurity to exalted station, who wrought well and leaves behind a record without a stain. In the galaxy of great Mississippians he will have a distinct place, and long will his memory be cherished and honored.

PERSONAL.

Miss Mary Lawrence has kindly favored the Advocate with a club of subscribers from Haughton, La. We appreciate her interest and the substantial service which she has rendered.

Rev. J. W. Raper is pleased with the way his work has started off at Byhalia, Miss. He has already had thirteen additions since Conference, and is expecting more in the near future.

Rev. L. E. Wicht is in place on the Haynesville Mission, where he has been well-received and given several "poundings." He is pleasantly circumstanced, and entertains no doubt of a successful pastorate.

Bishop E. E. Hoss recently spent a Sunday in St. Louis with Dr. Theodore Copeland, and delighted large audiences with his discourses. The Bishop's health continues to improve, greatly to the rejoicing of his host of friends.

Through some of his preachers, we have heard echoes of the vigorous messages which Presiding Elder J. H. Felts is delivering throughout Aberdeen (Miss.) District. He is a man of tremendous energy and spares no effort to promote the interests of the Church.

The friends of Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, Simmesport, La., whose illness was noted recently in the Advocate, will regret to learn that he is worse. He is in the sanitarium at Alexandria, where he is being treated for nervous prostration and other complicating maladies.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix wrote beautifully of the Student Volunteer Convention, in a recent issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate. Whether he appears on the printed page or on the platform, he always has an interesting message for the public, and knows how to give it out.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, now beginning his second year at Waterproof, La., has been given many expressions of good will and esteem by his excellent flock, and is happy and hopeful in his work. The editor is grateful for his fraternal words and assurance of support.

The correspondent of the Commercial Appeal, at Jackson, usually so accurate, was in error in speaking of Dr. H. F. Sproles as the former pastor of the late ex-Governor Lowry. Dr. Sproles is an estimable gentleman, but a Baptist. Governor Lowry was a Methodist "to the manor born."

We have been pained to hear of the serious illness of Mrs. T. W. Dye, the accomplished wife of Rev. T. W. Dye, at Greenville, Miss. She has had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, but when we last heard, though still in the infirmary, she was thought to be out of danger. We wish her a speedy recovery.

A correspondent has informed us that the Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of Tunica, Miss., preached with inspirational effect at the recent preachers' meeting of the Greenville District. Rarely does he preach in any other way. Viewed from any standpoint, he is a man of majestic proportions, but the throne of his power is the pulpit.

In a personal letter recently received, Bishop Hoss, in referring to Dr. J. W. Boswell, says: "Your immediate predecessor is one of the best men that ever walked the earth. He and I pulled in the same harness for many years, and I never knew him to back a single time. To know such a man intimately is to think better of humanity."

The District Stewards of the Winona District will meet in the goodly city of Greenwood, Miss., Jan. 27-28, and at the same time and place a missionary institute will be conducted by the energetic presiding elder, Rev. E. S. Lewis. A full program has been prepared for the occasion, which promises to be both instructive and helpful.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin writes enthusiastically of the outlook in his new field at Wesson, Miss. Among other things, he says: "We have a kind and appreciative people. Congregations are large and constantly growing; the Sunday School and prayer meeting are splendid. We are inaugurating a forward movement along all lines."

Rev. W. E. Dickens, of the Shiloh charge, Mississippi Conference, has not been long in the itinerant ranks, but he has learned what many older in the service than he apparently do not know—the importance of circulating his Conference organ. We assure him of our hearty appreciation, and pray that the Advocate may be a blessing to his people.

We were delighted to receive a few days since a cordial letter from our valued friend, Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Shaw, Miss. Things are coming his way with the opening of the new year, and the prospect is bright for a speedy and substantial growth. Through his efforts, the Advocate will now find its way into a number of the best homes in the interesting town of Merigold.

The Nathaniel of the North Mississippi Conference is the Rev. A. W. Langley. Without a trace of guile, faithful and energetic, for years he has gone quietly on in his work, giving a good account of himself in every field to which he has been assigned. The New Albany circuit is blessed in having such a pastor, and the Advocate feels honored to number him among its active friends.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan has been in the city for several days looking after the publication of the minutes of the Louisiana Conference, of which he is the editor. The printing is being done by the Advocate force, and we have had the pleasure of having him much about the office. Brother Vaughan is the manager of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and expects to make a vigorous campaign for that worthy institution during the year.

Among the speakers announced for the Biennial Laymen's Conference, which is to convene at Dallas, Tex., Feb. 19-22, we note the following: Z. Z. Linton, Fernwood, Miss.; G. L. Jones, New Albany, Miss.; A. G. Norrell, Florence, Miss.; and R. R. Reid, Amite, La. These gentlemen are wide-awake on missionary matters, and we dare say that they will deliver stirring addresses at the great gathering in the Lone Star State.

We are indebted to Dr. T. C. Wier, of Starkville, Miss., for an encouraging note, accompanied with a number of familiar names to be entered on our subscription list. The North Mississippi Conference has no choice spirit than this honored veteran, who though not actively in control of a pastorate, yet abounds in good works. We hope that as the weeks go on he will see fit to make the Advocate the beneficiary of his facile pen.

Rev. J. E. Craig finds the field at Oakdale, La., difficult, but not discouraging. Brother Warlick has been with him and given the work a forward impulse. Dr. E. D. Stalsby has generously donated a building site, and plans will soon be under way to construct a commodious church.

The address of the Rev. K. A. Jones, of Sumner, Miss., though at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference he took a superannuate relation, his health is good, and he would be pleased to do some work, if the brethren think they can use him. He has been in the itinerancy for fifty-four years, but his physical vigor and strength are most remarkably preserved.

We wish to remind our friends that we publish free obituaries of only two hundred words, and that, without exception, we take them in the order in which they come. We are forced to adhere to this rule, since the space at our disposal is limited. This is fair to all, and none can justly complain. So, in sending memoirs, please carefully compute the length and make proper remittance. Of course, we make no charges for sketches of deceased ministers.

There is an evangelistic note in the discussions of the preachers of the New Orleans District which it has immensely pleased us to hear. The accomplished presiding elder puts the proper stress on spiritual religion, and in this his associates in the work are not one whit behind him. These enterprising toilers will soon begin street preaching and press the battle to the very gates of the enemy. This is the true apostolic and Wesleyan succession, and this is what we like to see.

From those drifting into the Advocate office, we have heard the work of Rev. Paul M. Brown on the Alexandria District very highly commended. He is said to spend much of his time among his preachers and makes his influence felt in every charge. We make mention of this because we believe, with Bishop Hendrix, that the presiding eldership, properly filled, is the "drive-wheel of the Church," and it pleases us to hear of men who, at the expense of personal comfort, magnify the office.

Bishop E. W. Lampton, of the A. M. E. Church, is advocating the erection by the negroes of the South at Jackson, Miss., of a monument to Bishop Charles B. Galloway. It would be a fitting thing for the colored people to honor in this manner the illustrious man, who was one of the wisest of their counsellors and truest of their friends. No one was further from believing in social equality or intermingling than he, but he had a kindly feeling for "the brother in black," and was unwilling to shut the door of hope in the face of any race.

The Hon. James Jeffries, formerly Lieutenant Governor of Louisiana, passed away at his home at Shreveport on the 18th. He was born and reared in Texas, and did not come to this state until after the surrender, but for many years he was an active participant in all of its important public affairs. He was a gallant Confederate soldier, served with distinction in the State Legislature, and for several years represented Louisiana on the Democratic National Committee. The press of the commonwealth has spoken in the highest terms of the character and career of the deceased.

Apropos of Judge Horace Harmon Lurton, the newly appointed Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, the press dispatches state that his father was, in his latter days, ordained a priest in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Judge Lurton also has good Methodist forbears, the late Rev. John W. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference, having been his uncle, the only brother of Sarah Harmon Lurton, the Judge's mother. Judge Lurton's cousins, Revs. N. B. and G. S. Harmon, are well-known members of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. A. C. Holder has located at Shreveport and will devote his entire time to evangelistic work. Brethren desiring his services may address him at that city, 1614 Fair Place. Brother Holder possesses revival gifts of an unusual order, and doubtless has chosen wisely in entering exclusively into this sphere of service. He will begin a meeting at Clarksdale, Miss., on the first Sunday in February. New Albany Station (North Mississippi Conference) is entitled to commendation for advancing the pastor's salary from $1200 to $1500. In the person of Rev. L. M. Lipscomb that organization has a strong and capable leader, who well deserves kind treatment and the best that they can do for him. There is no wiser way for a flock to show its appreciation of its shepherd in this day of expensive living than to make him easy financially.

A few days since the editor received a highly entertaining note from Rev. Robt. B. Downer, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, who is approaching his 72d birthday. Touching upon his career, he said: "The date of my admission on trial was November, 1858. My boyhood days were spent in New Orleans, and I was well known to all of the city preachers from about 1845 to within the past ten years. I have had as pastors: J. C. Keener, H. N. McTyeire and L. Parker. I am quite deaf, feeble in body, and confined to my room most of the time. Sometimes I feel inclined to write for the benefit of others, and former editors have usually given me a hearing. We wish to assure our venerable brother that in his case there will be no variation in the editorial policy of the Advocate. We shall be pleased to have messages from his pen, and we wish it were our privilege to sit at his feet and hear them from his lips."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE MINUTES.

The Minutes will be sent out this week. They go by express, charges prepaid, wherever there is an express office—otherwise they go by mail. Please let me know if your package is not promptly delivered. Sincerely, ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

Agents Appointed.

Dear Brother Meek: Please state in the Advocate that, by request of the Board of Trustees, Bishop E. E. Hoss has appointed Rev. Geo. H. Galloway and President H. G. Hawkins financial agents for Port Gibson Female College for the current year. It is believed by those interested in the welfare of this noble institution of learning that the time is at hand for a forward movement in its behalf, especially in the way of enlarging the dormitory facilities. Nearly all of the old students returned after the holidays, several new ones have matriculated, and the College is enjoying a prosperous session.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Adopted by the Methodist Sunday School of Mahon, Miss., in memory of Mrs. J. H. ECHOLS:

First—That in the death of Mrs. Echols, our Sunday School has lost a true and faithful member, and in her Christian life we have had a noble example. She was a kind, affectionate, and indulgent mother, and true in the performance of every duty.

Second—That we extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and can only point them to the One who has promised to comfort those who mourn, and to urge them to prepare for the great reunion in heaven.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be published in the New Orleans Advocate, and a copy sent to the family.

MRS. JNO. COCHRAN,
M. D. PATTERSON,
H. C. GRIER.

On the night of Dec. 20, the soul of our friend and brother, DAVID GRIFFIN ALEXANDER, left this earthly home for the one not made with hands. His death came as an awful shock to the family, and to all retiring at night in his usual health at a hotel at Gulfport, Miss., where he had gone on business, he failed to turn off the gas and was found dead next morning. The remains were brought to his home at Mentor, Miss., for burial in the family cemetery near the old homestead, and not far distant from which nearly all the years of his life has been spent, where, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, the last sad rites were administered. He was born July 16, 1857, and died Dec. 31, 1909; was married Sept. 5, 1878, to Miss Martha Breechland, which union was blessed with eight sons and five daughters, all of whom, with their mother and an only sister, Mrs. W. B. Carter, survive him. Brother Alexander joined the M. E. Church South at the age of twenty-two. This was during the pastorate of Stewart Calhoun and the presiding eldership of Charles Gillespie. Was soon after converted and called to preach, in which relation he faithfully served till the last. He also served for a number of years as steward, and was one of the leading business men of the community. In all business transactions he was implicitly trusted, and looked to as adviser by many. As a citizen he was active in all efforts to promote civic righteousness. In his church relation we love to speak of him; as a member of the church he did all in his power to live up to his vows, as steward he helped the poor, the sick and the wayward. The welfare of the pastor was his special concern. Having thus lived for two years at his home, almost we found he did not fail us on his last visit bringing a basket of supplies as a Christmas token; before leaving, led the little company of us in prayer; this was on Tuesday night before his death, our last prayer together. As a preacher, he was helpful and inspiring. Though of limited literary attainments, he had great natural ability, which, animated by the grace of God, made him a useful preacher. Devout and fervent in prayer, it seemed sometimes the Father's throne was very near. On Christmas day he preached his last sermon from John 1:9. "I have come to help me into the world, and was in the spirit and spoke of needed help to lead men to Christ in terms that showed this to be the intense desire of his heart and life. He lived his religion in the home; was fervent in the devotions, kind to his children, unchanging in his affections for his wife. Thirty-one years of wedlock tell of the battles of life fought together in devotion and helpfulness to each other. We shall miss him in the community and in the church, but it is around the family circle that he shall be missed most. At the grave, three of his life-long comrades in the ministry, and others, spoke in endearing terms of his noble Christian character. It seemed he was taken too soon, but we bow in humble submission to our Father's will, praying his blessings and sustaining grace upon the bereaved family. Follow him as he followed Christ. He is not dead, only translated, gone before us to be with the Savior.

Life's labor done, as sinks the clay,
Light from its load the spirit flies.
While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies.

R. T. PICKETT.

Miss EVA WEBB and JOHN HENRY WEBB, sister and brother, died in Minden, La., one month apart, Miss Eva on Nov. 17, and John on Dec. 19, 1909. Both became members of the Methodist Church in early childhood, and both lived consistent and holy lives. They were playmates in childhood, friends and companions in later life. For many years they came regularly to church together, sat in the same pew and walked home together after the service. Invalidism came to each about the same time, and life's plans could not mature into achievements for either. Miss Eva was an artist of skill and taste, John a gentleman of beautiful manners, a descendant of men who have done things since a broad-browed Webb stood high in the English nation four hundred years ago. Sickness marred life's possibilities for each and their lives were like a handful of unplanted seeds, a bough of unblossomed huds. The home life of both was beautiful, the piety of both not to be questioned. Both made many friends who sympathized with them in their afflictions, helped them in their sorrows, and with sad hearts followed them to their last resting place. When the end came each was prepared to go and entered into the joy of the Lord. The period of separation was not long for either, and they found father and mother and many loved ones waiting for them in the skies. Those who loved them best do not wish them back, for both possess the dearest treasure that can come to man, namely, immortality, the gift of God.

E. K. MEANS.

HANNAH McARTHUR was born Oct. 31, 1896, and died at her home, in Bond, Miss., Sept. 11, 1909, after a few hours of intense suffering caused from a burn inflicted by the explosion of a can of wood alcohol. She lived a few hours, was perfectly conscious to the end and reconciled to the great change. Sad, indeed, that such a bright life should end so tragically. Hannah was a beautiful child, full of energy and was the light of her home. She was faithful to the Sunday school and Epworth League and often led smaller children to these services. She was gloriously converted at a meeting held in her home church a few months prior to her death and lived in sweet fellowship with her Savior. From her earliest childhood she gave expression to the fact that it was her purpose to become a missionary, and no doubt had she lived would have been a bright light for the kingdom of Christ in some heathen land. We cannot understand the providence of God in taking her so young and hopeful, but perhaps in her death she preached a sermon that will fill the hearts of many of her associates with the missionary spirit. God grant that it may be so. She leaves an aged father, devoted mother and two affectionate brothers to mourn her loss. Our sympathies are with them, for while they cannot call Hannah back, they can go where she is. We see her now, more beautiful than ever, as she shines in the light of God.

La Grippe Weakness

After a spell of La Grippe I was so weak and exhausted I could hardly stand. I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and was soon better in every way.

MRS. F. J. NORTON, Freeville, N. Y.

La Grippe seems to wrench every particle of vitality from its unfortunate victims. That's where the principal danger lies; because it leaves the system in a weakened condition which invites more serious diseases. During convalescence

should be taken to restore nervous energy, and overcome this weakening influence which is the most serious effect of La Grippe.

The first bottle will benefit; if not, your druggist will return your money.

GUARDING AGAINST SPURIOUS WASHINGTONIANA

The most serious work in recent years of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association of the Union, Abby Gunn Baker relates in her story of "The Preservation of Mount Vernon" in the February Century, has been the collecting of Washingtoniana—obtained mainly from Washington descendants through gift or purchase. This has been no easy task, as spurious as well as genuine relics are constantly being offered for sale to the association, and the utmost care has to be exercised in deciding upon purchases.

THE USES OF GELATINE

The uses of gelatine are many and varied. Gelatine enters into the manufacturing industries through its use in sizing straw hats, coating pills, photographic plates, making gum drops, marshmallows, and practically all penny candies. In the manufacture of ice cream gelatine is a very large factor, its use being to make the ice cream smooth and velvety, and at the same time give it a body so that it will retain its hardness until the time it is used on the table, or served at soda fountains in ice cream soda. It is essentially recommended by physicians for capsule trade, on account of its purity and at this time it might be well to add that it is very extensively used in hospitals as the best diet for convalescents.

It is, however, of its use in the home that we wish to speak at this time. As a dessert, Boston Crystal Gelatine is very easy to prepare and

New Amberol Records by Slezak

Leo Slezak, the great tenor, now sings for you in the Edison Phonograph the same famous arias from the Grand Operas that the New York audiences pay $5.00 a seat to hear. Just how great a singer Slezak is, is told in the following remark, quoted from the New York World the morning after a recent appearance of Slezak at the Metropolitan Opera House: "Caruso now has a rival."

Slezak has made ten records for the Edison, comprising the principal tenor songs from the more prominent roles of his repertoire—so that, while the New York opera goes for $5.00 a seat to hear Slezak in one opera, with the Edison Phonograph and Amberol Records you get Slezak at his best in his ten best roles, including Otello, Lohengrin, Tannhauser, Rhadames in Aida and Rodolfo in La Boheme.

Only on Amberol Records can you get a full length rendering of these great arias—and only on the Edison Phonograph do you get Amberol Records. Hear these great Slezak Records at any Edison dealer's today.

Edison Phonographs $12.50 to $200.00 Edison Amberol Records (play twice as long) $1.50
Edison Standard Records 35 Edison Grand Opera Records .75 and 1.00

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and hear the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us. National Phonograph Company, 145 Lakeside Avenue, Orange, N. J.

pleases every member of the family. contain candy recipes calling for the use of gelatine. It can be served in so many different ways that it is bound to suit every taste.

For a quick and simple dessert, a lemon, orange, or coffee gelatine makes an ideal dish. If the housewife wishes something a little more fancy she can make a prune whip, a blanc mangle, or a snow pudding, while a chocolate pudding is a dessert that will bring praise from every one sitting at the table.

When making ice cream, if gelatine is used the cream will be smoother, will freeze more quickly and will cost less money than if gelatine is not used, for the gelatine takes the place of either eggs or cream.

Gelatine used in making candies, particularly marshmallows, greatly improves the quality of the candies, and nearly all the cook books today

There is probably no other article of food which has increased in use so rapidly in recent years as gelatine, and it is safe to say that 75 per cent. of the homes in the United States are today using gelatine in some form. Were its value better known, both from the standpoint of economy and nutriment it would enjoy a far more universal use than it now does. Crystal Gelatine Company, Boston, Mass.

WISHED FOR DEATH

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering!

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardui, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardui.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Campbell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering.

"At last, I decided to try Cardui. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardui has stopped my suffering and made life worth living.

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardui. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable, and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old. Sold everywhere.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 30, 1910.

The New Acts of the Apostles. Matt. xxviii. 20; Acts xviii. 40. (Missionary Topic.)

Somebody has called the Acts of the Apostles, the fifth Gospel. It has also been called the Gospel of the Holy Ghost. It records the beginning of the spread of the Kingdom of Christ. It is more, it is a record, penned under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, of the work of Christ, embodied in the lives of his followers. No one, who has studied closely the record, but traces the marvelous distance between the fisherman trembling at the sight of the wonderworking power of Jesus, and the Apostle Peter, facing the throng in one place and the Sanhedrin in another. The man who persecuted men and women to the death, in later days, with Christ in his heart, wrote the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians. He who traveled weary miles to persecute Christians, in the fellowship of his Lord, goes many times farther to lead men into the kingdom.

He strangely misreads the New Testament, who thinks that all the acts of the Apostles were written there, or that their doings ended with the writing of the last Epistle. The spread of the Kingdom has gone steadily forward, largely without observation of men. There are still men of apostolic labors and untiring zeal. There is this difference between much of the work that has gone on since and many things recorded in the New Testament, there we have an account, given in the clear light of the Holy Spirit for the instruction of all who should come after, now we have the same things, transpiring, but awaiting their full revelation until the eternal records are opened to the eyes of men. Then it was the beginning of the kingdom and the outlines of the work were not voluminous, now the story is being repeated in all the ends of the earth and libraries would not contain the wondrous things which God hath wrought.

We give below some incidents of the modern Acts of the Apostles, clipped from the Devotional Helps prepared by our General League Board in Nashville.

"Horace Tracy Pitkin on the night of his martyrdom in China, during the Boxer movement, sent this message home to his wife: 'Tell my boy Horace that his father's last wish is that when he is twenty-five years of age he may come to China as a missionary.'"

"Two boys, aged thirteen and fourteen, were making their escape from Tunghow, near Peking, when the Boxers seized them and began their examination. The boys boldly confessed that they were of the Jesus Church; and when their captors were about to bind them and carry them to the place of execution, they cried: 'You need not bind us. We will not try to get away. Every step we take to your altar is one step nearer heaven.' And soon they joined the blood-bought throng above."

"The devotion of the native preachers in Korea has been attested by many trials. For his activity, Kim, a local preacher, was arrested in Pyeng-Yang in 1894 and put in the death cell. Beaten and tortured, he was exhorted to curse God and forsake the service of the foreigner, and he would be released. Calmly and firmly he responded: 'God loves me and has forgiven my sins. How can I curse him? The foreigner is kind and pays me honest wages. Why should I forsake him?' His faithfulness won the respect of his persecutors. He refused to become an apostate, but was nevertheless released."

"During my first years in China I was so run down by ague and fever that I thought that my work was finished. I came before the Lord in this wise: 'O Lord, if it be thy will that my work end now, thy will be done. If it is thy will that my strength be restored to work for thee in this land of darkness, behold thy servant for all time.' The decades that have passed showed that the Lord was only harnessing me up for a forty-year trot at the rate of 2:20. There is life and protection in strong conviction, indomitable will, and faith in God. This life, this protection against temptation and spiritual deadness, is available to all Christians in every condition of life." (Matthew Tyson Yates.)

"I am a poor creature, yet no matter, for in Christ I can work; and if I were strong and wise, I could do nothing without him." (Isabella Thoburn.)

"It is impossible for us to know what the final decision will be. We feel that in this matter we are in the right. We are pleading the cause of the poor and the needy and the oppressed; that we are on the side of justice, that God is with us, and that the truth will yet be vindicated in his good time." (Drs. Morrison and Sheppard; the Congo missionaries, writing of their trial for libel by the Belgian government.)

"I have God, and his word is sure. God's cause will triumph and I shall come out of all trials as gold purified in the fire." (William Carey.)

"He always courted service and never attempted to dodge the difficult posts. If the type of the potential martyr is one whose nature is all compacted of faithfulness, Miner Roger's death was the natural culmination and crowning of his earnest, happy, fruitful life. Three years ago Miner closed a New Year letter with words which sum up succinctly the divine and human sources of his quiet strength while on earth: 'Pray, plan and persevere.'" (From a tribute by his college roommate to Daniel Miner Rogers, the young missionary who suffered death on the firing line at Adana, Turkey, during the massacres in April, 1909.)

Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God. (I. John v:5.)

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

Tidings from the Field

Meridian, Miss.

We start off victoriously at our little church this year. The more spiritual members are seeing the need of the prayer of faith, and our watch-word for the year is "Advance on our knees." God is marvelously answering our prayers already. We have tokens of his presence at almost every service, old grudges are being settled, and conviction is on the people. Two members have been received, and the spirit of love and harmony prevails. Finances are being more systematically and prayerfully looked after, and we are expecting gracious blessings in the future.—J. A. Wells.

Haynesville, La.

We have held our first quarterly conference for 1910. Rev. R. W. Tucker came on schedule time, and preached two good, strong sermons, which were helpful to all. His coming had much of the old-time effect. He made us form higher resolves, and aspire to go forward. The stewards provided well for the preacher. The "beloved" declares this to be one of his favorite charges. My laymen have moved up on a higher plane. They have resolved that the missionary assessments shall be paid in full by May 1st. I have appointed the following laymen to push the work and they have gone at it heroically. Rev. W. G. Harbin, L. E., chairman; J. R. Bevil, secretary and treasurer; R. F. Allen, A. C. Sale and W. J. Garland, committee on special arrangements. R. P. Dawson, T. W. Comp and J. O. Robert are the managers of the campaign. Each church on the charge has a local committee to co-operate with the general committees. We will be represented at the Laymen's Convention in Shreveport, February 16-18.—W. T. Woodward.

New Albany, Miss.

We have been most cordially received by the good people here. The Board of Stewards have raised the pastor's salary from $1,200 to $1,500, and they did this without a dissenting voice. They have also assumed the task of raising the conference benevolences and turned the pastor loose to prosecute his work along spiritual lines. The Sunday School last Sunday was the largest in its history. The outlook is for a great year.—L. M. Lipscomb.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

If any of our preachers or members know of Methodists coming to New Orleans, either for permanent homes or merely for a short time to be treated in any of the medical institutions, they will confer a great favor on the preachers by sending the names of the parties to any of our pastors; and due attention will be given them. The preachers of New Orleans are endeavoring to reach all our people who come to the city and have them looked after by some one of our churches.

The preachers expressed their hearty co-operation with the Prison Reform movement in their endeavor to educate the people through the lectures of Catherine Booth.

Dr. John A. Rice gave an interesting and scholarly presentation of "Abraham: The Venture of Faith." He presented a vivid picture of the world in which Abraham lived, the dominant forces at work, and how his migratory instinct led him westward, giving to us a beautiful illustration of the gospel of a new start, in which we are to learn to cut loose from the idols of yesterday and move with the living God of to-morrow.

A committee on street preaching was appointed, consisting of A. S. Lutz, N. E. Joyner and W. W. Holmes. It is the intention of the preachers to keep up these services throughout the year in the most needy sections of the city, in an endeavor to reach the un-churched masses.

Rev. C. A. Hamilton, tent evangelist from Virginia, was a visitor to the meeting. ALBERT S. LUTZ, Sec.

Editorial.

Only one who has an eternal perspective is capacitated to live nobly. Belief in an endless life is man's mightiest restraining force. His redemption is accomplished when the eternal rules him.

There is no sense in going wild over politics. No matter which party succeeds, or who is elected to office, the nation is for the present safe. The only thing that can wreck the republic is the decadence of private virtue. Not upon Congress or the army or the navy does the future of the country depend, so much as upon our churches and schools and other agencies which make for the moral upbuilding of the people.

The Bible is not merely a rough-weather chart to be hidden away when the skies are fair and brought out only in the time of storm. It is true that it cheers the suffering, comforts the bereaved, and lights the dying couch with a radiance divine; but we need it not less in the day of prosperity than in the day of adversity. Indeed, the hours of success are the danger periods of life. Then it is that we are most susceptible to the subtle approaches of Satan; and most need the admonitions and restraining influence of God's Holy Word. Happy the man who makes the Book of Holy Writ his companion in all seasons, and who meditates in its truth day and night.

One of the most striking characteristics of the Christian religion is its unflinching optimism. Nowhere does it recognize a lost cause or utter a wail of despair, but under conditions the most adverse it sounds out, loud and clear, the note of triumph. Even over the gaping tomb, it sends forth the exultant challenge, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" And why should it not be optimistic? It sees the ultimate overthrow of evil and the final reignancy of righteousness. It sees all the tears of the faithful wiped away by God's loving hand, and all the sorrows of earth recompensed by the rich rewards of heaven. Hence, when Saint John heard the songs of the glory land there were no dirges or requiems, but only paeans of victory and anthems of praise.

Some one has compared the human body to a marble statue exposed for years to the raging storms, weather-beaten and weather-stained, yet still shapeful and beautiful. Certain it is that the human body is about the worst abused thing in existence. Men smoke it, and stuff it, and drug it, and expose it, and besmear it, and in a thousand other ways demean it, but still it retains a grace and dignity superior to anything else on earth, and remains "the human form divine." How beautiful must the human body have been when it first came from the hand of the Creator, and how glorious will it be when it is transfigured and made ready for the heavenly home! Nor will God hold him guiltless in the day of final account who does aught to injure or defile this noblest piece of his handiwork.

POWER OF THE GOSPEL NOT WANING.

A short time since, Dr. Felix Adler, of New York, in addressing the Ethical Culture Society of that city, is reported to have said that the pulpit has become obsolete; that this is a day of dwarfs in the ministry, and to this is attributable the falling church attendance. We have a profound conviction that it is not worth while to notice slurs of this character, and that the best way to treat them is utterly to ignore them. They usually come from the lips of men who have little faith in the evangelical power of Christianity, and who dream of uplifting the world by some sort of educational or cultural process—men who are half skeptical, if not wholly so. For the utterances of men of this type, we have scant respect, and we do not attach sufficient weight to them to waste our time in discussing them.

But in this day we frequently hear ministers who occupy pulpits in the evangelical churches speak discouragingly of the interest which is being manifested in religious services, and who insist that some new device must be resorted to if the attention of the public is still to be commanded. They say that there was a time when the gospel was new and novel and immediately enlisted the interest of the people, but that everybody is now familiar with it and that it has largely lost its power to attract and impress an audience. And holding this view, they insist that in the future Christianity must be chiefly propagated along educational, charitable, and institutional lines.

To this contention, we are far from assenting. We have not the slightest disposition to oppose modern methods of work. On the contrary, we heartily believe in many of them. In a conflict so fierce as that which we are waging with the forces of darkness, we favor pressing into service every agency which may aid in rescuing a soul from the domination of evil and keeping it in the way that leads to life eternal. But at the same time, we believe that the spoken gospel will continue to be in the future as it has been in the past, the main method by which the lost are to be won to Christ and the divine kingdom extended. The "foolishness of preaching" is the divinely established plan for reaching and saving the millions of mankind.

Nor can we conceive why the gospel, properly presented, should not be as effective in bringing people to repentance and into a state of regeneration now, as in the days ago. So far as we can see, no essential change has taken place in existing conditions. Human nature is still depraved, needy, and going to ruin out of Christ. Satan is still malignant, alert, and endeavoring to lure men to destruction. The loving, seeking heavenly Father and the Lord Jesus are the same to-day as in former ages, and the Holy Ghost may still be had in Pentecostal power. There was not a single motive appealed to in the past that may not as logically be appealed to in the present. Human life is still brief and uncertain; the grave has not ceased to yawn in front of every man, and death and the judgment are still realities which none may hope to escape. And all the learned disputations of skeptical pulpiteers have not yet been able to quench the fires of the bottomless pit.

Nor has the boasted modern enlightenment even the semblance of a substitute to offer for the gospel. It cannot tell man whence he came; it cannot support him when the thick shadows fall across his path; it can give him no staff to lean upon when he comes to cross death's dark river, and it has no message as to what lies out beyond the confines of the tomb. As Dr. J. G. Holland has said, the gospel is the only thing in all the literature of the world that even sounds like it is divine. It is the only thing which meets the deepest needs of the human soul—which points out the pathway to deliverance from sin—which reveals God and Christ and brings the Holy Spirit into the heart—which comforts in the midst of sorrow and suffering—which lights with promise the cheerless tomb and opens the door into "the house of many mansions." And in thus meeting the deepest needs of man's immortal nature, the gospel anchors itself in the very bedrock of his being, and never will it cease to draw and hold the multitudes of the human race. It was because he knew that he only could satisfy the ceaseless cravings of the deathless soul, that Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." To whom else except our risen Lord may the sin-stricken masses go? He only hath "the words of eternal life."

The "old, old story" is not losing its charm, and Dr. Adler's "waning church attendance" is a fiction of the imagination. More people are reading the Bible to-day than ever before; larger numbers are studying it in the Sunday school, and greater audiences are listening to it in the pew. And when it is preached in power and demonstration of the Spirit, it thrills and stirs the human heart as much as it ever did. Gipsy Smith so preaches it, and where he ministers converts are not lacking. George C. Cates thus delivers it, and the slain of the Lord are not a few where he speaks. O what we need is not some new form of propagandism, not some new method of manipulation, but "Christ and him crucified" preached fervently, tenderly, appealingly, by men empowered of the Holy Spirit. If we thus preach, we shall not preach in vain, for the people, "weary and heavy laden," are hungry for the true message.

Dear dying lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power
Till all the ransomed Church of God
Be saved, to sin no more.

Are you helping in the work of your home church? Your pastor needs your assistance and there is much that you can do. Lend a hand in the Sunday school and prayer meeting, and in thus strengthening others, you will yourself grow strong.

There can be no true nobility of character without sincerity. Genuineness is an essential element of worthy manhood. One who is sinuous and disposed to duplicity lacks that which is most fundamental in the Christian life. A deceptive bearing is not only despicable, but also undermining in its influence. It wrongs others, but its most terrific effect is in its recoil upon the moral nature of him who practices it.

"DR. JAMES H. CARLISLE."

By Rev. Carroll Varner, of Lenoir City, Tenn.

The January issue of the Methodist Review has an article in it under the above caption by Dr. Chas. Foster Smith, of the University of Wisconsin, which alone is worth the entire subscription price of the Review. And it is to be hoped that everyone who possibly can will avail himself of this opportunity to learn something of Methodism's great layman, who so lately passed from among us. If anyone had a right to portray for us the character of Dr. Carlisle, it was Dr. Smith, who has known him intimately for so long a time and who is, himself, no ordinary judge of those qualities which go to make up true manhood. His style also is simple and charming, and the enthusiasm which he displays adds greatly to it all. In fact, those who never knew Dr. Carlisle may be inclined to think Dr. Smith a little too enthusiastic and extreme; but those who knew the man will doubtless say, after concluding the article, that is Dr. Carlisle exactly. I have never known any one, who knew the Doctor well, who did not speak of him in glowing terms. They generally, always found it difficult to express themselves as fully as they wished.

It is a great pity that Dr. Carlisle could not have traveled more extensively over the country and given to the church the benefit of his great personality and the inspiration of his clear, forceful utterances on the great questions before it. But, as Dr. Smith points out, he traveled very little. He rarely left Spartanburg, partly because "seasickness" made travel on the cars a torture, but also because he was retiring and "averse even to the applause of admiring audiences." And for this reason, he was not so well known as he might have been, yet they are the losers who never saw and heard him. What a treat it was to see that striking figure on the platform and hear his strong, clear voice in his fine diction. And when he spoke you were compelled to listen; you instinctively felt that here was one who spoke "as one having authority."

It is a fine test of a speaker that he can draw a large audience through a space of many years in the place where he resides. This Dr. Carlisle did, as perhaps, very few men. "At Spartanburg," says Dr. Smith, "he was the speaker for fifty years whom everybody liked to hear. His audiences were always larger than noted orators from elsewhere could attract, and I never knew anyone to think him uninteresting or find any speech of his tiresome."

An enumeration, however, of all of Dr. Carlisle's gifts and graces does not account for the man, nor give one an adequate conception of him. His was a greatness of mind and heart which can hardly be described. He was one of those lofty characters who towers high above the men of his generation, as some great mountain peak above its fellows; whose strength and grandeur can be seen from a great distance, while the others are lost in the dimness. Says Dr. Smith again: "I repeat, he was the best man I have ever known in the flesh, the most unselfish, the freest from love of money, the purest in thought and word and deed, the most exemplary in conduct. He was the only man I have ever known with whose motives I could never find any fault."

It is a pleasing coincidence that in this same issue of the Review there should be an article on "Wm. E.

Gladstone," by Bishop Hendrix. From the little I had read and heard of Gladstone, I had imagined that Dr. Carlisle was in many respects his counter-part, and frequently when thinking or hearing of the one, I have immediately thought of the other. Though their careers lay along entirely different lines, they were men of the same type, of much the same build, and had in common that great moral optimism and consuming passion for God. And I think it is far wrong to say, what Gladstone was to England and the Anglican Church, Dr. Carlisle was to the South and the Southern Methodist Church. Surely he was our "Great Commoner," and both our country and our Church are much the poorer since the death of James H. Carlisle.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD FRIEND.

By Rev. W. W. Graham.

Mr. Editor: It is said of old friends like old wine, the older they are the better. The New Orleans Christian Advocate is the first paper I ever served as an agent. If it was issued in 1865 I did not see it. From the Sepulga Circuit which I served in 1866 (back in Alabama) I secured three subscribers, collected the $9 and sent it to Dr. J. C. Keener who was editor at that time. Possibly I was entitled to commission; if so, I did not know it. In the letter I stated I wanted to do better, but that the mail facilities were confined almost entirely to the railroads. He wrote me back a very kind letter which did me much good, (being the first letter I ever had received from such a distinguished person), saying I will do what I can at this end of the line, and you do what you can at that end, and possibly we can keep matters straight. Those were the stormy days of Reconstruction, and we had hard times.

Nelson Nixon, one of the subscribers I secured, lived just twenty miles from the postoffice, so I had to carry him the Advocate as well as the gospel. Over in east Alabama we were blessed with a great many Georgia Methodists who thought the old Southern was all of it. If for one, took delight in wedging in the New Orleans among the young people of each family and I am glad to say, it always stuck. As to 1866, another thing occurred worthy of mention. Embracing the second Sunday in July, at Bethel Church on my circuit, the first District Conference ever held in Southern Methodism was presided over by Bishop H. N. McIntyre, who had just been elected to the episcopacy at the New Orleans General Conference. If any of your readers have the book, "Passing Through The Gates," edited by J. J. Tigert, D.D., they can see an account of the occasion in connection with the Bishop's sermon on the "Parable of the Pounds."

It certainly was a big time with us at that country church. While on the subject of the long ago, I was delighted at the Conference at Alexandria to meet my old army brother, R. J. Harp, and find him still taking a lively interest in all good things below. On general principles, I had supposed that he had been transferred to that good world at least ten years ago. Now for a word of commendation; of course, flattery is altogether out of place. But to commend the commendable is proper. The New Testament is full of it. Of the many good things, we speak of the editorial on the church vows and the necessity of keeping them. That was indeed refreshing, and as Paul Brown would say, there is mighty good fishing in that creek.

That the editor and all the others in the Advocate office may have a happy new year, is my prayer.

"IS THE CHILD IN CHRIST UNINFECTED BY NATURAL GENERATIONS?"

By Rev. R. A. Ellis.

In the discussion of this question, I take the affirmative.

From my viewpoint, a correct solution of the question will never be reached until we have agreed as to the significance of certain terms, and until writers and speakers shall quit using terms as synonymous that are not synonymous. We need to get a correct definition of sin; and when we have succeeded in that, it will be seen how utterly the Scriptures cited to prove the opposite fails to apply to infants. Let us look at the beginning. Was it not the taking and eating the forbidden fruit that constituted the first sin? Was not that preceded by desire, inclination, tendency?

We have to answer affirmatively. Well, does that act represent a sinful nature? If so, it is established that man had a sinful nature before he sinned, and shows his nature to God, for God is the author of nature. We most heartily repudiate such a notion and affirm that desire, inclination, tendency to things forbidden, are not sins. They are constituent elements of man's nature, and are involuntary, and in no degree involve the action of the will, without which there can be no sin. If inspired writers knew how to define sin, which is the transgression of the law.

Now, desire, inclination, and tendency may act on and influence the will, but until the will consents there is no sin.

If an object is presented to the mind, and that for any reason becomes desirable, at once we are inclined to, and have tendencies toward it, involuntarily, notwithstanding the object may be a wrong one to obtain, no moral wrong has been done until the will has decided to obtain it.

Now, this is literally true as applied to Adam. I regard it as equally true when applied to the race.

Therefore, if it does not establish the doctrine that Adam had a sinful nature before he sinned, how can it prove his race afflicted with a sinful nature?

Now, it is well known that the arguments in opposition to what we contend, are in the main rested in these inclinations of our carnal nature.

Our carnal nature was the work of God. It was not, and is not sinful; it may become sinful, and has as relates to adult humanity.

But each one for himself; and not because he inherited a tainted moral nature, as an effect from his father, Adam, who fell shamefully. It seems to me that the work of God in man's behalf has utterly failed to receive the consideration due it.

In creation, we must concede that God made man upright, with a soul inclined to, and capable of righteousness. He was dual. He had a body, a mortal body, made of the earth, and was subject to decay from the beginning, and would have grown old and feeble and diseased but for the arrangements made for its health and indefinite continuance.

In the very nature and constitution of man, he was a fit subject of moral government and was rightly put under law. The penalty threatened in case of violation was death. This death was evidently the death of the soul. I do not say that this threat had no reference to the body; yet if so, it was remote, a sentence by being barred from the tree of life and that seems to have been an act of mercy.

Now, the death penalty referred to the soul. This seems clear. Much depends upon what we conceive the death of the soul consisted of. It did not become extinct as does the body when it dies.

We must understand, therefore, that the death of the soul consisted in separation from God, in whose companionship was found the life of the soul, together with the loss of the moral capacity, inclination, or disposition to righteousness.

This being true, the conclusion is forced upon us that, if man ever responds to moral behest, or is capable or inclined to righteousness, it will result from the possession of life. After the fall, and before the extension of divine clemency, we look upon a dead humanity void of moral ability, or inclination to the word of God. Yet God comes to us with a revelation of himself, with warnings and encouragements, and all this, to a dead humanity, if he has not re-impregnated the race with moral life in germ. We all understand our moral capacity and inclination to righteousness, since the fall is of God. Before the fall, it was an inherent capacity. Now it is restored, or at least it seems so, from the appeal to universal humanity in the gospel. Well, if restored, when and how? This is a pertinent question.

I would answer, in the Garden and by divine gratuity.

The race, by act of disobedience by its head, had lost soul life, left in that condition a man could not have produced a son better than himself.

This must be conceded by all. It is seen that the race was passive in this calamitous effect, and to suffer the race to be propagated in this condition in the light of the gospel's conditions of salvation, leaves that part of the race dying in infancy, doomed to ruin.

Upon what do I rest the conclusion that the race was restored to life?

He, God in the garden, said to Satan: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy seed and her seed; thou shalt bruise his heel and it shall bruise thy head." It is understood that special reference is had to Christ, but I am not ready to concede that that is all that was intended. This that is called enmity, was something which the woman had not. She either had that something when created and had lost it, or else she was deficient to begin with; the admission of which would cast a reflection on the Divine Creator.

She had lost something, that was soul life; as she was the mother of the race, and had lost moral antipathy to Satan making her and her seed unfit in any just light for a state of probation. God gratuitously restored that which was lost to her and her seed. As in the fall, so in the restoration—passive.

THE CHURCH.

By Rev. W. T. Woodward.

Some days ago I wrote a few lines upon this important question, and reviewed some lessons as taught by our good Baptist brethren. As I stated then and say again, the true Church consists of all true believers in Christ, whether they be Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, or else. There are five different denominations that lay claim to absolute authority in administering the ordinances, rights, sacraments, and the like of the Christian Church: (1) the Roman Catholic; (2) the Protestant Episcopal; (3) the Primitive Baptist; (4) the Missionary Baptist; and (5) the Campbellites (or Christian). For any one to claim that his denomination is the real and only genuine Simon pure Church, is to confess that he is ignorant of history, and also that his peculiar doctrines and polity are the only ones right and Scriptural. I have heard preachers of all the above churches say from the pulpit, "We are the only true Church of Christ." I heard a Protestant Episcopal minister say: "No one is baptized unless it be done by one of our ministers." Our Baptist brethren preach this often, and our Campbellite brethren also. Our Catholic brethren have had some of their people to marry again, because the priest did not officiate at first, and consequently it was held to be illegal. I know a family that had been married for several years, and had three children, and the priest insisted that because a Methodist preacher had married them, their marriage was not proper and they should come and let him marry them legally. Now, if the priest was right, what were those three sweet little children? I am sure they were not illegitimate. I think I should have gone on my way.

So the above brethren say we Methodists cannot baptize nor officiate legally at a marriage, consequently in that they say we are not a Church. I have never had one to tell me that, but have had some of our Baptist preachers tell some of my members that we are not a Church. Neither the Catholics nor Episcopalians will allow us to occupy their pulpits. Our Baptist and Campbellite brethren will allow us to preach in their Church, provided we will not stay too long. I have been denied the use of two Baptist Churches in my short ministry.

Neither one of these denominations is any more the Church of Christ than the other. I believe they are all God's children; Christ, the head of the body, the Church, has blessed and prospered all of them. The Primitive Baptists have not succeeded much, because they are opposed to two of the most essential features of the church life, viz.: Missions, and Sabbath Schools. The Church that is without a mission is already dead; the central thought in the great commission was to go and teach.

On the seat of authority in matters of religion and morals three different positions have been taken by the three great branches of the Christian Church (not Campbellite Church): (a) the Roman Catholic Church places it in the Church itself, making the Scriptures and the traditions of the Church of equal validity for doctrine and guidance. (b) The Orthodox Greek Church places it in the decrees and findings of the seven ecumenical councils, beginning with that of Nicaea in 325, and ending with a council of the same name held in 787. (c) The Protestant branch of the Christian Church places it in the Scriptures alone. In all these cases, this authority is valuable and is of considerable worth. I have said before, and want to say again, all Protestants have Scripture for their beliefs and polity, accepting their interpretation of the Word. This I allow to each body of Christians. But to me, the Methodist is the best and easiest interpretation of all and one that fits all nationalities, climes and conditions. The definition given in our Book of Discipline is clear and full of meaning, viz.: "The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men and women in which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered, according to Christ's ordinance in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same." Proofs: "Unto the Church of God—to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus: called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." (1 Cor. 1:2.)

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Eph. iv:11-12.

This is a broad and comprehensive definition of a Church, and harmonizes perfectly with the elements found in the apostolic Church as described in the Acts of the Apostles. It allows Methodists to recognize all other denominations as being gospel churches that come within the scope of the above definition. Denominational exclusiveness grows out of a false definition of what a gospel church is: The Roman Catholics define a Church to be "The company of Christians knit together by the profession of the same faith, and communion of the same sacraments; under the government of lawful pastors; and especially of the Roman bishop as the only vicar of Christ on earth."

Thus it makes the supremacy of the Pope an essential element of a gospel church, consequently it would logically follow that the Catholic is the only true Church. Hence Romish bigotry. The Baptists define a visible Church of Christ as a congregation of baptized (immersed) believers, etc. This definition cuts off all churches whose members are not immersed, by their own regularly ordained ministers; for immersion by any other is held as null and void; hence their narrow exclusiveness.

REV. JOHN ALEXANDER BARNES JONES.

By Rev. W. L. C. Humelett.

Rev. John Alexander Barnes Jones was born in Warren County, Miss., Dec. 9, 1830, and died at his home in Magnolia, Miss., Jan. 13, 1910, in the eightieth year of his age. He was the son of the Rev. John G. Jones and Jane Oliphant Ross; was baptized in infancy by the Rev. Job M. Baker, and was converted when four years old at his mother's knees. He had seven brothers and sisters, all of whom preceded him to the grave except three, one brother and his two sisters, Mrs. Reuben W. Millsaps of Hazlehurst and Mrs. T. B. Holloman of Moss Point. He got all the physical culture he needed in youth by laboring on his father's farm in Jefferson County, Miss. His opportunities for early education were very meager—"limited," as he expressed it, "to the uncertain, irregular, low grades and short-lived country schools, with a change of teachers each term." He, however, attended Oakland College for a short time—long enough to give him an appetite for higher education, which he did not fail to gratify by private study in after years.

Brother Jones was licensed to preach at Belle Grove Church, in Jefferson County, Miss., Oct. 23, 1852. Rev. B. M. Drake being presiding elder, and was admitted on trial the same year at Jackson, Miss. Completing the Conference Course of study in due time, he was admitted into full connection and ordained deacon by Bishop John Early at Jackson, La., in 1854, and was ordained elder by Bishop Geo. F. Pierce at Kosciusko in December, 1856.

Brother Jones' career as a member of the Mississippi Conference was long and honorable, characterized by such labors and such heroic self-sacrifice as have made Methodist preachers a large part of the salt of the earth for the last century and a half.

During the fifty-seven years of his ministry he filled the following appointments in the Mississippi Conference: In 1853, Bayou Sara and Colored Mission; 1854, Upper Deer Creek; 1855, Holmesville; 1856-57, Wilkinson; 1858-59, Jackson, La.; 1860-61, Port Gibson; 1862-63, Canton; 1864-65, Brookhaven; 1866-67-68-69, Port Gibson; 1870-71-72-73, Vicksburg District; 1874, Rocky Springs; 1875-76-77-78-79-80-81, president of Port Gibson Collegiate Academy; 1882-83-84-85, Brookhaven District; 1886-87, Woodville District; 1888-89, Fayette; 1890-91, Rolling Fork; 1892-93-94, Raymond and Bolton; 1895-96, Canton; 1897-98-99, Magnolia and Osyka; 1900, Brandon; 1901, Gloster; 1902-03-04, Hazlehurst. In December, 1904, he was superannuated and preached a semi-centennial sermon before the Conference.

It would be difficult to find a longer unbroken career in the annals of the itinerant ministry, and doubtless many will rise up "in that day" and call him blessed because of the gracious words of salvation that they heard from his lips.

The close of the war found the Board of Trustees of the then Port Gibson Collegiate Academy much embarrassed in the management of that valuable property—indeed, it was liable to be lost to the church altogether, when Brother Jones was elected president of the institution. During the seven years of his administration, the debts were paid, the buildings repaired, and all of its facilities increased, so that he turned over to the treasurer of the Board almost $2000 when he left the institution, which, in the meantime, had been advanced to the grade of a female college. He regarded himself as perhaps the first teacher to give free tuition, one-third reduction in board, and books at cost to the children of preachers and all others unable to pay full price. The useful and honorable lives of many young persons who availed themselves of these opportunities were a source of great gratification to Brother Jones in his later years.

Realizing that his early education had been incomplete, Brother Jones secured the books required by the curriculum of the best colleges, and determined to master the course of study. He tells us that he found the task "Herculean." Progress was discouragingly slow; years of incessant application and toil were required, but the reward of success was abundant compensation.

Socially, Brother Jones was genial, affable, and fraternal; an enjoyable companion, and a lovable and generous friend. He was a zealous Mason and was highly esteemed and honored by the brethren of that fraternity.

He was a thoughtful and liberal provider for his family. Rarely did any choice article of food, that met his eye upon the street, fail to find its way, if money could buy it, to one of the most faultlessly equipped tables at which any queen of a parsonage ever presided. His house was the home of hospitality, and his first wife, during whose life the writer boarded in his family, was the most devoted housekeeper I have ever known.

Brother Jones was twice married. First, to Miss Lucy Minerva Cotton in 1855, by whom there was born one son, who died in infancy, the mother dying in 1894. In 1895 he was married to Mrs. Juliet Peale, who survives him.

Brother Jones' last days were among his happiest. Superannuation did not stop him from preaching. His trumpet still sent forth its heavenly warnings as of old, mellowed by celestial tones, caught, as it were, from the angelic choir. His talk at our last Annual Conference his brethren can never forget. Lifted out of himself and lamenting his own inability still to remain in the militant ranks, he called upon his brethren, in thrilling and inspiring words, to esteem the call to the Christian ministry the highest honor God can confer on a man.

But he is gone. We shall miss him here. His end was peace, and we doubt not that he now rejoices with those who have gone before, in the realms of eternal light.

STREET PREACHING.

From the Times-Democrat we appropriate the following account of the open-air preaching service which was conducted in the city last Saturday evening by Rev. N. E. Joyner and others:

"Talking to the men in a brotherly way, as the different ones of all classes emerged from the saloons to see what was going on, the series of street preaching services of the Southern Methodist Church was inaugurated Saturday night, with the Rev. Nicholas Joyner, superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, as the principal speaker.

"The open-air meeting was at Iberville street and Exchange alley, and hundreds of men who have practically forgotten the idea of the gospel gathered around the group of church members to listen to the lesson that was to be taught.

"In this part of New Orleans there is a saloon on every corner. And in the middle of each block in this vicinity there are other saloons. In fact, nearly every other building is occupied as a drinking place for men. There is no other part of New Orleans where saloons are more numerous. It was on account of these facts that the Methodist ministers determined upon this corner as the place for inaugurating their open-air gospel meetings.

"And it was the saloon men who offered to assist the ministers in every way possible. The saloon men knew that the preachers were coming, and had prepared for them.

"Mr. Joyner spoke of the 'Good Shepherd,' explaining to his listeners that Christ was always willing to help man. It was just a plain, every day talk that Mr. Joyner made to the men—those who had just left the saloons—and all of them were greatly interested. Several old hymns were sung, and the meeting closed in prayer.

Rev. John A. Rice, pastor of the Rayne Memorial Church, besides Mr. Joyner, were Rev. J. A. Rice, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church; the Rev. A. S. Lutz, of the Felicity Street Church, and the Rev. W. W. Holmes, of the Louisiana Avenue Church.

"After the services the ministers talked with the men and shook hands with them, leaving a friendly impression. One of the saloon men has offered the use of a hall near the corner for the meetings, and it is likely that the suggestion will be adopted.

"The meeting began soon after 6 o'clock and continued about half an hour. The ministers, encouraged by their success of Saturday night, plan to visit Exchange Alley again next Saturday evening, possibly at a later hour."

THE PREACHERS' AND LAYMEN'S MEETING.
GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

By Rev. W. C. Galceran.

At Cleveland, Miss., on Thursday, Jan. 20, at 2:30 p. m., the meeting was called to order by Rev. W. W. Woollard, presiding elder, who also conducted the opening religious exercises. Routine work was then taken up. After fixing the presiding elder's salary and apportioning the Conference Collections, a permanent fund for district parsonage repairs was provided for by levy of one and one-half per cent on the amount paid for support of the preacher-in-charge. Following this, the District Church Extension Society, by unanimous vote, deferred the election of the executive committee till the District Conference, and also authorized the presiding elder to fill any and all vacancies on the board till that time.

Discussion of the topics under the head of "The Pastor" was then begun. Such timely subjects as the pastor's Private Devotions, Preparation for the Pulpit, His One Supreme Purpose, A Man Among men, and Systematic Work were handled in an able manner to the delight and profit of everyone present. The meeting then adjourned.

At 7 p. m., our much loved and respected brother, J. W. Honnoll, preached an uplifting, inspiring and characteristic sermon, his subject being: "The Wise Choice of Moses."

At 9 a. m., Friday, fifteen of the nineteen preachers of the district were at the opening exercises. Revs. Broomhall, Cogdell, Ingram and Price being for some reason detained at home. After religious exercises, the second division of the program, "Our Field," was discussed under the following topics, namely: Occupying New Places; The Church Organized for Work and Caring for Its Own; A Campaign for Conversions; and "May Not Our District Assume the Support of Two or more Missionaries?" The discussion of each topic was brief, yet helpful and creditable to the brethren. As a result of the discussion of the last subject above mentioned, a movement was launched looking to the support of one or two missionaries in the foreign field by this district. Considerable stress and emphasis was laid upon the missionary work in the district and new life injected into it.

In the third division of the program, "Our Connection," the following topics were admirably handled, namely: "Our Church Schools, Early Collections," from which discussion of the latter a resolution was adopted that each pastor pledged himself to earnestly endeavor to remit to the Treasurer of the Board of Missions by May 1, the assessment for his charge for Domestic and Foreign Missions. After a discussion of "Our Orphans' Home," by vote, the first Sunday in February was fixed as the day for taking the collection for the Home and that an effort would be made to raise at least fifteen dollars per charge.

Following a discussion of the topic, "Our Church Papers," these resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, We, the preachers of the Greenville District, recognizing the fact that the New Orleans Christian Advocate is a paper of great merit, peculiarly suited to the needs of our people and should be a weekly visitor in each home, therefore, be it resolved,

"First—That we hereby pledge ourselves to present the claims of the Advocate to our people.

"Second—That we will strive to secure a subscriber for the paper in each home, by making a house-to-house canvass for subscribers."

As a final result of the discussion of all the subjects and, by unanimous vote, it was ordered, that each pastor in the district indicate to the presiding elder at the close of each month, by certain forms to be furnished him, the extent and results of his labors during the month in the general work of the church, and from these reports the presiding elder in turn will send to each pastor a summary of the month's work in the district, and once each quarter submit to our Conference organ a report for publication.

After the adoption of suitable resolutions of thanks to the hospitable people of Cleveland for our entertainment, to our gracious host and hostess, Brother and Sister Shipman, and to Brother Woollard, who drew us close to him by his uniform kindness and courtesy, we adjourned at the noon hour. Refreshed in body, with a larger vision of our opportunities, a holier zeal, a stronger faith in God and one another, a deeper consecration, a sweeter, richer experience, and with gratitude to the Great Head of the Church for his never ceasing providences, we separated, determined, by grace from him in whose field we labored, to make full proof of our ministry this year.

ATTENTION, LEAGUERS!

And Members of the Louisiana Conference:

As some of you already know, a committee, consisting of Mrs. S. J. Lingle, of Shreveport; Miss Evelyn Price, of Lake Charles, and myself, was appointed to re-organize the State League Conference. This committee was appointed by the Epworth League Board, and endorsed by the Conference. We are depending upon you for help and co-operation. This committee will meet in Shreveport, Tuesday, Feb. 8, at 5:30 p. m., at the home of Mrs. S. J. Lingle, 1215 Oakland St., to which every member of the Conference Epworth League Board is invited. We would also like to have a representative from every district in the State, that we may take up the matter of organizing the districts. We hope at that time to set the time and place for a State meeting and make a start on the program.

Now, brother pastor, Leaguer, if you would like to have the State League Conference meet with you, please be on hand in person, or by letter, to represent your church, so that we may make a selection that will be best for all concerned. If you have a suggestion as to time for holding the Conference or any other suggestion that you would like to offer, we would be glad to hear from you if you would reply at once.

We must have a State Conference, if it is possible, and I believe if other States can have one, we cannot afford to fall behind. Brethren, in the name of the young people of our Church in Louisiana, I ask you to help in every way to carry forward this work.

We are your committee, endorsed by the unanimous vote of the Annual Conference, and we shall endeavor with your co-operation and with God's help to carry out the commission given us. Let us hear from you.

Yours faithfully,

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

The Century for February opens with a fine picture of Richard Watson Gilder, its lately-deceased editor, and the last poem which he is known to have composed. It also has several discussions of the many-sided work of the versatile genius which for so many years shone resplendently upon its tripod, but whose light has now gone out. "The Preservation of Mount Vernon" is a particularly entertaining article, and "Topics of the Time" are handled in an instructive and impressive manner.

The February Ladies' Home Journal is a thing of beauty. We commend especially the able discussion of woman suffrage by Dr. Lyman Abbott. In a kindly way, but with a logic absolutely remorseless, he hammers that unfortunate hobby to pieces. Little is left of it when he finishes. We trust that none of our friends interested in the subject will fail to read Dr. Abbott's luminous paper.

The Housekeeper for the mid-winter month comes to hand in its usual attractive form. This periodical is designed to be practical and helpful, and well does it fulfill its mission. "With Our Children," "Fighting Colds By Nature's Methods," and "Poultry for Pleasure and Profit," are some of the heads under which wise suggestions are made in the recent issue.

Church News

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions of the M. E. Church, South, will be held in Nashville, Tenn., April 15-22, 1910.

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died of paralysis in Philadelphia, on the 29th ult. He was born at Kingston, N. Y., in 1834; was elected Bishop in 1880, and was placed on the retired list in 1900.

The Methodists of Alabama now number 145,000, and in the two Conferences of that State there are twenty-one presiding elders. And not only are the followers of Wesley numerous in that great field, but they are also wide-awake, intelligent, and aggressive.

The new McKendree Church, of Nashville, Tenn., was formally opened on Jan. 16. The sermon was preached by Bishop Hoss, who delivered a strong and eloquent message. This is the most historic congregation in Southern Methodism, and the outlook for its future is said to be bright with promise.

The Park Street congregation, of Atlanta, Ga., is building a beautiful and well-appointed house of worship under the guiding hand of Dr. J. W. Lee, who seems to be especially gifted in carrying forward to consummation enterprises of that character. It was under his superintendence that St. John's Church in St. Louis was erected.

It is reported in a special dispatch to the Picayune that the Methodist church at Fernwood, Miss., was burned during the night of Jan. 27. The fire originated by the spire being struck by lightning. The church was a handsome structure, with modern equipment, and cost $4500. The building and furniture were insured for $3000.

Bishop Hoss, who has been spending a fortnight in Nashville, returned on the 25th inst. to his home of sojourn in Muskogee, Okla. While in Nashville and Middle Tennessee he got off a great amount of official and other work and preached some great sermons in the churches. In spiritual power, unction, and mastery of thought and utterance, Bishop Hoss ranks with the very greatest preachers of our day.—Epworth Era.

We learn from the press dispatches that the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, at a meeting held on Jan. 26, elected Rev. Felix R. Hill, D.D., president of that institution for the remainder of this scholastic year, owing to the illness of Prof. W. L. Weber, who will not be able to resume the presidency until next session. Dr. Hill accepted the position at the earnest solicitation of the Board and Prof. Weber. He will become president officially Feb. 2.

Bishop Hendrix recently wrote Dr. George Adam Smith a letter congratulating him upon his election to the position of Principal of the University of Aberdeen, Scotland. Under date of Dec. 27, the distinguished scholar and author replied in a highly interesting communication, which was published in a late issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate. Bishop Hendrix is held in high esteem across the sea as well as in the United States and Canada.

There is a widely prevalent notion that only corrupt men succeed in politics. We have long been convinced that this is not true, and it gives us pleasure to quote the following emphatic utterance from Mr. Dolliver, a distinguished United States Senator from Iowa: "I think it is a decided advantage to a public man to be known as a professing Christian. It is certainly true that no man who has openly scoffed at religion has ever achieved a prominent place in the leadership of our people."

The Michigan Christian Advocate says: "When George Washington took the oath as the first President of the United States, one man out of every ninety-four was a Baptist. In this year of our Lord 1910, one man out of every seventeen is a member of the Baptist Church." Copying this in its last issue, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate wrote immediately underneath it the following: "When George Washington took the oath of office approximately one person in every two hundred was a Methodist. Now one for every thirteen of our population is a Methodist."

The Methodists of Texas are to have a Tract Society, the purpose of which is set forth in Article 2 of the Constitution adopted. The object of this Society shall be the distribution of tracts on the Christian life and service, the money question, the missionary, Sunday School and educational work, and other subjects of interests to the Church, and especially on the doctrines and polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We heartily commend this movement. Every State in our territory should have such a society. We note with pleasure that the Rev. C. A. Spragins, one of Mississippi's best contributions to the Lone Star State, was placed at the head of this timely enterprise.

From the Epworth Era we clip the following: The Era's accounts for the year just closed have been balanced with the triumphant report that our office has paid all expenses for the year with a balance to our credit. This has been the result of a Herculean effort and of generous responses on the part of our friends and subscribers. It is a happy business close of the most successful quadrennium in the history of the League. The membership of the League is now larger than at any previous date in its history, its work is more compactly organized, and its usefulness more and more apparent.

According to Mr. Frank G. Carpenter in a recent communication to the American press, Christianity has made phenomenal headway in the Chinese Empire. He says: there are now in that country 3,500 Protestant missionaries, 5,000 mission stations scattered throughout the Empire, and more than 250,000 Christian adherents. In 1852, there was in all China only 350 communicants, in 1865 the number had increased to 2,000, and ten years later to 13,000. Thus it will be seen that the growth of Christianity in that field has principally taken place within the past thirty years. Mr. Carpenter states that the Christian schools are a tremendous force in the Chinese nation, those of the primary grade numbering 2,000, with 42,000 pupils in attendance. The number of high schools and colleges is 389, with an attendance of 15,000. Those who have been skeptical as to the success of missionary work in the Orient should secure Mr. Carpenter's article, read the full text of it, and reflect upon the significant statements which he makes.

Through the kindness of Mr. Fennel P. Turner, General Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, we have received a copy of the report made by the Executive Committee of the Movement to the recent Convention at Rochester, New York. It is a neat pamphlet of fifty pages and covers in considerable detail the work as it has gone on in the colleges of the United States and Canada for the past four years. Since the inception of the Movement in 1886, 4,346 volunteers have gone to the various mission fields of the world. China has received 1,253, the largest number; Japan, 374; Korea, 200; India, Burma and Ceylon, 240; the Turkish Empire, 157; Africa, 466; South America, 266, and the Philippine Islands, 127. In fact, practically every mission field has been immeasurably enriched by this outflow of consecrated young manhood and womanhood from Western Christendom. It is gratifying to note that there has been a steady growth in the Movement with each succeeding quadrennium and year. At the Toronto Convention, in 1902, it was reported that 780 volunteers had sailed during the preceding four years; during the quadrennium following 1,000 went out, and during the one just closed the number advanced to 1,275. The money contributed by those connected with the Movement in the home land shows a steady gain. In 1905-06, the total amount was $86,997; in 1906-07, it was $107,952; in 1907-08, it was $116,712, and in 1908-09, it was $131,198. Only one thing caused a feeling of regret as we scanned the interesting pamphlet, and that was that some of our Southern Methodist institutions seem not to be taking as much interest as they should in this great Movement. Surely, our young people can not afford to hold back in religious activities which are so widespread, and which promise so much for the redemption of the race.

MRS. ARMOR'S ENGAGEMENT.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., has been engaged by the W. C. T. U. of Louisiana for a series of lectures to be delivered in this State in February. Mrs. Armor has had a number of years of experience as a speaker and in various kinds of prohibition work in Georgia, and for the past few years has become a worker of national prominence in the W. C. T. U. In Philadelphia, Baltimore, Nashville, Knoxville and other cities, and at the various Chautauquas in the East and West her unusual talents and ability have called forth the statements that "she is the finest platform speaker since Francis E. Willard," and "a dynamic force on the platform which is overwhelming and irresistible." Mrs. Armour is a Georgian, small in stature, quick in movement and in mind, earnest, eloquent and powerful. Mrs. Armor engaged in a debate on prohibition at Bellevue Chautauqua, near Omaha, Neb., in 1908, with Hon. James Dahlgren, the liquor candidate for Governor of the State. As a result of this debate, Dahlgren failed to get the nomination for Governor. When Mrs. Armor spoke in Shreveport during the prohibition campaign, it was the practice of the manager of the campaign to request those who had heard Mrs. Armor to remain away from the hall that others might have a chance to hear her.

The following is a list of her engagements: Tallulah, Feb. 5 and 6; St. Joseph, Feb. 7; Monroe, Feb. 8 and 9; Shreveport, Feb. 10; Mansfield, Feb. 11; Alexandria, Feb. 12 and 13; Winnfield, Feb. 14; Lake Charles, Feb. 15; Morgan City, Feb. 16; Baton Rouge, Feb. 17 and 18; New Orleans, Feb. 19 and 20.

Secular News and Comment

The pecan industry is one of the most profitable resources of Georgia. In the southwestern part of the State pecan orchards cover more than 10,000 acres, and contribute annually something like $2,000,000 of wealth. It is estimated that pecan trees yield $200 an acre net.

Lawrence, Mass., is in the midst of the greatest revival in its history. The meeting is a union one, with thirty-three churches co-operating. The attendance is large and there have been scores of conversions. The preaching, the singing, and the manifest emotion are said to be much like those which characterized the awakenings of former days.

Mr. Charles M. Schwab's Bethlehem steel works in Pennsylvania have been awarded a $13,000,000 contract for materials to be used in the construction of new battleships for the Argentine Republic. More and more, American enterprise is making itself felt in all of the competitive industries of the world. And in inventive ingenuity the position of the Yankee is that of unchallenged pre-eminence.

Judge J. B. Chrisman, a lawyer of distinction and one of the most eminent citizens of Mississippi, died at his home in Canton on Jan. 28. Though 83 years old, he was hale and hearty and his death was unexpected. Judge Chrisman was an ardent prohibitionist, a strong champion of all moral reforms, and a man who stood fearlessly against any compromise with evil in social and civic life. His remains were interred at Brookhaven, Miss.

Gov. Hughes, of New York, has announced that with the expiration of his present term he will retire to private life and resume his law practice. This will be a distinct loss, not only to New York, but to the nation. We doubt if the people will let him retire. Men of his firmness, probity of character, and brilliant ability are too uncommon to pass easily out of the public notice. Not the least of Mr. Hughes' recommendations is the fact that his father was a Baptist minister.

Friday, Feb. 4, will be "Tag Day" in New Orleans. Extensive preparations have been made and the work will be conducted in a systematic way, under the auspices of the King's Daughters. Comely matrons and fair young ladies will pin tags on the coat lapels of gentlemen, friends or strangers, whether upon the streets or in their offices, and the price to be paid will range from 5 cents up. The beneficiaries of "Tag Day" this year will be the King's Daughters' "Rest Awhile," the Travelers' Aid, and the Civic Improvement Playgrounds Association.

With the taking of the poll nearly completed, the two great political parties in England find themselves of nearly equal strength. The following were the figures given out on the 28th ult.: Unionists, 264; Liberalists, 263; Laborites, 40; Nationalists, 77. This will insure the continuance of the present ministry, but its career will be most uncertain since it will have to maintain an alliance with members not wholly in sympathy with it to command a majority. A party made up of heterogeneous elements may be effective in opposition, but is rare when charged with the responsibility of constructive legislation. The late election in Great Britain has left things in a most unsettled condition, and the forecast is for stormy political seas in that country for the next few years.

This is the day of the indictment of insects and animals. Many of the woes and ills of humanity are now charged up to them. We are told that mosquitoes spread the yellow fever and malaria; fleas, the leprosy; flies, the typhoid fever; cows, tuberculosis; dogs, hydrophobia, and rats and squirrels the bubonic plague. And the latest announcement is that the prairie dogs in the Texas Panhandle annually destroy enough grass to support 800,000 cattle and 4,000,000 sheep. What poor victim will be charged with the responsibility for the existence of pellagra and the hook worm yet remains to be seen. We are daily expecting the unknown culprits to be apprehended and branded.

The American Automobile Association will hold a convention in Washington City, Feb. 15-17. It is said that the chief purpose of the meeting will be to inaugurate a movement to secure uniform motor-ing laws throughout the United States. We heartily believe in uniform laws, but we very much doubt whether those we favor would command the approval of automobilists. As we see it, to allow these death-dealing machines to thunder along the public highways at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour is little less than criminal. They should be made to go at a pace which does not endanger human life. And we think every person who contemplates buying a motor car should first be required to take out a license, which could be revoked in case he should show himself reckless in using it. One of the primary and highest functions of government is to provide for the public safety.

The proposed Sixteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution does not seem to be making much headway. It commanded the requisite vote in Congress, but as yet has been ratified by the Legislature of only one State—Alabama. Gov. Hughes of New York struck it a tremendous blow a few days ago when he opposed it in a public message to the General Assembly of that commonwealth. He gave as the reason for his opposition that it would allow the National Government to tax State bonds. The New York Evening Post thinks that the action of Gov. Hughes virtually destroys the amendment in its present form, and urges Congress to so alter it as to obviate his objection. What the outcome will be is at present a matter of conjecture. One thing, however, is certain: it is a Herculean, an almost impossible task, to alter the Constitution of the United States. But in the stress of political exigency not a few of our politicians speak of doing so as if it were a feat easy of accomplishment.

According to The Commercial Appeal, there is a marriage strike on in China. Usually we do not like strikes, but we confess that this one pleases us. In the Oriental Empire they have an enforced marriage law which has a multiplicity of requirements. It strips the young woman of every vestige of choice in matters matrimonial. The selection of a mate is made entirely by others. After marriage a woman is the slave of her husband and is required to live with his parents. If the old people do not like her, they can compel their son to divorce her. If she is childless, her spouse may put her away and take unto himself another wife. To combat these cruel and unreasonable requirements, the Chinese young women have organized an association called "The Society of Sisters." Its members are pledged to refuse submission to the exactions of this long established law. Surely, this exhibition of independence is the prophecy of a better day for the oppressed womanhood of Oriental heathendom.

Mr. William E. Curtis, in the Chicago Record-Herald, tells of a young woman who can express her thoughts in half a hundred different languages. She is Miss Elizabeth S. Colton, of East Hampton, Mass., who is said to possess a most agreeable and attractive personality. Speaking of her linguistic accomplishments, Miss Colton says, "I can read fifty-four languages. I have a critical knowledge of fifteen, and can read, write and converse fluently in six. I have read the New Testament in the Zulu tongue. I can decipher inscriptions in Assyrian, Arabic, Persian, Sanscrit, Coptic, Avestan Pali, Syriac and Prakrit, which is an inferior form of Sanscrit, spoken by the common people; and I can also decipher cuneiform inscriptions." Miss Mary Montgomery, daughter of a Presbyterian missionary in Turkey, is another American woman who is a linguist of great reputation. Her acquirements are said to have astonished the faculty of the University of Berlin, and she is now editing a dictionary of Oriental languages in New York.

The beautiful city of Paris, France, has been in the grip of one of the most terrible floods in its history, caused by the overflow of the river Seine. It is estimated that one-fourth of the city has been under water, thousands of people have been made homeless, and the damages sustained will reach far up into the millions. Many costly and historic buildings have been surrounded by water, portions of the municipality have been wrapped in darkness, and at one time a snow storm raged, adding greatly to the discomfort of those who had been driven into the streets. On the 29th ult. the flood reached its crest, and a recession has been going on since. The various charitable organizations, both in Europe and America, have been active in sending relief to the sufferers. Mr. Pierpont Morgan cabled a check for $20,000, and the American Red Cross Society has issued a public appeal for funds, which is meeting with a generous response. The abounding philanthropy which such disasters call forth shows that the humanitarian spirit is widespread and active in our day.

It has been given out in Nebraska that William J. Bryan will, for the fourth time, be a candidate for the Presidency. Some of the secular press seem disposed to make sport of this announcement, but if Mr. Bryan is really an aspirant, we hazard the assertion that the Democratic papers which are opposed to him will find his candidacy much more than a laughing matter before the contest is ended. We have never been one of Mr. Bryan's enthusiastic supporters, but we do regard him as one of the ablest and most attractive men in American public life. In form and figure, he is as handsome as an Apollo; he is the nation's most eloquent orator, and his character is exalted and without a stain. Like Gladstone, he knows how to bend the knee in prayer, and is not above ministering to the sick and suffering. We think Mr. Bryan's one deficiency is poise, a lack of judgment. If he had had that, we do not doubt that he would have commanded the highest honors within the gift of the American people. But as it is, his place in history is secure. It is no dishonor to be numbered among the defeated, if one has borne himself worthily in the battle. That list includes Clay, Webster and Calhoun, and many other of the brightest names in the annals of the nation.

SWEET SLAVERY.

By Rebecca Lindley Tripp.

Let others make their boast,
And proudly say, "I'm free."
I would not give my blessed chains
For all their liberty!
'Tis bleeding Love that binds me down,
And makes me dread my Master's frown.
The fetters on my wrist
Are royal bands to me—
I would not weaken one small link
Of their sweet slavery;
I make my bondage all my pride
And glory in Christ crucified.

THE FIRST CANDLESTICK.

The first candlestick was a boy. He sat in the corner of a Scotch kitchen holding a piece of fir candle in his hands, from time to time cutting and trimming to make it burn brightly.

The fir candle was a length of wood cut off a kind of fir tree, which is found embedded in the peat. This kind of candle is still used in some parts of Scotland.

It usually fell to the lot of the "herd-laddies" to act the part of candlestick, but should a beggar ask for a night's lodging, he was expected to relieve the "herd-laddie" of his duty. A candlestick is still called in Aberdeenshire a "puir man," or "poor man."—The Child's Hour.

CHANGING HIS COLORS.

Mr. Jacob A. Riis tells of a little boy who earned his living by blacking boots. Every Sunday he attended a mission school. This school, through its well-meaning teachers, decided to have a Christmas tree. The gifts for the pupils were provided for them by the teachers and some patrons of the school.

Jimmy marched boldly to the front with his, but was much disappointed when his present proved to be a copy of Browning's poems. He folded it carefully in the paper in which he received it, and took it home.

The next Sunday the superintendent of the mission school announced that any child who was disappointed with his or her gift could exchange it.

Jimmy marched boldly to the front with his.

"What have you there, Jimmy?"

"Browning, sir."

"And what do you want in exchange?"

"Blacking, sir."—Exchange.

THE MARY WASHINGTON BIBLE.

The Ladies' Association at Mount Vernon has recently made an important addition to the collection of Washington relics there—the "Mary Washington Bible," the family Bible of Washington's parents. The book, which is well authenticated, is worn from long usage, and the title and some other leaves are missing. The manuscript record of births and deaths, partly in the early handwriting of George Washington, is pasted down upon a leaf of text. This record begins:

"Augustine Washington and Mary Bell was Married the Sixth of March, 17, 30-31. George Washington Son to Augustine & Mary his Wife was Born ye 11th Day of February 17 31-2 about 10 in the Morning & was Baptised the 15th of April following Mr. Beverly Whiting and Capt. Christopher Brooks Godfathers and Mrs. Mildred Gregory Godmothers."

The latest event recorded is the death of Washington's sister Betty, who "Departed this life the 31st of March 1797 at 4 o'clock." After the death of Mary Washington the Bible passed into the possession of her daughter, Betty, who had married Fielding Lewis.—New York Evening Post.

A TRUTHFUL BOY.

Robert Burdette says: "How people do trust a truthful boy! We never worry about him when he is out of sight. We never say, 'I wonder where he is;

I wish I knew what he is doing.' We know that he is all right and that when he comes home we will know all about it and get it straight. We don't have to ask him where he is going, or how long he will be gone every time he leaves the house. We don't have to call him back and make him 'solemnly promise' the same thing over and over. When he says, 'Yes, I will,' or 'No I won't,' just once, that settles it."

IF I WERE YOU, MY BOY.

I wouldn't let other boys get ahead of me in my studies.

I wouldn't go into the company of boys who use bad language.

I wouldn't get into the shiks and pouts whenever I couldn't have my own way about everything.

I wouldn't conclude that I knew more than my father before I had been fifty miles away from home.

I wouldn't abuse little boys who had no big brother for me to be afraid of. I would learn to be polite to everybody.

I wouldn't be ashamed to do right anywhere. I would not do anything that I would not be willing for everybody to know.—Selected.

WHERE AMBER COMES FROM.

Emperor William of Germany derives a large part of his income from the sale of amber. There is only one place in which amber is found in quantities; namely, on the coast of Samland on the Baltic. The German royal house owns a monopoly of the trade.

Amber, as it is found to-day, is the petrified resin of a very ancient forest. The layer of earth containing it runs fifteen or twenty thousand feet out under the sea. In ancient times, the inhabitants of the district used to gather seaweed thrown up on the beach by a storm in the hope of finding pieces of amber attached to the weeds; nowadays, however, divers go down and search the sea bottom while a mine has been sunk on the shore and tunnels have been run out under the bed of the ocean. About $12,500 worth of amber is taken every day. Amber dust is sold to incense-makers. Small pieces with fine colors go to make ornaments that are much prized by the Persians and the tribes of India, while larger pieces are used to make pipe stems.—Southern Churchman.

FOR INKY FINGERS.

A girl I know has made a wonderful discovery, which she thinks all other school boys and school girls should know, too.

"It's so needful, mamma," she says, "all boys and girls get ink on their fingers; you know."

"Surely they do, and on their clothes as well," said her mother.

"I can't get the spots out of my clothes, but I'm sorry when they get there," responded the girl. "I try very hard not to. But I can get the ink spots off my fingers. See."

She dipped her fingers into water and while they were wet she took a match out of the match safe and rubbed the sul bur end well over her ink spots. One after another the spots disappeared, leaving a row of white fingers, where had been a row of inky black ones.

"There," said the girl, after she had finished. "Isn't that good? I read that in a housekeeping paper, and I never knew they were any good before. I clean my fingers that way every morning now. It's just splendid!"

So some other boys and girls might try Alice's cure for inky fingers.—Harper's Round Table.

GREATEST BLUNDER OF MY LIFE.

The boys and girls will be interested in a few of the "Blunders" written down by five hundred men, and to be found in the Crerar Library:

"Reading worthless books."

"Did not stick to my trade."

"Did not stick to anything."

"Did not take care of money."

"Beating some one out of money."

"Careless about my religious duties."

"When I left my church and mother."

"Not saving money when I was young."

"Refused a steady position with a good firm."

"The greatest blunder of my life was gambling."

"Was too fool-away my time when I was at school."

"Thinking that my boss could not do without me."

"Would not harken to the advice of older people."

"Not keeping my position, but grew slack in my work."

"When I left school before I was past the fourth grade."

"My greatest blunder was when I first learned to smoke."

"The greatest blunder of my life was not accepting Christ, and thereby avoiding many sorrows caused by serving Satan."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

The Western Recorder, a Baptist paper, recently printed the following, which was copied in the Mississippi Baptist:

"From the latest religious figures, we gather the following:

"Methodists, 5,749,000; Baptists, 5,662,000; Lutherans, 2,112,000; Presbyterians, 1,830,000; Disciples, 1,142,000; Episcopalians, 830,000; Congregationalists, 700,000. Infants and probationers excluded, this gives the Baptists the largest number in the United States."

Why our Baptist friends will persist in asserting that the Methodists count infants and probationers in enumerating their membership is passing strange. They have been told over and over again that this is not true, but they go on with their misrepresentation as if they really believe it to be a fact. It would seem from their course they are so jealous of the Methodists that they are utterly incapable of doing them justice. But how they can reconcile it to their consciences to keep on circulating a falsehood, is beyond our power to understand; especially since they claim to be the most faithful disciples of him who was the embodiment of honesty and truthfulness.

But since our immersionist brethren have appealed to the government religious statistics to attest their strength, we trust that they will be willing to abide by the information contained in that report. What, in fact, does the government bureau show? It shows that the largest Baptist body in the United States is a negro body. It shows that of the 5,662,000 Baptists in the United States, 2,273,000 are negroes, and that leaving the colored brother out of the computation, the Methodist Church leads them by more than a million and a quarter members. It shows that the Baptists have church property valued at $139,000,000, while that of the Methodists is valued at $229,000,000; that the Baptists have 50,000 houses of worship, with a seating capacity of 15,700,000, while the Methodists have nearly 60,000 houses of worship, with a seating capacity of more than 17,000,000; that the Baptists have in their Sunday schools 2,898,000 pupils, while the Methodists have in theirs 4,472,000.

Such are the figures of the government report. They show conclusively that in point of strength our brethren of the close communion lack a great deal of being abreast of the followers of Wesley in the United States. Indeed, they are far in the rear, and it will yet take a tremendous splashing of water for them to get even in sight of the Methodist procession as it moves majestically onward through the decades of the twentieth century.

WORRYING OVER NON-ESSENTIALS.

There is much useless quibbling over the difficulties contained in the Bible. The skeptically inclined will often detach a single passage or a single miracle from its proper setting and want to debate it aloof from that to which it is vitally related. Thus they skip about from one thing to another, finding fault here and there, without ever confronting any problem of real importance. In religion, as in everything else, there are a few pivotal questions the settlement of which incidentally adjusts scores of others that are subordinate and tributary. Thus, for instance, in the whole of the New Testament there is but one great miracle—that of the incarnation. Around that one supreme miracle all of the others cluster, and in its great light they become in a sense natural. For, if God was upon earth and walked among men, was it not to be expected that he should perform the works of God—that he should turn the water into wine—that he should miraculously feed the five thousand—that he should make the winds and waves obey him, and call the sleeping dead back to life? If Jesus came into the world in an unusual manner, did it not rather prophesy an extraordinary departure? The truth is, it is utterly illogical for one who accepts the doctrine of the incarnation to quibble about the smaller miracles, which are but the expected manifestations of Deity resident in the flesh—mere sparks flashing forth from the Omnipotence dwelling among men.

PERSONAL.

We were favored by a call from Dr. J. M. Beard, formerly editor of the Advocate, a few days since. The editor regrets having missed his visit, which was enjoyed by the others in the office.

Rev. E. J. Coker writes hopefully of the cause at Encutta, Miss. He gives energetic attention to all of the enterprises of the Church, the Conference organ included, and finds the people not unwilling to respond to his efforts.

Rev. H. L. Norton is comfortably domiciled in the well-arranged and delightful parsonage at Collins, Miss. A most cordial reception has been given him, and he considers "the situation truly inspiring and the outlook encouraging."

Rev. Jas. S. Duke finds his work pleasant on the Prairie Circuit, North Mississippi Conference. He affirms that "the people know how to take care of their pastor," and that there is promise of great success in his present field.

One of the most wide-awake pastors in New Orleans is Rev. A. I. Townsley, of the Second Methodist Church. He is a live wire, and keeps things moving in his congregation. Enterprise and enthusiasm are valuable assets in religious as well as in secular work.

Called to the city on professional business a few days since, Dr. B. J. Marshall, of Black Hawk, Miss., cheered us with an agreeable and much appreciated visit. Born and reared a Methodist, he takes an active interest in all the connectional affairs of the Church.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Moss Point, Miss., was in the city Monday and delighted the force in the Advocate office with a call. Mississippi Methodism has no nobler spirit than this faithful toiler, who has long been a leader in his Conference, but whose bow yet abides in strength.

Rev. J. H. Smith, though in his fourth year at Vaden, Miss., continues to be in love with his flock and reports his work as moving along smoothly. He has a noble people, and we are not surprised that they have grown upon him. We thank both him and those whom he so well serves for their demonstrated interest in our paper.

Rev. W. H. Lane has finished his first round on the Rose Hill Charge, Mississippi Conference. He is busy with his pastoral duties, and expects to see all the interests of the Church go forward. He has forwarded a list of five subscribers to the Advocate, and announces a purpose to try to introduce it into every home on his work.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Greenville, Miss., favored the Advocate a few days since with a list of sixty-one subscribers and seven renewals. We tip our hat to the genial pastor of our church in the "queen city of the Delta," whose optimism is unfailing and whose energy knows no abatement. More than one of his flock have written of the fine work he is doing in his new charge.

In sending an additional list of ten subscribers, Rev. T. W. Lewis, who does all things well, observes in his communication that "the last eight are poor people not able to take the paper, but others have furnished the money to have it sent to them." Certainly this is a commendable work, and we do not doubt that the example might be followed to advantage in many places.

Through the kindness of the pastor, Rev. C. P. Moss, and that worthy layman, Brother F. A. Howell, we have received a club of sixteen subscribers from Durant, Miss., with the promise of "more to follow." We assure these brethren that we appreciate their kindly interest, and we trust that the Advocate will carry a weekly blessing into the homes into which they have introduced it.

The Church at Canton, Miss., is prospering under the gracious ministry of Rev. W. B. Lewis. It could scarcely do otherwise under the superintendence of so spiritual and wise a leader. The Jackson District Conference will assemble in that city this year. We are grateful for an invitation to be present, which we hope a favoring Providence will allow us to accept.

We make acknowledgement of the cheering words and good wishes of Rev. H. W. May, of Opelousas, La., and especially of his remembrance of the Advocate. Reciprocating his brotherly spirit, we wish him large success in his "loved employ" and the conscious approval of the Master in all his undertakings.

We regret to learn that Rev. D. W. Babb has had serious affliction in his home at Verona, Miss., his esteemed wife having been seriously ill for four weeks. We are pleased to be informed, however, that she is now improving, with the prospect of a near and complete recovery. Brother Babb comes as near as anyone whom we know to being a model itinerant preacher.

We have been requested to announce that Bishop W. A. Quayle, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will lecture at Rayne Memorial Church on Saturday night, the 5th inst., for the benefit of Parker Memorial Church, now under process of construction. "Jean Valjean" will be the Bishop's theme, and those who attend will both enjoy a rare treat and aid a worthy cause.

Rev. C. W. Bailey is addressing himself energetically to the discharge of his pastoral duties on the Courtland Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, and finds the future not unpromising. He is mindful of the importance of circulating the periodical literature of the Church, and in his desire to give his people wholesome reading matter he is following the example of Wesley, who was the pioneer in that fruitful field of service.

Rev. W. G. Forsyth, of Waynesboro, Miss., calls our attention to the fact that we were in error in our notice of the death of Rev. J. N. Ware in stating that he had been superannuated for about ten years, a mistake into which we were led by the press dispatches. He took that relation in 1908. Brother Forsyth promptly sent us a card informing us of Brother Ware's decease, but it reached us after the Advocate had gone to press.

We are indebted to the following brethren for valuable work done for the Advocate: Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, Forest, Miss.; Rev. J. H. Ingram, Glenn Allan, Miss.; Rev. W. D. McCullough, Leland, Miss.; Rev. J. B. Williams, Lisbon, La.; Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., Rayne, La.; Rev. W. H. Moore, Poplarville, Miss.; Rev. O. L. Tucker, Ruston, La.; Rev. A. G. Hall, Lamar, Miss.; Rev. W. D. Wendel, Hernando, Miss.; and Rev. J. A. Poe, Montpelier, Miss.

The Advocate office was honored on Tuesday of this week by the presence of Bishop W. A. Candler. The Bishop was en route to the seat of the Mexican Border Mission Conference. He has just returned from Cuba, where he reports the Church to be making commendable progress. We were delighted to see this honored chief pastor in such fine health and spirits. It is needless to say that sunshine and laughter abounded while he lingered.

The alumni and friends of the University of Mississippi, without exception, are pleased to know that Dr. R. W. Jones again has a chair in that institution. Dr. Jones is one of the ablest and most popular instructors in the South, and no man has done more than he to promote the cause of education in the Magnolia State. And best of all, he is a man of the most exemplary Christian character, whose influence is felt strongly in all the work of the Church.

To Dr. F. N. Parker, the accomplished presiding elder of the New Orleans District, we are indebted for the following items of information: Rev. J. V. Peters, of Slidell, La., has started off well. He has launched a parsonage enterprise which will be carried forward to completion in a short time. Rev. L. I. McCain has made an admirable beginning at Covington, and the work at Donaldsonville is making good progress under the leadership of Rev. H. N. Harrison.

The Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, is enjoying prosperity under the ministry of Rev. H. T. Carley, who is another gifted young Mississippian that our Louisiana brethren have appropriated. This congregation is displaying commendable activity. It is most fortunate in having as one of its officials, Brother C. O. Chalmers, the Publisher of the Advocate, who abounds in love and loyalty to Methodism.

Through the kindness of Rev. R. W. Vaughan, the secretary, we have received a copy of the Minutes of the recent session of the Louisiana Conference. The arrangement is excellent, and the editing is well done. The printing was done in the Advocate office, which is a guarantee that the pamphlet wears an attractive appearance. It contains a striking likeness of the late Bishop Ward, who had charge of the Conference at the time of his decease, and whose name is held in affectionate remembrance throughout all Louisiana.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, of Wesson, writes: "Our church is in great sorrow. Brother T. A. Lee, chairman of our board of stewards, and a leader in our congregation, has gone from us. After a brief illness he died Saturday, Jan. 29. The funeral took place at the church yesterday and was conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder, and the pastors of the other churches of the city. A great concourse of people were present to pay tribute to the memory of this good man."

Rev. C. F. Staples, of Gibsland, La., has been accorded a gracious reception. "There has been no special storm, but a steady gale has been blowing," and flour, lard, meat, meal, sugar, and other things to gladden the hearts of a preacher's family have found their way into the parsonage. Congregations have been good, the Lord present in every service, and the pastor has resolved to lay himself out for the best year's work of his life. We are indebted to Brother Staples for a club of ten subscribers to the Advocate.

Rev. O. L. Savage has a habit of making things move wherever he goes. Referring to his charge at Guntown, Miss., he says: "The stewards have fixed the salary at $1200, and shown their appreciation in many substantial ways. I have organized two Epworth Leagues, and a home department of the Sunday School with 116 pupils. A building committee has been appointed and a plan entered into to construct a new brick church at Saltillo. Thirty-seven new subscribers have been sent to the Advocate. There is a bright future for this work."

From Iota, La., comes a message from our former college friend, the Hon. B. F. Toler. What a flood of memories the mention of his name brings into our mind! We have never forgotten his speech against petitioning the Legislature to abolish co-education at the University of Mississippi. That deliverance was a classic and should have been preserved. We are pleased to see that Brother Toler is mayor of the town in which he resides, and we trust that not one iota of anything necessary to his complete happiness is lacking.

Two towns in the United States have been made famous by speeches delivered in Congress. One is Duluth, Minn., and the other is Tupelo, Miss. Of the former we know nothing, but of the latter we know a great deal. There is no more delightful place in all Dixie, and we are happy to know that henceforth the Advocate will find its way into many more of the charming homes of this famous municipality. The pastor writes that for this we are indebted to our valued friends, Mrs. D. W. Robins and Mr. S. A. Ford, whom we most heartily thank.

In a communication bearing the date of the 24th ult., Rev. H. Jamieson, Bossier City, La., says: "Our churches at Bossier City and Queensborough are both in good working order, and we expect to accomplish great things in the Master's vineyard this year. A Sunday school was organized two weeks past at Queensborough, the success of which is assured. The Sunday school at Bossier City shows an increase both in interest and attendance. Dr. Reed, our missionary from Korea, spent Sunday, the 9th ult., with us, addressing an exceptionally large audience at night."

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, the popular presiding elder of the Oxford (Miss.) District, writes: "Things are starting off well up this way. The new men have taken hold of things and prospects are good with them. The others are planning for advancement along all lines. Rev. J. R. Robertson, of Toccopola, who was sick for a month before Conference, is still confined to his room. An assistant to this good man was proposed, but his official board said, 'Let it be as it is; we will take care of the pastor and the work.' We sympathize with our stricken brother, and pray that his health may soon improve."

Rev. E. B. Ormond, of Hickory, Miss., writes that there is more fiction than fact in the account of the Indian girl of this city becoming a missionary to her people, which was recently published in the Times-Democrat and reproduced in the Advocate. He says that she came to Kemper County, Miss., in 1908, secured board in a Choctaw family, and soon thereafter married unfortunately. The extent of her missionary work was to teach a small school for a couple of months for which she received a meager salary. Brother Ormond thinks a great mistake was made in allowing the girl to pass from under the Christian influence of white people before her religious character was fully established.

On Thursday evening, the 27th ult., at the residence of Mr. J. H. Stafford, of the Louisiana Avenue Church, Mr. J. M. Harle and Mrs. Lillian Hillsman Miller were united in matrimony by Dr. J. M. Beard. Mr. Harle's ancestors of Merriestown, Tenn., and vicinity, have been prominently identified with Methodism for more than a hundred years, and it is needless to say that he is in the succession, becoming a subscriber to the Advocate with this number. Mrs.

Miller is the daughter of William Hillsman, a long time official of the Moreau Street Church, this city, and the popularity of both contracting parties was evinced by the large company who crowded to witness the ceremony. Their residence, which it is understood, is a gift from the bridegroom to the bride, will be at 1733 Berlin Street, this city.

WHAT SAYS THE RECORD?

By Rev. H. M. DuBose, D.D.

I have rejected one communication, and one only, from Bishop Hoss, and one communication and one only, from Dr. DuBose.—Dr. Winton, in Texas Christian Advocate, Jan. 6, 1910.

Only two manuscripts on this subject offered for publication have been rejected, and in neither case was the decision reached because Vanderbilt was under discussion.—Dr. Winton, in Christian Advocate (Nashville), Jan. 21, 1910.

Proof in the Vanderbilt University case was all in a month or more ago. The Church is on top. But the above statements call for a brief explanation. I will let the record do the talking. On June 11, 1909, I offered an article to Dr. Winton in reply to an editorial of his on "Church Ownership." He rejected it for the reason, as then given by him and written down by me, that he "did not desire to open the Vanderbilt question in the Advocate." I sent the rejected article to a number of Church papers with the following explanatory note—viz.: "The following communication was offered Dr. Winton, of the Christian Advocate, but was declined on the ground that the editor does not desire to open the Vanderbilt question in the Advocate." Amongst the papers printing my article with the explanatory note was the New Orleans Christian Advocate. On July 15, 1909, Dr. Winton appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate in a rejoinder to this article which he had rejected. In his first sentence Dr. Winton said: "Dr. DuBose's article was declined by me on the ground which he gives because it referred to the Vanderbilt question, and for the further reason that it erroneously assumes that what I had written was with special reference to Vanderbilt." (Words in black letters mine.) On Jan. 21, 1910, Dr. Winton said in his own paper (The Nashville Advocate) that this article was not rejected because Vanderbilt was under discussion.

In 1906, at the request of Bishop Hoss, I offered Dr. Winton an article from the pen of the Bishop on the Vanderbilt situation. True, it was not in "manuscript," but it was from the Bishop's pen—a printed interview. It was declined not because it was not in "manuscript," but because it referred to Vanderbilt. About six weeks ago I offered Dr. Winton a "manuscript" from the pen of Bishop Hoss treating of the Vanderbilt-Peabody situation. It was summarily rejected. That's all.

CENTENARY COLLEGE

By Rev. Felix R. Hill, D.D.

Called suddenly and unexpectedly to Shreveport and at the urgent request of the trustees, I have accepted the presidency of Centenary College. This arrangement is one not only greatly desired by the trustees, but by Dr. Weber, who has done such splendid work for Centenary. But it is only a temporary arrangement; I have no expectation whatever of holding this position longer than the end of the present scholastic year in June. Dr. Weber is quite a sick man, and is still confined to a sanitarium here. It is earnestly hoped that he will yet recover his health, and after months of rest and recuperation, resume his work next autumn, as head of the institution.

In the meantime, I will do my best for Centenary, and, by God's help, I expect to succeed. The second term for the year begins Feb. 27 when I will take charge. The school is well equipped for good and thorough work. Sufficient rooms have been added to the building for the accommodation of young men and boys who may desire to enter college. Everything possible will be done for the health and comfort of students, and for their moral and intellectual advancement. It is important that all who intend to enter the school do so early, so as to be properly classified, and to enter readily into the full work of the session. I will be glad to correspond promptly with parents and others who may write for information.

Permit me to add that the call to this responsible position has come as a great surprise to me—especially in view of the fact that I had so recently retired from the active pastorate for a year of absolute rest, but already there is great improvement in my health, and I find myself ready and anxious for work. This call I accepted as a providential one. Let me appeal to the preachers of the Louisiana Conference, and beg them to help me in this great work, by doing their utmost to keep Centenary and its interests before their people. Personally, I feel infinitely grateful to my brethren for their kindness to me; as evinced in such a marked and touching manner at the recent session of our Annual Conference.

Shreveport, La., Jan. 29, 1910.

Methodist Men are on Trial.

The great international convention of laymen, which is to be held in New Orleans, Feb. 12-15, is a part of a national movement that is without parallel in the history of Christendom. Denominational differences will give place to loyalty to Christ and the common cause of the kingdom of God. Men of international reputation will take part in the program. Seldom do the names of so many prominent men, men of affairs, appear on a single program, and the privilege of taking part in such a gathering cannot be overestimated.

What part shall Methodism have in this great Conference? Duty both to Methodism and to the kingdom of God requires a large attendance of Methodist laymen. Other men will leave business and private interests to respond to this call to arms, for it is indeed a battle-cry, clear, strong and thrilling! Do not resolve to come "if you can," but come any how!

This Convention in New Orleans is for the laymen of all the adjacent territory, especially Louisiana and the Southern part of Mississippi. Let each pastor who reads this appeal announce it in all his church services.

N. E. JOYNER,
For the Methodists.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Four very regrettable errors occur in the Minutes that were not discovered until too late to rectify them. The name of the Church in which the Conference was held is not "Trinity" as stated on the Title Page, but First Methodist Church. The postoffice address of Rev. F. J. McCoy is not Eros, nor is his charge Eros, but Tioga. The name of Rev. A. S. J. Neill is omitted entirely and his charge and postoffice address should be Eros. As a result of placing the Franklin assessment for Preacher-in-Charge and amount paid Preacher-in-Charge in the wrong columns, the totals for amount assessed and paid Presiding Elder are wrong. The correct amounts should be: Assessed Presiding Elder, $2,110; Paid Presiding Elder, $1,808.

Sincerely,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN, Editor.

Ruston, La., Jan. 28, 1910.

A CORRECTION.

In the Louisiana Conference Annual, Page 4, Statistics, under Church Property, Bastrop Charge, should be credited $522 expended on churches and parsonages; $900 insurance, and $18 premiums paid; making our total, $1,221, instead of $681. My duplicate report bears these figures. Somebody has blundered.

Prof. J. H. Reynolds, of the University of Arkansas, has been elected unanimously to the presidency of Hendrix College, lately made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Stonewall Anderson. Prof. Reynolds has not yet signified his acceptance.

NOTICE.

The date for the Annual Meeting of the Louisiana Conference, Woman's Home Mission Society, has been changed from April 14-17, to May 3-8, inclusive.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Sisters: The end of our fiscal year is fast approaching and the treasurer reports our collections much in arrears. During the few weeks that remain, we must make a strong and prayerful effort to secure the dues and pledge money in full that we may not fail in the work we set out to do, and thereby let our Lord's cause suffer.

So much depends upon our faithfulness that we cannot afford to be negligent. Three missionaries look to us for support. They are our own and we pledged the Woman's Board of Missions that we will be responsible for their salaries. No true-hearted woman of us is willing to fail in doing her full part in helping to secure the necessary funds.

Financial stringency may necessitate some retrenchment in our personal affairs, but there must be no withholding from perishing souls of the bread of life, even though you and I shall suffer hardships and privation. I believe the women of the Mississippi Conference will deny themselves luxuries, even necessities, that our Lord's cause be not hindered. We have an opportunity in this emergency to make a demonstration of our love and loyalty to our Father, and for his glory and the advancement of his cause we will do it.

Let earnest prayer be made for an outpouring of the spirit of consecration and liberality that shall move us all to bring rich gifts of love to our Master, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich.

Let me say in closing, that this appeal will fall upon the ears of some who, either as auxiliaries or as individuals, are feeling that they have done their full part, but let even these ask themselves earnestly: May I not do more than I have done, and, by a special gift, enable this great cause to move forward at this time when help is so much needed? God help every woman in this Conference to hear this appeal as a call from God, and as such, lovingly and honestly to respond to it. Your sister,

BESSIE W. LIPSCOMB.

Brookhaven, Jan. 20, 1910.

AN EMERGENCY CALL!

To the Women of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference:

Last year I asked for one hundred emergency women—women who might be called on in times of stress for sums amounting to $1, $5, $20, $25, $100, according to their several abilities. A few noble women responded. It has become necessary to make the call again.

Our Treasurer tells me that only $1,120.64 has been collected on our pledge of $3,000. This leaves a balance of $1,879.36 to be collected and less than two months time to do it in. I am writing to those on my emergency list, but we must have at least seventy-five women more who will come to our help at this time. When we remember that our pledge money goes for the support of the daughters who have gone from our own Conference to represent us in the foreign fields, surely we will make every effort to pay this to the last cent.

Our Treasurer thinks that perhaps some are laboring under the misapprehension that the $1,000 gift which was received at the close of our Conference at Vicksburg will go on our pledge; but as this generous gift was made after the pledge was determined upon, it was deemed best to give a special direction to this money. Accordingly, it was given, as has been before stated in these columns and elsewhere, to the purchase of a house-boat and baby organ to assist Miss Mary Culler White in her evangelistic work in China.

Is there not some other woman in the Conference, who, like this consecrated Christian, has some of the Lord's money laid aside, with which she can meet our urgent need?

Send such donations to me or to the Treasurer, but in either event, send your name to me that I may enter it upon that list, which is altogether too small.

These amounts can be credited to your auxiliary if you so desire.

Yours in love and service,

MRS. A. F. WATKINS.

Corresponding Secretary.

All the money raised this year from the children's work is to be used in the Gulf Coast work.

We want every child and infant enrolled, would urge all third vice-presidents to read literature and take up work that has been entrusted to them. Wherever there is a vacancy, elect immediately a consecrated, enthusiastic woman to fill this important place.

All appropriations that were granted to parsonages at the last Annual Meeting have been paid in full, where requirements have been met. No appropriations can be made on charges where there is no Home Mission Society.

ANNUAL JOINT MEETING

Of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, New Orleans District.

The meeting was held Friday, Jan. 28, in the Second Methodist Church, New Orleans. Mrs. John Munford presided for the Home Mission Society and Mrs. D. C. Worrell presided for the Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. John T. Sawyer, Jr. was unanimously elected recording secretary. The annual report of the Foreign Mission Society was read by Mrs. Worrell, the secretary for the New Orleans District. The report showed 6 adult auxiliaries, 1 Young People's Society, 1 Juvenile, total membership, 195; life members, 15; Bible women in foreign field, 3; subscriptions to Woman's Advocate, 76; subscriptions to Little Worker, 30; money sent to Conference Treasurer, $1,071.35.

The report for the W. H. M. Society was read by Mrs. John Munford, district secretary, and showed a membership of 333, life members 15, and 3 auxiliaries.

The annual report for the Woman's City Mission Board was read by the president, Mrs. W. W. Carre, showing that $1437.75 had been expended in furnishing and repairing St. Mark's Hall, and that $851.35 had been paid for missionaries' salaries this year. Mrs. Carre said that the City Mission Board was very fortunate in securing such an able and efficient corps of Christian workers in this city. Every one of the deaconesses are trained and educated for their special fields of labor. And the house-mother, Miss Alberta Keithley, at St. Mark's Hall, is a graduate of domestic science, besides having had several years of profitable experience in teaching.

Luncheon was served by the women of the Second Church, and a fine social hour was spent over the teacups and in good fellowship. The following pastors were in attendance: Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Rev. W. W. Holmes, Rev. H. T. Carley, Rev. R. F. Harrell, Rev. N. E. Joyner, Rev. John A. Rice, Rev. S. H. Werlein.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, the efficient superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, stirred the hearts of all with one of his characteristic ten minutes' talk. Brother Joyner always has something to say, and he says it just like he believed it. St. Mark's Hall is growing by leaps and bounds under his supervision.

Mr. T. V. Ellzey told of his recent trip to Cuba and of the fine school the Woman's Board has in the enchanted island. The field is ready for work, but the workers are indeed few.

Miss Kate Gordon was asked to speak on the annual address of Miss Belle H. Bennett. Her address was especially on the memorial asking for equal rights of the women in church. She said that it was unjust that the women should not have equal representation in all the enterprises.

Dr. S. H. Werlein delivered a forceful address on our duty to the foreigner and how to reach him. He said that if every church in New Orleans would support a foreign missionary it would bring great inspiration and blessing to the home church.

A DISCIPLE.

CITY MISSION BOARD.

The City Mission Board of the Woman's Home Mission Society, M. E. Church, South, held its regular monthly meeting at St. Mark's Hall on Wednesday, January 26. The attendance was fair, and Mrs. W. W. Carre occupied her place as presiding officer. Rev. N. E. Joyner, superintendent, and Miss Margaret Ragland, deaconess, made interesting reports of the work at St. Mark's Hall. Mrs. Lilly Meekin reported for Mary Werlein Church. Dr. and Mrs. Werlein were introduced, and both responded with pleasant words of greeting. The next meeting of the Board, in February, will be devoted to the election of officers, and the annual meeting, which will be an all-day affair, will take place at St. Mark's Hall on the fourth Wednesday in March.

On the night of Jan. 18, 1910, at State Springs, Miss., the death angel visited the home of Brother T. J. McCluskey, and claimed for its victim Sister T. J. McCLUSKEY. She was born Jan. 2, 1867, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the tender age of thirteen, and was married to T. J. McCluskey, April 29, 1888. Of this union were born seven sons and one daughter, four of whom died in infancy. In the death of this noble Christian woman, the church and community have sustained a great loss. She was a loving wife, a devoted mother, and a true Christian. She remarked just before she crossed the river of death, "All is well with me." Our loss will be her eternal gain. May the rich blessings of the Lord rest upon the bereaved family. J. C. McELROY.

SANFORD PATTERSON was born in Georgia, March 23, 1823, and died at Buena Vista, Miss., Jan. 19, 1910, aged 86 years, 9 months, and 26 days. Not only was Brother Patterson one of the oldest citizens of this county, but one of the most honored. To know him was to revere and love him. He came to Mississippi in early life, before the Indians had left here. In the year 1871, he was wedded to Miss Kittle Smith. Of this union there was one son born, Mr. Smith Patterson, an honored citizen of this place. Brother Patterson's home life was most beautiful; he was always kind and affectionate not only to his immediate family, but to his friends as well. In early life he was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, but for the last twenty-six years, he was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, and for several years he was an official member in Buena Vista charge. He had lived such a devoted life that even in his intense suffering he saw heaven and desired to go and live with God. His death was triumphant. To his devoted wife and son we extend our sympathy.

O. P. ARMOUR.

SAM ANMONS was born thirty years ago in Scott County, the oldest of a family of eight children. On the death of his father, some twelve years ago, the parental responsibility of the house fell upon his shoulders and right nobly did he do his duty. He was a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pelahatchie, a Knight of Pythias and a Woodman of the World. He was a young man of most modest demeanor and gentle and retiring disposition. Never by word or act was he known to intentionally offend anyone. He lived a life worthy of emulation. As a guardian in the home he was watchful, loving and indulgent. Brothers and sisters looked to him as to a devoted father. As a member of the church he was true to every vow, proud of his membership, and ready always to respond to the call of service. As a citizen he practiced all the term implies. He was honorable always, never hesitating to stand for civic purity. The sympathy of the town and of all who knew Sam Anmons goes out freely to the bereaved family. His godly life, his open Christian character is a splendid legacy to his home, and may it be an inspiration to all who know him.

JOHN RUNDLE.

HAMILTON JENKINS was born in Yazoo County, Miss., near Tranquil Church, Aug. 27, 1880, and died July 3, 1909. He was the son of Warren and Quenette Jenkins. A more dutiful son I have never known. He was a home-loving and mother-loving boy, who never forgot for a moment obedience and the thoughtfulness of his dear mother. All during his long and tedious illness, lasting three weeks, he seemed fully to realize his sickness was unto death, which he never seemed to dread except for the grief and anguish his death would cause his precious mother, and frequently he would lay his feverish hand on hers and in the tenderest sympathy, would say: "My poor, poor, mamma." How unselfish, Christ-like! Hamilton had joined the Methodist Church, but had not been received into its membership here below, but doubtless had been received into that communion where none but Christ's are admitted. We would commend to the broken hearts God's healing grace, and bid them seek that realm where death never enters and where heart-aches are not known. J. E. GRAY.

HAMILTON JENKINS, son of Warren and Mrs. Twenett Jenkins, was born in Yazoo County, Miss., Aug. 27, 1880, and, from the place of his birth, passed to that bourne from which no traveler ever returns the 3rd of July 1909. As his former pastor, I bear record to the fact that his life and manners were simple and without ostentation. The glare and glamor of the world had but little attraction for him. He loved home and its environments, and was constant and faithful in his labors that he might add to the comforts of the home-circle. He was a frequenter of the house of God, and always listened with seriousness to the message from the pulpit. As a son, he was thoughtful and obedient; as a friend, he was true; as a character, unobtrusive, yet in his quiet and unique way, he could always be depended on. In childhood he was dedicated to God in baptism at the hands of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, and though he never gave expression to deep religious conviction, yet when the time came for him to face the last dread enemy, he was calm and firm in his last message to his parents: "I am going home to heaven." Stricken with typhoid fever, from the first he said that he was going to die; and, with the idea of life more abundant, he fell asleep. May this fact, together with a firm faith in Christ, cheer and comfort those who now mourn, because our friend and brother is no longer to be found in the walks of men. J. W. CAMPBELL.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to his mercy-seat our beloved brother and friend, GEORGE RHEW PAGE, a Christian of pure and untarnished life, a consistent member of our church and for many years, when he was strong and in health, an active and energetic member of this board, who performed his trust as he did all trusts imposed on him, with zeal and fidelity; we, the Board of Stewards of the M. E. Church, South, at Clarksdale, Miss., assemble to pay tribute to his memory. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That his church, his city and his county have sustained a great loss in his decease, and will miss him most when the hour calls for good and fearless men.

Second—That the memory and example of this pure and generous man do their work in the lives of his friends and his people.

Third—That the sincere sympathy of the members of this board and of his church be extended to his widow and children in this dark hour of personal bereavement and loss by the death of this noble man, brave and fearless citizen, tender and gentle husband and father.

Fourth—That this tribute to the memory of our deceased brother be spread upon the Minutes of this Board, and copies furnished to his family.

ECONOMY IN DESSERTS.

Every housewife knows that, whatever the cause may be, the cost of living has greatly increased in the last few years, and she is often perplexed as to where she can economize. Of course, the cost of food is naturally the largest item in every household, and although few people wish to economize in this direction, it is right here that economy can be practiced.

With two meals a day, we have some kind of dessert, and it is the purpose of this article to show that nice, wholesome and nutritious desserts can be made at little cost and labor, as against the expensive pies, cakes and puddings, which the average family consumes and which injure the health, deplete the pocket book, and make a slave of the woman who prepares the meals.

By way of comparison we have taken the following from recipes in a standard cook book:

Custard Pie. 3 eggs, cost 9c; 1 pt. milk, 4c; 3 tablespoonfuls sugar, 2c; 1 cup flour, 1c; lard, 2c; making a cost of 18c. Salt and nutmeg we have not figured here. The cost of a mince pie is about the same as that of a custard pie.

Sponge Cake. A sponge cake is probably one of the cheapest cakes made, and this requires 5 eggs, cost, at least 15c; 1-2 lb. sugar, 3c; 1-4 lb. flour, 1c; lemon, 2c; total cost, 21c, while a fruit cake costs double this amount.

Orange Pudding. One of the simplest puddings which can be made is an orange pudding and this requires 4 oranges, 10c; 2 eggs, 6c; 1 qt. milk, 8c; corn starch, 1c; flour, 1c; sugar, 3c; total cost, 29c.

Now see what you can do with Boston Crystal Gelatine.

Lemon Jelly. A quart of lemon jelly costs—gelatine, 6c; 2 lemons, 4c; 1 cup sugar, 3c; total cost, 13c.

Coffee Jelly. A quart of coffee jelly costs—6c for gelatine, 3c for sugar, while your coffee need cost you nothing additional—save your breakfast coffee grounds. Just pour over them 2 cups of boiling water, and after standing a few minutes, your flavor is ready. Total cost, 9c.

Chocolate Pudding. For something a little more fancy try a chocolate pudding—gelatine, 6c; milk, 8c; sugar, 3c; chocolate, 1c; total cost, 18c.

In this comparison we have tried to be fair, and have taken only such cake and pastry as is used every day in the home, and as every housewife knows, all fancy cakes and puddings cost much more than the plain dishes mentioned here.

There is another reason in favor of using gelatine, and that is the economy of time. There is no cooking, straining, mixing or baking; simply add water, sugar, and fruit to the gelatine.

These facts, together with the nutritious and healthful desserts obtained by its use, make Boston Crystal Gelatine the ideal dessert. Crystal Gelatine Company, Boston, Mass.

TO YOUNG WOMEN

You may be laying up for yourselves much future suffering, by not treating your ailments promptly, (before they have a chance to become chronic), with that well-known female remedy, Wine of Cardui,—about which you have so often heard.

Look ahead, and plan for a healthy, happy life, by preventing female trouble from getting a foothold.

Try that famous medicine, Cardui, which has helped so many others, will help you.

For young girls just entering into womanhood and young ladies whose life duties have not long begun, Cardui is often of vital importance, giving them strength for daily tasks.

Read what Mrs. Mary Hudson, of Eastman, Miss., says about her young sister: "While staying with me, and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of Cardui and it helped her at once."

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay, if it had not been for that wonderful medicine."

"Now I am in better health than in three years."

Try Cardui.

ALMSGIVING AND PRAYER.

Matt. vi 1-15.

Golden Text: Take heed that you do not your alms before men, to be seen of them. Matt. vi 1.

Let us listen again to the wonderful words spoken by him who spoke as one having authority, preserving as far as we can, an unbroken line of holy and profitable meditation. In all of the Master's teaching there is an expressed or implied warning against doing any religious act for the purpose of gaining the approval and admiration of our fellow-men. Whatever is done by a good man is only the evidence of what is in his heart, from which it is actuated. Right motives are essential to true religion. As God said to Samuel, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." I Sam. xvi 7. Occupying a large space in the mind of man, is a great desire for the admiration of his fellows. The Scribes and Pharisees were of this sort, and Jesus said that unless our righteousness exceeds theirs we shall in no case, enter the kingdom of heaven. Under this warning, he continues in his great sermon to lay special stress on anything done for the sake of outward appearance. Even in bestowing charity, all things must be avoided save a desire to relieve suffering, and to show them the love of Christ as the active force behind our deeds; otherwise we have not the approval of our Heavenly Father. The trumpet can loudly sound in a church contribution, or in the bestowment of public charity, the same having, in some way, made its appearance in public print, that the donor may have glory of men; and they have it, it being the reward sought. The Father rewards openly a deed done secretly, and the world wonders, looking vainly for the cause of so blessed an effect. The most acceptable thanks that the children could render to the Father's kindness, is a life full of his service. Spoken gratitude to a human benefactor is soon forgotten, but some tangible return, that speaks silently of appreciation, is most lasting. Jesus shows us plainly that every work has its reward, and the reward is the choice of the worker. If the glory of men, they have it; if the glory of the Father, they have it.

Now, the great Teacher leads us into the holy and sublime realms of prayer, the holy of holies, where the soul is in sweet communion with its Maker, the Father of spirits, giving adoration and worship in spirit and in truth. When Christians are gathered "all with one accord in one place" as in the sanctuary, assembled for prayer, there is unity of spirit, and intercession is made conforming to the needs of all. He who speaks in prayer then, is the voice of the assembled worshippers; such seasons of prayer unite and solidify the members of one body. It is the sweet influence of the prayer meeting that establishes a real relation of brotherhood and sisterhood in Christ. The Lord is now speaking more directly of individual prayer, and gives no command, because prayer is present in the desire of him who would enter the kingdom, so "Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet." Go away from the world, from all its cares and perplexities; go into that secret room that is the scene of many nights wrestling with the spirit, yes, that room which is so dear to thy heart. Many a time there is a sweet consciousness of the presence of angels sent to minister to dire need and desire. "And when thou hast shut thy door," shut out even all that are dearest, all except the Lord Jesus. The relation between thee and thy Father is in secret. Pray to him in secret, open wide the door of thy heart, come boldly to the throne of grace, have no fear, for Jesus hath thrown around thee his righteousness, and in his name we have access to the Father. Make thy confession to God; he needs no explanation of your weakness, he will pardon when all the world cannot. Having thus prayed in secret, the reward is bestowed openly while the spiritually blind are filled with wonder.

A set time for united prayer, as family prayer, is proper, but a form of prayer to be used on such occasions does not lead the soul into the earnestness of acceptable supplication. The words of the prayer of the anxious one are not his own, but are given by the Spirit who helpeth our infirmities, and our wants are told in the form of words, "our Father knoweth what things we have need of." Yes, the loving Father knows, but he wants to hear the cry that speaks of a dependence upon him. What a picture! Jesus, surrounded by those eager to learn, teaching a first lesson in prayer. The first prayer we learned was the same that Jesus is now teaching, and we learned it from mother as we knelt bowing our head upon her knee. It is the prayer of all prayers, all-sufficient, all-embracing, giving honor and glory to our Father which art in heaven; asking that his kingdom may come on earth, that he may rule the nations as he rules in our hearts; that all may seek to know what the will of the Lord is and live in conformity thereto; asking that his kind care over us may continue; that the needs of our body, as well as the needs of our soul, may be supplied. We have all offended the Father, but we need not ask him to pardon us unless we have first forgiven them who have offended us. We know that we are weak, we cannot trust ourselves; then, Father, permit us not to go where we may be tempted. Deliver us from every evil work or influence, even from the very appearance of evil; we must be pure in heart to see the power and the glory of God, which is now and shall ever be.

This is the prayer, the basis of all prayer, and it will be answered, for the asking in its every petition except one, and the answer to that is conditional. If any have ever wronged you, you must forgive them, forgive them from your heart, and unless you do this, there will be for you "no place of repentance, though you seek it carefully with tears."

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

THAT REPRESENTATIVE AND MONUMENTAL CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

SOME FACTS.

The purpose to erect a church building in Washington, D. C., that will be representative and monumental, is not new. The leaders of our Church in the early 50's saw the need of such a structure, and the duty of our Methodist people at large to erect it. Rev. J. C. Granberry, afterward Bishop, and Dr. W. W. Bennett, presented a memorial to the General Conference of 1858; and this Conference, acting upon a motion made by Rev. Andrew Hunter, of Arkansas, and Dr. David S. Doggett, of Virginia, who was later elected Bishop, approved the erection of such a church, as the following extract from the records of that Conference will show:

The committee to whom was referred the memorial of the Quarterly Conference, of Washington City Station, Virginia Conference, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to present the following:

"The interest in behalf of which your memorialists plead is one of the greatest importance to the Southern Church, and to the cause of true religion in the metropolis of the nation. * * * We ought to have a more spacious building and a more convenient location. We need a larger and better situated building, not, we repeat, for ourselves, but for the accommodation of the Southern Methodists, who are here in crowds all the year, or the months of the session of Congress. With such advantage, we are confident that we could enlarge the sphere of our operations to the material advancement of the sacred cause which we all hold so dear."

Your committee would also call the attention of the General Conference to the fact that all the leading denominations of the country are taking measures for the establishment of large and influential churches in the national metropolis. The Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Northern Methodists have been making most strenuous efforts to increase their numbers, and influence in the Federal city. All these churches, with the exception, perhaps, of the Episcopal, have sent their agents far and wide through the North and the South, soliciting funds for the purpose of building large and commodious houses of worship. Why should we be behind all other denominations in this respect?"

The plan of these leaders was not carried out; but through no fault of theirs, nor from any lack of merit in their cause. The war which immediately followed made any forward movement in church work almost impossible. But the need for a representative church building for Southern Methodism in Washington City has never ceased. Early in 1906 the Quarterly Conference of the Mount Vernon Place Church presented a resolution to the Baltimore Conference; and from that Conference a memorial was sent up to the General Conference of 1906, requesting that the plans adopted by the General Conference of 1858 be again taken up and prosecuted to completion. That we are now thoroughly committed to this enterprise and must erect a representative and monumental building is made clear by the following extract from the Minutes of the General Conference:

"The City of Washington is a center of commanding importance in religious and educational work, as well as in our civil and political affairs. It is also the center of influence that affect every part of our country."

Other denominations have long since seen the importance of Washington City, and have strengthened their influence and the influence of the Church of God, by erecting in that city, large, attractive, well-equipped and representative church buildings. This they have done in most instances, by means of contributions from their membership throughout the Union. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assembled in Birmingham, Ala., heartily endorse the movement, and approves the purpose to erect in the Capital City of our general government a church building that will be truly representative of the progressive spirit, the strength, the life and the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Second—Believing, as we do, that such a building cannot be erected for less than $275,000, and knowing the inability of our Washington City membership to provide so large an amount, we propose that, if the Mount Vernon Place Church, Washington, D. C., will become responsible for $75,000, that we agree to pledge the Church at large to an effort to provide $200,000.

A QUESTION OF DUTY.

The highest authority, and the wisest leaders in our Church have spoken, and we must build, or else be disloyal to this high authority, and discredit the wisdom of our leaders. Being a connectional church, the voice of the General Conference is the voice of the Church, and no one may refuse to obey the direction thus given without being disloyal. The action of the General Conference, authorizing the erection of this representative church, was not secret; the whole Christian world is aware of it; therefore, the refusal to obey its direction would not only be disloyal, but we would humiliate ourselves before the entire Christian world.

WHAT OTHERS HAVE DONE.

Other denominations of our country have recognized this obligation, and the importance of being properly represented at the national metropolis. With contributions from all their people, several of the greatest denominations have erected their representative buildings. The Baptists have a worthy building, recently improved at a cost of $150,000. The original plan was largely the result of the gift of one man, a Georgian. Our Presbyterian brethren have invested $215,000 in their magnificent building. The Methodist Episcopal Church, after several years of earnest effort, completed their metropolitan church, which is a credit to the Methodists of the North. Besides these, the Lutherans, the United Brethren, the Reformed, the Christian, and the Protestant Episcopal Churches, all have their representative buildings, erected by contributions from their membership at large. Of course, the Roman Catholic Church is represented in the Capital, with buildings many and costly. The Episcopalians of the Union are now investing $1,500,000 in a great cathedral and in college buildings. While other denominations are responding to the call of duty, and undertaking to perform that task which devolves upon them, by planting themselves thus firmly in the seat of government, shall we stand aloof, and of them all, be the only one to refuse? The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, cannot afford to do less than her sister denominations have done.

PATRIOTISM.

It is our plain duty, as a Church, to share, equally with the other denominations, the work of maintaining right religious influences at the seat of national government. We of the South, love our country as truly as those of any other section. In the South, we have a distinctive civilization. Our ideals are high; our Christian faith is sound. As the temple stood in the midst of Jerusalem, the supreme expression of the Hebrew faith and life, so should we give expression to our faith and devotion to our distinctive ideals, by erecting and maintaining a worthy temple in our national metropolis. The religious ideals that prevail in the Nation's Capital will be the ideals of the land. We of the South, owe the Nation and the world a duty, and we must not be slow to perform it. The Church at large must respond to the call that will be made. Our people whom God has blessed with wealth must hear the call of their Church and give liberally. "We should honor our Christ with the best that we have in the best way, before our own people and the world."

In making an appeal to the Church at large, for the erection of our representative building, nothing is being asked for the Mount Vernon Place congregation. They are sufficiently able to erect a new building, or to remodel and improve the present Mount Vernon Place Church, so as to meet the demands of their local congregation, but they are not able, and it is not right to expect it of them, to erect a building which will be representative of the loyalty and ability of our people of the Southland. They can care for themselves, but they cannot care for the honor of the Church at large.

PROGRESS.

Considerable progress has been made by the committee appointed by the last General Conference to have special charge of this work in connection with the General Board of Church Extension. This special committee is composed of Bishops W. A. Candler and E. E. Hoss and Dr. W. F. McMurry. The assistant secretary elected at the last session of the General Board, in Memphis, and the General Conference committee, have been busily engaged in an effort to interest the Church in this enterprise. The Mount Vernon Place Church, Washington City, stand ready to furnish the $75,000 required of them by the General Conference. The Baltimore Conference has pledged $25,000, and many of the other Annual Conferences, by resolution, have declared themselves ready to do their part.

A National Building Committee has been organized, announcement of which will be made in a later issue. These representative laymen will meet, at an early date, in Washington City, and after adopting plans for the building, will present the enterprise to the Church at large.

With so just a cause, and such wise, consecrated laymen to assist, those to whom the work is committed feel that success is assured.

The phonograph is gaining recognition as the ideal entertainer for the man who wishes to inculcate in his family a love of home associations. Its popularity bids fair to realize the oft-quoted wish of its inventor, "I want to see an Edison Phonograph in every home." For the home the catalogs contain the songs and melodies that never die—those that are ballowed in our memories by the thoughts of the loved ones who once sang them, as well as patriotic selections and sacred numbers that lend their influence to making better citizens, sons and daughters of us all.

Dr. J. W. Blosser, whose likeness appears above, is well-known throughout the country because of his remarkable success in the treatment of catarrh, deafness, bronchitis and asthma.

He has discovered a method of treating these diseases which is different from all others, both in method and effect. It is not a spray or atomizer, douche, salve, cream nor inhaler. It "opens up" and cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs, then stops the nasal discharge and spitting, and permanently heals the diseased membranes.

Any sufferer may have a demonstration of what this remedy will do by sending name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., who will send a five days' treatment and an illustrated booklet, absolutely free. Those who have availed themselves of this free offer have been surprised at the pleasing and wonderful effect of the remedy. The full treatment is not expensive.

Tidings from the Field

Montrose, Miss.

On the fourth Sabbath in December it was the privilege of your correspondent to worship with our Methodist people in the enterprising little city of Newton. The newly-appointed pastor, Rev. L. F. Alford, delivered a sensible and spiritual discourse to the delight and edification of his hearers and received at the close a cordial greeting from the members of his flock and friends who were in attendance on this initial service, despite the severity of the weather.

Newton Methodists are excellent and up-to-date folk, and with their well-organized departments of church activity, are making good, in these stirring times, for the honor of Christ and his kingdom. A tender memory abides of the devoted life and stalwart character of their lately-deceased shepherd, whose pastorate extended through three years of happy residence there.

The progressive presiding elder of the Newton District has headquarters here, and occupies the new and modern parsonage, constructed under the wise superintendence of the former sub-bishop, the Rev. J. M. Weems, D.D. Upon this hospitable home the chastening hand of sore affliction has fallen, and we devoutly hope ere long relief may be had without sorrow.—W. A. Betts.

Slate Springs, Miss.

We have had a long move from Wall Hill to Slate Springs. We regretted to part with the friends in our old charge; they had been good to us; but we are not sorry that we are at Slate Springs. It does one's heart good to shake hands with these good people. They know how to make a pastor and his family feel welcome. On moving into the parsonage, we looked around and discovered that Santa Claus had already been there. I will not consume space to tell about his gifts, but will only say that every thing was nice and highly appreciated. Our hearts rejoiced and we gave thanks to God for his great blessings. Nor have the kindnesses shown us been confined to our own people; but the Baptists and others have joined heartily in with them. The pastor has made his first round on the charge and found everything most encouraging. We are hopeful of a good year.—Mrs. J. C. McElroy.

WHY GATE FEES CONTINUE AT MOUNT VERNON.

"The expense of maintaining Mount Vernon is very heavy, even without the purchasing of relics," Abby Gunn Baker explains in her story of "The Preservation of Mount Vernon" in the February Century. "The buildings are old, and the restorations and repairs must be continuous. Dredging the channel is an item of large expense which must occasionally be met" (over ten thousand dollars being the last outlay). The article goes into further explanation of just why the association's present endowment fund of one hundred thousand dollars is still insufficient without gate fees.

My dear Dr. Woolley: After more than ten years of worse than slavery, I began in June, 1905, to take your cure for the morphine habit. I think I got four months' treatment, but did not use all of the last month's supply, and I was entirely cured. For over three years I have been a new man, and have had no desire at all for the "dope." When I began the treatment I weighed one hundred and forty pounds, and now I weigh one hundred and seventy-two pounds, and feel good all the time. I feel that I owe you many apologies for not writing long ago, but better late than never, I suppose. If you can use this letter to help some other poor sufferer, please do so. With a heart full of gratitude for what God has permitted you to do for me, I remain, Yours truly,

Editorial.

A little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion.—Bacon.

Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things; whatever increases the authority of the body over your mind, that thing to you is sin.—Susannah Wesley.

Self-control is an element of great strength. There is much truth in the old aphorism, "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." One who keeps himself in hand has the battle half won. The master-spirits of the race have been those whose equanimity nothing could disturb—men whose composure was as even in the storm as in the sunshine. The noblest conquest man can make is to conquer the world within.

"All is fair in politics," seems to be the creed of many office-seekers of our time. But such a doctrine is false to the very core. Public deception is not less reprehensible than private deception. Acting a lie to win the honors and emoluments of office differs in no material particular from practicing a falsehood for gain in the ordinary transactions of life. The only honest man is the one who is honest in all things.

If we really love the Master, we should find some way of showing it. Merely attending Church and talking of what he has done for us is not enough. We should sacrifice and toil for his precious cause. Unless we give all we can and work all we can, unless we have some of his spirit of earnestness and self-abnegation, we are but poor disciples. The marks of suffering and service are the best attestations of loyalty and devotion. "There is no cant in a scar; no hypocrisy in a life unselfishly given for others."

We have scant respect for nude art. There is a tremendous power for good or evil in suggestion. A noble sentiment expressed in painting or in sculpture may be a perpetual source of blessing and inspiration. On the other hand, a picture or statue which suggests the impure may kindle in man's bosom the unholy fire of lust and start him in paths which lead to the deepest degradation. We do not doubt that the scale of human destiny has often been turned by an appeal to the passions made by a scene exhibited upon canvas or in marble. They who would keep clean must seek to shut out evil thoughts. It is a most significant fact that in the exhumed city of Pompeii, where it is known that licentiousness flourished openly and without restraint, art in all of its forms was thoroughly sensuous and debased. Parents cannot be too careful in selecting pictures for the walls of their homes. And many of the prurient calendars sent out nowadays should be excluded, as one would quarantine against a contagious pestilence.

THE WOMAN'S RIGHTS MEMORIAL.

The memorial asking the General Conference to accord to the women of Southern Methodism all the rights of laymen seems to have awakened very little enthusiasm throughout the Church. We confess to a feeling of gratification at this, because we are firmly convinced of the unwisdom of the movement. For Miss Belle Bennett, the originator of it, we have the most profound respect. We regard her as an extraordinary woman—great both in head and heart—and we do not in the least question the sincerity of her motives, but we think she has made a serious mistake in attempting the agitation of this question. It disturbed the harmony of the Methodist Episcopal Church for several years, and we should dislike to see our branch of Methodism pass through a similar period of unrest and unwholesome contention. Happily, however, our section is so much more conservative than the North, that there is little probability of the movement gathering sufficient strength to make it with us a serious source of disturbance.

But, why do we oppose delegating to the women of the Church the rights of laymen? First, because we think such action would be out of harmony with apostolic and primitive precedent. Woman, to be sure, had an honored place in the early Church, but the sphere of service in which she operated was in correspondence with her aptitudes. In ministries of mercy and charity and in the work of private evangelism she was at the forefront then, as she is to-day. Many of her deeds of love and devotion have been immortalized by being recorded upon the pages of Holy Writ, and names of good women who figured in New Testament history will shine resplendent till time shall be no more. But no woman was called to the apostolic office, or ordained a presbyter or bishop, or sent out as an evangelist; and though there were women present at some of the Apostolic Councils, nowhere do we find them speaking or taking a leading part. We firmly believe that God, who made woman different from man and endowed her with capacities which man does not possess, designed her to work for the extension of his kingdom in those fields to which she is specially adapted—fields which are in no sense inferior to those in which men serve. In other words, we do not consider it wise to abandon the divine plan as disclosed in the government of the Apostolic Church, and which has been adhered to by practically all of the great bodies of Christendom through the subsequent centuries.

But what need is there for the proposed legislation? Have men failed so signally in the work of the Church committed to their hands that they need to be re-enforced or relieved? Are the women of Southern Methodism afraid to trust their husbands, their brothers, and their sons to act for them in the government and larger financial affairs of the Church as they do in those of the State? Has woman been so wronged in the administration of church matters that she needs to clamor for power to protect herself and redress her grievances? No, no; as we see it, this movement is wholly unnecessary and unwarranted. It promises no good to the Church and no benefit to the women of Southern Methodism.

Nor do we believe that this memorial voices the sentiment of the greater part of the womanhood of the Church. On the contrary, we believe that a large majority of them are either indifferent or opposed to it. Of those whom we have heard speak of it more were against it than for it. If we are not mistaken, the leaders are finding it difficult to stir up any enthusiasm on the subject. As is admittedly the case with woman suffrage, this appears to be a minority measure championed only by a few. And it is easy to see why the women of Southern Methodism do not take readily to this proposal. Their position in the Church is one of great honor and usefulness. They have their missionary societies; they do most of the teaching in the Sunday schools; tasks fit for angels invite them on every side, and they may make their influence felt around the globe. The uncrowned queens of hearts and homes, they are more interested in enlisting their masculine loved ones in the work of the Church, and thus saving them, than in claiming any neglected right which they may be thought to possess or occupying a seat in any church tribunal, however exalted. No franchise in State or additional ecclesiastical power could open to them a loftier sphere of service, or enlarge the measure of their usefulness.

And still another reason why we object to this memorial is that we do not like the tendency of it. Its trend is manifestly in the wrong direction. Having obtained the rights of laymen, and being vested with legislative power, would it not be the next step of those who are so anxious for women to have every possible privilege to demand all the rights of the clergy? Would not the inevitable sequence of woman in the General Conference be woman in the pulpit and woman in connectional positions? Miss Bennett may not favor this, but there are some supporting the movement who do. But even if there were not those now pressing the proposal will pass away and others will come after them. In matters of this kind, present personal considerations should count for nothing, but we need to deal with principles—to look far into the future. According to our view, there is nothing in this memorial to command favorable consideration. On the other hand, we think the General Conference should stamp the seal of its disapproval upon it so quickly and so emphatically that it will never again be brought forward. With a history unsurpassed since the days of the apostles behind us, and a future radiant with promise before us, it is no time for Southern Methodism to be temporizing with uncertain and dangerous innovations. Nor, as we have said, do we believe that the conservative womanhood of the Church would have us run the risk of this proposed experiment.

Miss Mattie Plunkett, the State Librarian of Mississippi, has submitted her biennial report to the Legislature, now in session. It shows that 3854 books and periodicals have been added to the collection under her care during the past two years. Of these, nearly 1500 were law books. The law library at the Mississippi capitol is one of the most complete in the United States. Miss Plunkett called the attention of the General Assembly to the fact that more space is needed for the rapidly accumulating volumes.

REV. JOHN A. B. JONES.

By Mrs. Nolan B. Harmon.

'Tis midnight! Darkness o'er the weary world,
While sable shadows softly sweep athwart
The weirdly wailing, plaintive pines, which sigh
A requiem, sad and sweet. With vigil close
They watch outside the sacred chamber walls,
Within whose pale thy faithful servant lies
Him down to quiet sleep.

He is tired, Lord!

For eight decades of strenuous, toilsome tasks,
Through war's alarms and busy, peaceful days,
With step unfaltering and a purpose pure,
He walked adown life's long, oft lonely lane.
Anon he soothed some pilgrim's poignant pain;
Or stopped to bind a bruised brother's wounds;
To cheer discouraged soul, who found the path
Too rough for untried feet. He held the cup
Of water cold to famished lips, or plucked
A wayside flower to brighten saddened heart.
And now, O Lord, this feeble form needs rest!
(Who lifts, himself must lean the more on Thee.)
The night-time falls—with soul at perfect peace
With God and man, he falls across his couch
To slumber sweet.

'Tis morn! Eternal day!

Supernal gleams of light on streets of gold,
Aslant the gates of pearl and mirrored clear,
In sparkling stream of life. Transcendent scope!
A vision fair, unmeet for mortal eyes!
On ear attuned, with wondrous rapture falls
Celestial songs, angelic peans of praise,
While long-lost hands stretch forth in welcome sweet.
"His end is peace!" Lo, precious promise true—
A rock of ages! Hark, the summons came!
The call! * * * From night to day, from death to life,
From earth to heaven, and in a moment flee!
Thy servant, Lord, awakes!

"SOME EXPERIENCES AND ADVICE ON THE ITINERANCY."

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

A brother said to me some months ago: "I would not mind having you superannuate if you write at least once a month to our Advocate." Well, the inevitable has come. A brother much younger in the ministry than myself said to me fourteen years ago: "Brother Lewis, you will soon have to superannuate. When the time comes, I want you to submit to it gracefully." A wise suggestion. I have often thought of it, and, I trust, profited by it.

For fifty-two years, or since November, 1857, I have been connected with the Methodist itinerancy. Fifty-two times my name has been called in connection with some pastoral charge. Fifty-two times the question has been asked: "Is there anything against him?" In every instance the answer has been: "Nothing." How will it be "when the roll is called up yonder?" Will it be said: "Nothing against him?" God grant it may be so said.

Let me say to my young brethren in the ministry: Keep a clean record. Never leave a charge with a debt unpaid. One time since the close of the war between the States, I had to leave a charge where I had been two years with a twenty-dollar store account unpaid. In a short time after reaching my new charge, I paid the account, and then resolved to keep out of debt after that. Better do without the luxuries—yea, some of the necessities of life—rather than "buy without a probability of paying." I knew two preachers when I was a boy, that were careless about debt. They were good preachers—above the ordinary—yet they went on almost in obscurity. What was the trouble? Well, that is the question. It was known that they were non-debt-paying men. That will cripple any man—preacher or layman.

Again, let me urge you to be men of one work. Be true to your calling. I knew two men when I was a boy, both young, vigorous, active; both splendid preachers and good singers. Yet they were not satisfied with the small salaries that were paid in those days (fifty-eight years ago). So one of them read medicine, became a good doctor; the other studied dentistry and became a fine dentist. In course of time these brethren had to locate because they could not do the work of an itinerant and at the same time practice another occupation. They went out in obscurity, were lost sight of. Now, my young brother, if you are really called of God to preach, do the work of a faithful exponent of God's Word, and let other vocations alone. If you are not called of God to the work of the ministry, the sooner you get out the better it will be for both you and the cause. All men are called to be Christians, but not all good men are called to be apostles, evangelists, pastors and teachers.

Again, let me urge you to be subject to the powers that be. One time, many years ago, I was displeased with my appointment. I was foolish enough to so express myself. I saw my error, repented and got forgiveness. I have been ashamed of myself for manifesting an ugly spirit ever since.

Now, my brother, if you are going to be a Methodist itinerant, be one. My first circuit was in some respects a hard one; yet I went, did the best I could and never enjoyed a work more in my life. I had thirteen appointments. My work was between 200 and 300 miles around. It is painful to hear a minister of the gospel complain because his work does not suit him in all respects. If you are really called to the work of the ministry, you ought to be willing to go where, in the judgment of the appointing power, you ought to go. The Bishop and his cabinet do the best they can. We ought to be willing to "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ."

THE OLD AND THE NEW, AND SOME OTHER THINGS.

By Rev. W. G. Harmon.

Editors, like other flora, have their seasons. They blossom like the spring, they fade like the autumn leaf, and at length they are no more. For nine years the New Orleans Christian Advocate has felt upon its tiller the hand of Dr. Boswell; now it is entering upon a new year with another hand at the helm. It may not be out of place to say a word in regard to the retiring and the incoming incumbents of the editor's chair. Such a position must be no sinecure. The man who occupies it should have the sympathy and the most loyal support of his brethren.

Southern Methodism has produced few nobler characters than John W. Boswell. He was so deeply imbedded in the traditions, doctrine, and practices of Methodism, that he seemed to have sunk his own personality into the consciousness of the Church. He was pronounced in his opinions and outspoken in the expression of them. He never carried anything up his sleeve, nor hid from friend or foe all that was in his heart. Yet, as an editor, he maintained in utter sincerity and with unswerving constancy his own personality with such Christian sweetness that no man ever regarded him with bitterness. He leaves no enemies, and even those who held opinions at wide variance with his never failed to express their admiration for and confidence in his goodness of heart.

The Advocate prospered under his administration. It had more pages, better type, and a larger body and higher class of reading matter when he left it than when he found it. Its circulation has steadily increased, and towards the close of his administration there was a steadily growing enthusiasm in all its constituent territory for the paper.

The new editor needs no introduction, certainly none from me. Yet I would take the liberty to say to those who have subscribed to the paper through my efforts, and in my meetings, that they have in the new editor abundant reason for renewing their subscriptions. And I take the liberty to make a personal appeal to each to do so, and to go further, and strive to circulate the paper more widely among their friends.

Brother Meek has always been a successful man—as pastor, and presiding elder—in the homes of rich and poor—above all, in the pulpit. He brings to his new work the ripe experience of long labor in many and varied fields, a cultivated mind well seasoned by responsibilities worthily borne, and above all a loyalty to the principles of Methodism as sincere and immovable as that of his predecessor. We are going to have a great paper, and we are all going to put our shoulder to the wheel and bring the subscription list up to the ten thousand mark. The publisher assures us that the present subscription price is calculated on that basis.

Personally, I shall retain the same relation to the paper I have endeavored always to hold—that of a humble, but enthusiastic and loyal supporter. It is our'n and we must make it their'n. I have not very much sympathy with the extreme conscientiousness (which sometimes verges close onto finickiness), that declares "I cannot appeal to my people to support the paper on the ground of Church loyalty." If they won't support it on any other ground, that is good enough ground—so they support it. Church loyalty supports some preachers and has made some revival meetings successful, when a basis of bare merit would have brought about disastrous results. I have heard rumors of loyalty bringing people out to hear the presiding elder. It might just as well put the paper into the home. There are members of the Church who aren't going to be interested in a Church paper except through Church loyalty. After it gets into the home they may develop another interest which will make them keep on taking it. A Church paper gets its steadiest support through Church loyalty. A lady told me the other day that her family had taken the Advocate since it was founded. That family wouldn't do without it, no matter what sort of paper it was, and that sort of support would make a good paper out of a poor one. With nine years of growth behind, with a remarkable history ante-dating that, and with a most intelligent and capable man as editor, a little loyal effort on the part of all of us should make the Advocate the best circulated Church paper in the connection.

I suppose no man within the territory of the Advocate has been in more intimate touch with more of its territory than I have. I find the most popular feature among ordinary people is the news feature. To many people articles are largely interesting because of the names that are signed to them. The writer is a friend, a former pastor, or some one the reader admires. But everybody will read news. The personal column was one of the best additions to the Advocate made during the administration of Dr. Boswell. It is at once the easiest and the hardest part of the paper to maintain. A postal card with an interesting news note on it is always sure of adding to the interest of the forthcoming paper. I find myself frequently, when reading this column (and I always read it before anything else—even my own articles), wondering why some dear friend never sends in anything about himself, and wishing that I might just read his name, and that he was getting along well.

It was my purpose at the beginning of last year to send in at least two hundred subscriptions to the Advocate office, and if my plans had carried, I should have done so. But last year was a year of great personal difficulty and affliction. I broke down in four meetings, and once went home in bed, after four days of raging fever and great pain. My schedule got tangled, and many of my engagements were broken because I felt physically unable to do the service the brethren who had invited me had a right to expect.

As I enter into this year I am feeling the effect of the large stretches of rest I had during the latter part of last year, and with the co-operation of the brethren whom I am to help I believe that I shall be able to return more than two hundred subscribers.

Despite the trying and humiliating experiences of continued breakdowns, God blessed my work last year. Nearly five hundred united with the churches during my meetings, and over five hundred family altars were pledged. I do not know how many came to the altar and professed conversion and reclamation, but I should say, estimating conservatively, perhaps eight hundred. Very few professed who did not join some church, and a great work was done among those who were already members of the Church. Since I have been engaged in evangelistic work—three years next August—about two thousand five hundred persons have joined the Church in meetings where I assisted.

I am entering into the new year grateful to God for continued favors. I shall never forget a remark of my saintly friend, Rev. H. P. Lewis, whose superannuation was a personal grief to me. In the meeting at Liberty, he remarked my increasing success in my work, and explained it by calling attention to the fact that each successful meeting added to the number of those who were praying for me. As I begin this year's work, I trust I have the prayers of all whom I love that God may keep me well, and give me physical strength for my work.

If it be not stringing out this rambling piece too far, I should like to say a word about my own pastor. Nothing could be pleasanter than the relations that exist between us. I believe our understanding is perfect. The lot on which my house is built, and the watch I tell time by, are continual reminders of my pastor's friendship. We have just closed a splendid year at Haynesville. Brother Woodward literally carved a new circuit out of the unoccupied territory around Haynesville. Rev. L. E. Wicht now has charge of this work. We raised about five hundred dollars for the Orphans' Home. I was very proud, though not surprised, to see that Brother Woodward had sent in the largest recent list of subscribers to the Advocate. We have organized the Laymen's Movement, and as leader, I have to work with me a committee of loyal and earnest men. We have pledged to raise the total missionary assignment on the charge by the first of May.

I had meant to close my article by suggesting a solution of the presiding elder problem which I hoped the General Conference might adopt, but my time is short and my space gone, so I'll never tell it, and the General Conference will have to work the problem out unaided by me. While I am on the subject of presiding elders, I will say that we were all mighty glad to have our old presiding elder for our new presiding elder. Those who attended the Louisiana Conference know how well he can preach. Better than his preaching ability is the fact that he convinces man that he knows in his own heart the meaning of experimental religion. We are expecting a great year in the district.

IS THE CHILD IN CHRIST? IS HE UNINFECTED BY NATURAL GENERATION?

By Rev. R. A. Ellis.

We have intimated the inapplicability of the Scriptures usually cited in proof of the moral infection of the race by natural generation.

The parable of the sower is introduced to prove that the race has not the germ of life. This parable, however, I think, rightly understood, in no wise contradicts the existence of life in germ, but rather suggests the necessity of its presence.

You could as rationally look for good results from sowing good seeds on bare rocks, as to look for satisfactory results from preaching the Word, or sowing the good seeds of the Word on the barren soil of a dead soul, which must be the condition of humanity if the penalty threatened was inflicted; and no repairs made by Divine grace for the race suitably fitting it for probation under a new system, the system of the grace of pardon. The power to act under the new way of life is of God, a gift from him and is life. "By grace are ye saved," says the apostle.

This, without violence, refers to the race. Through faith and that not of yourselves, applies to developed minds whose privilege and duty it is to develop this life by the grace of God.

It seems that it must be admitted that the power to act is of God; action on man's part is a voluntary use of the life given of God in correspondence with God's Word. Now, in case of non-action, the soul lies dormant, and ever will, until used in obedience to the law of its nature.

The parable of the talents is suggestive of universal life to man. It is arbitrary to restrict this parable to the church or any class of humanity. These three are selected in recognition of the varying capacities of mankind; and is intended to reveal the fact that God deals with men in correspondence with their respective abilities, together with the fact that what they have is the gift of another, and the proper use of its conditions, its increase or growth.

It is to be noted that the unfaithful servant retained his talent until the final day when it was ruthlessly taken from him.

This fact makes it rational to preach the gospel to every creature, for every creature is in possession of the moral capacity (for that is what is signified by the talents which was the gift of God) and constitutes the ground of expectation of enlargement. This construction of the parable is applicable to every human being, and is the rational ground and reason for his reprehensibility and punishment should he fail to enlarge his possessions. The idea of growth and enlargement is taught everywhere.

This suggests that regeneration is as it is in other realms of life, a growth, or development.

The knowledge of this new life, regenerated life, may not be known to the child if handled in a normal way. The development of soul life in the child may be as much hidden from it, as the development of intellectual life as to its beginning. By experience we do not know when we did first know. So is it with the properly trained child it need not know when it did first love God. But one may ask, Will not the child sin? More than likely. Adam sinned; it is hardly likely that his descendants would excel him in maintaining a perfectly sinless life, since there are so many more things to entice him to the wrong. Fortunately for him however, he is under the system of grace, the grace of pardon, giving an opportunity to mend his ways, and by grace in spite of his weakness, develop the life of the soul to such strength that it will assert its authority over the carnal mind, which is not subject to the law of God, nor can it be, for it is only subject to the will of the possessor who finds himself possessed of two sets of emotions, each wanting the ascendancy, and it is the high prerogative of the will to settle the contention between the two opposing elements that every man knows himself to possess. It is only the will to which the carnal mind can be made subject.

One set of emotions are based on the claims of our material nature, the other on the claims of our spiritual nature.

From the beginning it was not intended that the carnal should dominate the spiritual.

In the first instance of disobedience the death of the soul was the result. Under the dispensation of grace, sin does not result in the death of the soul in the same sense and degree, but lays the necessity of repentance.

Sins are wont to treat the carnal mind as sin.

But is it? It was a constituent element in man at his creation. It did, and does address and influence the will to choose the forbidden at the behest of the carnal appetite. But these inclinations are natural and innocent. Man would not be man without them.

Admitting the germ life of the soul. Since the fall, as the gift of God, it makes the race proper subjects for moral and religious training. It guarantees the well-being of the infant in case of its death. It is the most valid reason for beginning the religious training of the child as soon as it opens its eyes on the light of this world. We begin to talk to the child as soon as it is born, not because it understands what is said, but because we know that if the child is normal, it has the germ of intellectual life, and this attention is the law ruling and conditioning the development of intellectual strength.

For the same reason we should give the child religious instruction and counsel; give it the Word of God, the good seed, not to generate life, but to develop the germ life of the soul which it has in embryo, as it has in its physical and intellectual being.

The notion that this theory makes null and void the new birth, is rather its natural explanation so far as it is possible to explain the processes of Divine grace in preparing man for endless happiness.

Every form of life of which we have any knowledge has its beginning in germ, and the development from the germ state is made to depend on very different surroundings, from that which resulted in its germ state. Why the same facts are not recognized as applicable in the development of spiritual life as is all forms of life, whether in the animal or vegetable kingdom, is found in the fact that all other theories deny that the race has been begotten to life by Divine clemency.

In that case we are left in the meshes of fatalism. If the race has not life to begin with, when and how did that part of the race that has life get it? It is hardly rational to say, by hearing and believing the gospel, for that is equal to saying that the dead are expected to respond, and action is always a sign of life. It is hardly agreeable to say, through the preached Word, since that does not generate life. But is it not rational to understand that the Word is addressed to life for the purpose of improving and developing more life? Conversion is the prime object in preaching the gospel.

The terms, conversion and regeneration, are not the same as used in the Scriptures. Conversion may lead to an adjustment before God that regeneration may be a sequence. Regeneration is strictly a Divine work, man having no part in it; while one man may convert another, a man cannot regenerate another.

The case of Nicodemus has been referred to in proof of the fallacy of universal life being the heritage of humanity.

One writer in the Nashville Advocate says, Christ made it distinctly impressive in speaking to Nicodemus that the kingdom of God cannot be entered by any human until he is born of the Spirit.

Nicodemus, like humanity at large, in the absence of the proper cultivation of his spiritual nature, had acted under the impulses of his carnal nature, or mind, while the germ life of the soul had been lying almost dormant like the chick in the egg or the seed-corn in the crib.

While Nicodemus had perverted notions of the character of the kingdom of Christ, he had discernment enough to feel that he would like a place in it. It must have been the promptness of the germ life of the soul that sent him to Christ. In this, as in the development of all forms of life, law and rule must be observed in order thereto. All seeds that are sound and healthy represent forms of life, but the life in them will remain dormant until environments obtain suited to the life to be evolved, and when that condition obtains the new life hidden will begin to show itself—that is the God side of life. So in the adult world, the carnal mind has been allowed to run riot, no attention having been given the soul life, it has been kept dwarfed and but little discovery of its presence has been possible.

This being the case, we see the necessity and wisdom of preaching the gospel to induce men to change their course, and adjust themselves to the requirements of their spiritual natures and secure the work of regeneration.

By reason of this state and condition, the child is susceptible of being trained so that it may never know anything of its conversion, and yet it is a new life, a regenerated life.

A life begotten of God, a gift from God; the original life having been lost, and being passive in the loss and in no sense responsible for this depleted and morally dead condition, was passively restored to life by Divine fiat under a system of the grace of pardon, in case of sin, when repented of. The child, not being a sinner, having been restored to life by Divine grace, we have no trouble about dying infants. For one to say that God loves babies, and almost in the same breath say that they are sinners and need regeneration as much as the adult, can never show a word in the Bible that justifies the notion that God regenerates the dying infant to fit it for heaven or save it from hell.

On Feb. 2 an explosion took place in the shaft of the Palan mine at Las Esparanzas, Mexico, in which seventy lives were lost.

At several points on the Mississippi River, close to Greenville, Miss., work on the levees has been suspended owing to the high stage of the water.

Louis Paulhan, the world's champion aviator, is giving a series of aviation exhibitions in New Orleans this week. Paulhan came here on the invitation of Mayor Behrman and the Progressive Union.

The mayor of Indianapolis, Ind., has a novel way of dealing with violators of the Sunday law. Two saloonkeepers charged with violations will be compelled to keep their places closed until they can procure a letter from a minister certifying that they attended church services on the Sabbath. Mayor Shank announced that other violators will be dealt with in like manner.

Last Tuesday was observed as Mardi Gras Day in New Orleans. Gorgeous street pageants were witnessed day and night by a vast throng of people, which rendered the main thoroughfares almost impassable. The Crescent City is noted for its Carnival, and visitors come from far and near every season to enjoy the festivities and mirth which characterize the annual visits of King Rex to his capital city.

The National Association of Game Wardens met in convention Feb. 5-7 in the city of New Orleans. Mr. T. C. Pearson, commissioner for North Carolina, was acting president. Twelve States of the Union have commissioners or boards; twenty-seven have State wardens or single commissioners, seven have county or district supervision, while Arkansas has adopted the plan of enforcing these laws through sheriffs or other county officials.

Hon. Fountain L. Thompson, of North Dakota, has resigned his seat in the United States Senate on account of ill-health. He had held the position only a short time, having been appointed to succeed Senator Johnson, deceased, on the 10th of last November. Hon. W. E. Purcell has been named to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Thompson's resignation, and has already entered upon his duties at Washington. He is 53 years old, an able lawyer, and a Democrat.

The cost of living is to be investigated by Congress. On Feb. 1, Representative Payne, of New York, introduced a resolution in the lower house providing for an inquiry by the Ways and Means Committee to decide "whether prices are affected by any laws of the United States." On Feb. 2, Senator Lodge introduced a like resolution in the upper house, which provides for the appointment of a select committee of five senators to do the work. The senatorial leaders were not satisfied with the house plans, which they fear will result in a prolonged investigation, and have, through the finance committee, formulated a program for a sharp and quick inquiry into the subject.

On January 29 the board of physical culture and athletics at the University of Chicago laid the 1910 program, which was submitted to them, on the table, until they can see the action of the National Football Rules Committee, soon to meet. Coach Stagg was instructed to make out a schedule for soccer football, which is said not to be dangerous. This is the only kind the university will allow, unless the old game is satisfactorily reformed. A few years ago the churches were roundly ridiculed for their attitude toward this brutal sport, but time has abundantly vindicated their position.

The lower branch of Congress has passed a bill appropriating $215,000 to promote the study of the boll weevil and prevent the destruction of the cotton industry in the South. The Southern representatives made an effort to have the amount increased to $500,000, but the amendment was defeated by a small majority. The Republican party is anxious to break up the solid South when a political contest is on hand, but is none too liberal when it comes to appropriating money for its protection and industrial development.

Mayor William Yerger, of Greenville, Miss., was recently in Jackson, Miss., and criticized the arrangement of the Capitol building in having the doors to open inward, instead of outward, as the law requires. We think Mr. Yerger's point is well made, for if there is any place where the law should be obeyed to the last letter, it is at the Capitol, where the sovereignty of the State is enthroned. Mississippi has a beautiful Statehouse, but we have always felt that the Legislature should provide more liberally for the proper keeping of both the structure and the grounds upon which it is so admirably located.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Peabody Fund (for the advancement of education in the South), recently held in Washington City, $1,000,000 was given for the establishment of a Teachers' College in Nashville, Tenn. The gift was made conditional on the city of Nashville and the County of Davidson adding $750,000 to the sum. This they had agreed to do, but the attempt to merge the projected institution with Vanderbilt University has caused the Tennessee donations to be held up for a time by a process of injunction. Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, was elected a trustee of the Peabody Fund in place of the late Daniel C. Gilman, of Baltimore.

A bill abolishing secret fraternities at the University of Mississippi has been introduced in the lower house of the State Legislature and favorably reported upon. This question has occupied public attention in that commonwealth for some years. There are advantages in an institution of learning being under State supervision, but there are also disadvantages. Its revenues usually come easily, but it is well-nigh impossible to keep the hands of the politicians off of it. We think it should be an extreme case when a State Legislature gives ear to a portion of the student body, instead of the trustees, or undertakes to direct the governing body in minor matters of administration.

The press dispatches report that at a prohibition meeting in Atlanta a few days since, which was attended by Eugene Chafin, the late presidential candidate on that ticket, and Charles R. Jones, the national chairman, it was stated that the prohibitionists would operate vigorously in the South as a third party from now on, placing aspirants for the various offices in the field. We should dislike very much to see such a movement inaugurated in our section, and we trust that no such attempt will be made. The best work which has been done for the suppression of the saloon has been accomplished by treating it as a moral, rather than a political, question. It was against third-party prohibition that Bishop Gallo-way made his brave and memorable stand, and encountered the misrepresentations of those who, but for his wise leadership, would have wrecked the cause in Mississippi, as was done in several other States. It is to be hoped that our people have learned enough from experience not to repeat the hurtful follies of the past.

Meat is high and scarce now and the boycott is on, but there have been times when it was much more valuable and difficult to obtain, as is shown by an interesting story contained in a recent issue of the Times-Democrat. It is taken from Mrs. Roger A. Pryor's book of reminiscences, and is as follows: "General Lee gave a dinner to some of his friends during the siege of Petersburg. The dinner was served, and, behold, a great sea of cabbages and a small island of bacon or middling about four inches long and two inches across. The guests, with commendable politeness unanimously declined the bacon and it remained in the dish untouched. Next day

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES.

A History of Columbus, Miss., by Dr. W. L. Lipscomb. Published by the S. D. Lee Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy. The volume opens with a biographical sketch of the author, lately deceased, by his son, Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, of the Mississippi Industrial Institute and College. The matter contained in the book was in substance printed in a series of communications to The Columbus Commercial. First, the site of the city as it originally existed is described; an account is given of the survey made and the plan adopted for the building of the town; then follows a chapter devoted to the early inhabitants, after which the steady progress made through the succeeding decades is faithfully recorded. Much attention is given to the establishment and growth of the churches, and the concluding pages furnish a roster of the troops which Lowndes County supplied to the Confederacy. The volume is beautifully illustrated, and, all in all, is a most creditable recital of the history of Mississippi's most beautiful city.

Bildad Akers, by Thomas N. Ivey. A small volume, 205 pages, admirably printed and bound. The book is humorous, but is not without a serious purpose. Bildad Akers is an old-time Methodist, destitute of learning but with observant eyes and a head full of the shrewdest common sense. We have seen more than one character much like him. Through the quaint speech of Bildad, Dr. Ivey does some wonderfully effective preaching against many of the evils and questionable practices of the day. The volume sparkles from beginning to end, and we heartily commend it to the public. It amuses, entertains, and instructs, and is calculated to do much good. We wish for it a wide circulation.

All departments of the last issue of the Woman's Home Journal are filled with things of interest. We mention only two contributions: "The Campaign of Hope," the first of a series in which Dr. William Osler is to discuss the warfare now being waged against consumption, and the illustrated article on "Omaha," by R. M. Crosby, which is a most entertaining description of the Nebraska metropolis and its citizens.

The Branch Publishing House at Dallas closed the fiscal year with a net earning of over $12,000. It is occupying the new building, lately constructed, is well fitted up in every respect, and its future is bright with promise.

The College Presidents' and School Principals' Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church held a meeting at the Ohio Wesleyan University on Jan. 20th. About fifty heads of institutions were in attendance, and such subjects as the following were discussed: "The Integrity of the College Course," "The Place of Religion in the College," "The Support of Denominational Institutions." The occasion is thought to have been a most profitable one.

A dispatch to the Commercial Appeal from Arcola, Miss., on Jan. 31, says: "The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of this place was addressed last evening by Mrs. Robert Somerville of Greenville. Mrs. Somerville spoke well and entertainingly on foreign missions, especially in China, and urged all men and women alike, to take a deeper interest in the subject. A large congregation was in attendance. This is one of a series of lectures which Mrs. Somerville will deliver throughout the Greenville District."

From a special to the Times-Democrat, we appropriate the following news item: "The Board of Stewards of the Methodist Church at Long Beach, at a meeting last night (Jan. 31), let the contract for rebuilding the parsonage that was destroyed by fire several weeks ago. The contract provides for a building to cost $1750, which, however, will not be erected on the old site, but on a lot near the beach which was acquired by the church during the past year. Later the stewards will let the contract for a brick church to occupy ground adjoining the parsonage."

The influence of the great Welsh Revival, which was led by Evan Roberts a few years ago, is said to be remarkably abiding. A gentleman belonging to a church whose membership was increased from two hundred to six hundred by the great awakening, was asked, "How are your four hundred converts holding out to-day?" "Practically all of them have held out," was the response. "Is your church warmer and more active than before the revival?" asked the enquirer. "Yes," said the leader, "we have three times as many members and are three times better off in every way."

The ministers of Columbia, Tenn., are undertaking to reform the manner of conducting funerals. They have ventured to offer the following suggestions: "That the services be brief; that few, if any, comments be made by the pastor in conducting the service, and none at all save in exceptional cases; that the family retire from the cemetery without waiting for the grave to be filled, and that Sunday funerals be discouraged, as far as is possible." We wish the brethren well, but we warn them they have assumed a difficult and dangerous task, which will require unusual courage and tact.

On March 15, 16 and 17, Dr. E. B. Meyer, of London, England, president of the World's Sunday School Association; Mr. Marlon Lawrence, general secretary of the International Sunday School Convention, and secretary of the World's Sunday School Association; Mr. E. K. Warren, ex-president of the World's Sunday School Association; Mr. E. O. Excel and many other world leaders will attend the twenty-fourth annual Sunday School Convention of the Louisiana Sunday School Association to be held at New Orleans in the First Presbyterian Church. All railroads heard from to date have granted an open rate of one fare plus twenty-five cents for the round trip. A large representation will attend the meeting from Mississippi and other States, and it is destined to be the greatest convention ever held in this part of the field.

The Rev. Giorgio Bartoli, D.D., the former Jesuit whose conversion to the evangelical faith and reception into the Waldensian Church of Italy created such a profound sensation last year, is expected to arrive in New York on Feb. 2. He is one of the most learned men who has left the Church of Rome within the last thirty years, and gives the reason for his leaving in a volume entitled, "The Primitive Church." The purpose of his coming is to interest the American people in evangelical work in Italy, where it is said whole villages in the southern part have joined the Waldenses.

The New York Christian Advocate of Jan. 27th contains the following statement relative to church building in the South: "In the first nine months of 1909 four hundred and forty-four churches, valued at $13,000,000, were under plan or in process of erection in the fourteen Southern States. The Manufacturer's Record, which collected the figures, classifies these enterprises by denominational groups thus: Methodists, $4,396,000; Baptists, $2,708,500; Protestant Episcopal, $1,840,500; Presbyterian, $1,161,000; Roman Catholic, $930,000; Christian, $569,000; Lutheran, $270,500; Jewish, $210,400; and various others, $1,066,700. Texas was expending the most, over $2,500,000. Oklahoma was putting $467,000 into new church enterprises, about one-half of them Methodist." This does not look like Christianity has lost its vitality among the Southern people, or that our Baptist friends are about to capture everything in Dixie as they are so given to affirming. And it should be noted that this information comes from a commercial and non-sectarian source.

INSPIRING EXAMPLES.

If you are getting lazy, watch James. If your faith is below par, read Paul. If you are impatient, sit down quietly and have a talk with Job. If you are just a little strong-headed, go and see Moses. If you are getting weak-kneed, take a look at Elijah. If there is no song in your heart, listen to David. If you are getting sordid, spend a while with Isaiah. If you feel chilly, get the beloved disciple to put his arms around you. If you are losing sight of the future, climb up to Revelation and get a sight of the promised land.—Word and Work.

Miss Gertrude Abernethy, writing to the Foreign Mission Journal of the sad death of Miss Hensley, gives the secret of her beautiful life, which had so impressed itself upon her fellow-missionaries and the Chinese with whom she came in contact. On the fly-leaf of her Bible these words were written:

"Put any burden on me, only sustain me,
Send me anywhere, only go with me,
Sever any tie, but this tie which binds me
To Thy service and Thy heart."

"IF GOD SHALL FAIL!"

The poem printed below is so beautiful, and so expressive of firm hope and trust in God, that we give it the best place in the paper. To add interest to it, we quote the words of the writer, a lawyer of no little note in our State, but so modest withal that, as our readers will see, he insists on his name being withheld. He says:

"It was my good fortune to pass a winter with Dr. —, one of the most eloquent and learned divines on the continent. In our frequent talks we had occasion to discuss some of the modern criticisms of the Bible. He was and is a firm, sincere believer in the religion of Christ. But on more than one occasion he let fall the remark: 'If God shall fail, what then?' It was not uttered in despair, but as if to express the utter uselessness of all things. It was this remark that set on foot the train of thought that occasioned these lines, they are the expression of the simple faith I cherish. If you think them worthy to be printed, you may give them a little corner in the Index, but on the distinct understanding that it is to be done anonymously. I make no pretense to verse-making, much less poetry. But I found when I began to give expression to my faith, in the midst of the agnosticism of our age, it was easier to do so in verse than in prose."

By a singular coincidence, the very day the author mailed the poem to the Index, the friend whose remark called it forth passed into the presence of him who faileth not.—Editors.

Oh! what is life, its power, its joy, if God shall fail?
Where shall the wandering soul let fall its tired sail?

To what far silent sphere shall Hope direct its prow?

When man abandons, without faith, the shores of Now?

What if there be some shining orb, where God nor angels dwell?

What is a world without a God? Another name for hell.

Have I believed a dream? If so, break not the spell!
In life, in death, still let me dream that all is well!
That Heaven has shores where souls may furl their blood-washed sails;

That God is here, that God is there, and never fails!
And on life's raging Gallees, when seas are wild and high,

Still let me dream I hear him say: "Be not afraid, tis I!"

"To die, to go we know not where," great Shakespeare cries:

"I know that my Redeemer liveth," Job replies—

He will not fail his children, in that decisive day
When earth is ashes, all its glory passed away.

His everlasting arms shall hold them safely in that hour.

And Love shall triumph over Death and all its ghastly power.

Why question, then, his ways, or blindly seek to know
The whence we come, the why we are, or where we go?

Oh! give me light to see the duty of to-day,—
And strength to do it in His Name—only this I pray:
Amid a maze of mysteries I cannot understand,
I walk by faith with happy steps, led by his loving hand.

What if the lightnings strike my path? The shadows fall?

From out of the darkness and the wrath, I hear his call.

Rich, clear and strong, Hope shouts for joy! Faith sings, "All hail!"

The heaven and earth shall pass, but God shall never fail."

And when the dark of death dissolves, the dawn divine shall come;

And I shall rest at last with God, eternally at home.

W. H. M. S.

W. H. M. SOCIETY NOTICE.

To the Second Vice Presidents of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Sisters—The W. H. M. S. has been described as "A wheel within a wheel." The Conference officers are entirely dependent upon the auxiliary officers for reports of the work being done, and our leaders are dependent upon the Conference officers. Don't you see how very necessary it is for each of us to do that which has been entrusted to us in this great work for our Lord? Let us unite our efforts to make the fourth-quarter the best. Will each second vice-president leave nothing undone to induce people to adopt "God's financial plan," and the last of this month, which ends the Conference year, send to me the number of tithers in your society and church? Much has been planned and will be done during this month to help us. Sincerely,

MRS. J. R. ELLIS,
Conf. Second Vice President.

Mount Olive, Miss.

THE CHURCH AT BLUE MOUNTAIN, MISS.

Dear Advocate: On your pages of Dec. 16, 1909, this editorial, or personal, is found: "We thank our brother, Rev. A. H. Williams, for his contribution in regard to Blue Mountain. He corrects some mistakes into which the editor had fallen in giving credit to Rev. J. H. Bass for the work done in that college town. Brother Williams himself had a hand in laying the foundation at Blue Mountain, and deserves credit for his work."

The present writer regrets the necessity of stating the facts from the vantage ground of actual knowledge, but deems it obligatory upon her, after what has been said, to show the public that no mistakes were made. The half has not been told, and since so much space was given to the writer from Mayhew, we are sure you will be willing to grant the other side a hearing. Fairness and truth demand it.

The article published in the Southern Sentinel and afterwards appearing in the Advocate was the spontaneous expression of the present writer. But that article was submitted to the Methodists at Blue Mountain, and heartily endorsed by them before being sent out for publication, the Rev. J. H. Bass knowing absolutely nothing of it until it came out in the Sentinel. Blue Mountain people imbibe from the very atmosphere they breathe the principle that gratitude is a cardinal virtue, and that roses on the coffin cannot atone for neglect to express appreciation in the lifetime.

Whoever knew anyone doing anything for the general good of humanity since the days of Moses, who was not opposed in some way? It is only those who are not moving enough to meet anything who encounter no obstacles.

When that article was written for the Sentinel the writer thought the time had come when the public ought to know some things in regard to our work here, and also believed a word of encouragement would not be out of place. She thinks a like time has come again.

To show she knows whereof she speaks, permit a personal statement, please. She has been connected with the College here fourteen years, from 1878 to 1892; then constantly since 1904 she has been teaching in the College.

So far as the people of North Mississippi are concerned, the statements we want published are unnecessary, but as two boards of church extension kindly aided us in building our church, and hosts of friends contributed to it, it is necessary that they see no misrepresentation was made in stating this was missionary territory so far as our Church was concerned. There were no "cut-and-dried" plans, except in the fertile brain of the Mayhew correspondent. On the contrary, it came as a very great surprise to us who were on the ground, that the North Mississippi Conference could see how it were possible to build a Methodist Church at Blue Mountain.

This writer, understanding the situation fully, met the Rev. J. H. Bass the first time he came here, and said to him: "A Methodist Church cannot be built here now." He replied: "The Bishop sent me here to build, and I'm going to do it."

The Baptists could not help us, for they were carrying the burden of a $10,000 debt on their new $30,000 church, besides straining all resources to aid their Tri-State Hospital they are trying to build at Memphis. There are only about 900 white people in the corporate limits of Blue Mountain, and there are 500 members in the Baptist Church here. They did not want the Methodist Church here if a person's wants are to be estimated by what they are willing to do to get the desired object.

This writer was appointed secretary-treasurer of the Building Committee, trustee of the property and steward in the church at its very inception. She kept the accounts and can show where the dimes came from that went toward building the church here. All the Baptists at Blue Mountain paid $230, and one man, Prof. Brown, of the Heights Academy, paid $100 of that. The Methodists here had aided them about that much in their church and hospital enterprise, but with a debt of $10,000 upon them, we could not expect them to help us. They did not want our church launched until their debt was paid, so they would be in a position to help us.

From the Methodists of New Hope Church who came to us, about $250 was obtained, not a cent more than that, and one woman working on a salary paid $200 of that.

The writer from Mayhew says: "The Methodists of that place (Blue Mountain) were clamorous for a new church." If they were, they did not want it more than $25 worth, for that sum covers every cent the clamorous ones put into the building. If he will kindly furnish the treasurer the names of said "clamorous" ones, she will ask them every week for a donation to the church—every week until the debt of a few hundred dollars that rests on our church is removed.

It sometimes happens that "great talkers are little doers," and the strange thing is, some people are so long finding it out.

But as to the missionary ground, it was a most inviting kind, where even the supposed antagonism (?) was readily a supporter and helper in the plan. Then, why ask to be released from so easy a job, when the results would be so much to his credit?

One struggling to accomplish something dear to his heart is helped by earnest, sincere sympathy. When the writer from Mayhew has lived for years in a community of un-like faith and order, from his, where a great many of them feel he is so unorthodox that if he is saved it will be as by fire, works all burned up, reward all lost, unless he is "buried in baptism" by a minister in the apostolic succession, then he will realize the measure of help and support he gets in the way of sympathy from that source when he undertakes to build a church of Methodist faith and order.

We have shown how much we were helped financially.

So far as the Methodists of Blue Mountain and all surrounding territory are concerned, we do not believe any other man would have done what has been done in regard to our church-building.

It was "inviting missionary" territory to one who cares naught for obstacles, and has the pluck, the perseverance, the dauntless courage, the faith to go forward in spite of difficulties, when assured he is about his Master's business.

For the last five years the Methodist teacher in the College has had the supervision of the Methodist boys and girls from the Heights, in regard to Sunday school work. She ordered the literature paid for by said pupils, from our own publishing house, and she and one other teacher, sometimes from the Heights and sometimes from the town, taught these classes in rooms of the College, or Baptist Church. This arrangement was working very well, and needed no more readjusting than it had needed for five years.

After looking at conditions, as this article has tried to show them, the writer leaves the candid reader to draw conclusions for himself, remembering ing the writer from Mayhew was not on the ground more than twenty-four hours in all, and we do not know of his being here more than one time, one night, just before leaving for Conference. He preached for the presiding elder, who did not get here to fill an appointment he had here.

We are ready to accord all the honor due the Mayhew brother and all others who "shook hands" and viewed the landscape at a passing glance, thinking they saw all of its beauties and deformities. But they will permit us to assure them, from the vantage ground of actual knowledge of the situation, that there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy.

Kind editor, let me thank every friend in Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama and Texas, and anywhere else they may be now, who wished us well enough to send a contribution to aid in building our church. Even the dimes that came from Louisiana and elsewhere are recorded, and grateful hearts go out toward those who sent them when we worship in our beautiful little chapel in the way we understand our heavenly Father would have us worship him. May 1910 be to every one of them a year full of peace, prosperity and abiding joy.

CHURCH GOING.

It would, perhaps, be an impertinence to inquire how far the men who never go to Church go into the closet, and when they have shut the door pray to their Father which is in secret. It would be a sign of narrowness to deny that there are some men without social sympathies, to whom, therefore, social affiliation in worship is a hindrance rather than a help. But for the great mass of mankind this paragraph of Dr. Richards is true. Churchgoing broadens the mind; cheers the soul; lifts men's thoughts to the skies above them and the hills beyond them; breaks the dull routine of work; releases the captives of toil; makes life interesting again; awakens new power of insight and sympathy; changes the world's prose into poetry.

It may be as you say, that Churchgoing is nothing but a habit. But there are good habits, as well as bad habits; and if the habit has the effects which Dr. Richards attributes to it, it is worth considering whether it is not a habit well worth forming, cultivating and maintaining. —Church News.

WHERE THE DOLL COMES FROM.

Doll-making did not become conspicuous as an industry in the Thuringian mountains until the middle of the nineteenth century, when a citizen of Sonneberg brought from London a doll which was regarded as a great curiosity. It had come originally from China, and its head and legs and arms were movable. This furnished an inspiration to the ingenious Thuringian toy-makers, who promptly improved upon it. Up to that time they had made dolls only of wood and leather, but soon they evolved the wax head—at first a crude article, the wax being applied with a brush, but later brought to high perfection, thanks, it is said, to an accidental discovery. A man engaged in making the heads dropped a thimble into his pot of fluid wax, and, on taking it out, found it covered with a smooth and beautiful coat of the substance. He was not slow to seize the idea, the result being the adoption of the dipping process, the final touches of color being put on with a camel's hair pencil. Later on the movable eyes and closing lids, to feign sleep, were added, and the fleece of the Angora goat was substituted for human hair in the making of wigs, holding its color and curl much better, the doll, as it is known to-day, thus assuming its final and highly artistic form.

Dressing the dolls after they are made has become an industry in which numbers of women and girls are employed. For the small, inexpensive dolls, little chemises, finished with a ruffle of lace around the neck and arms, are made by hundreds and require no skilled labor for their construction.—The Circle.

TWO LITTLE TRAVELERS.

What I am going to tell you happened on a sleeping car in the Middle West, and, excepting names, personal and geographical, it is literally true. As names and places are of little interest, I feel sure that no harm will be done by using fictitious ones.

In the Middle West, therefore, I returned one morning to my own particular section of the sleeper, after a delicious breakfast, to find two small travelers, aged six and eight, seated at a private table of their own. With infinite content they were feasting on oranges, sandwiches, pickles and cookies.

On learning from the porter that they were traveling alone, I at once availed myself of a traveler's privilege and made overtures to acquaintance. Within three minutes we were chatting like old friends.

"Who put up that nice breakfast?" I asked.
"Hannah," they answered together.
"Didn't your mamma put it up?"
"She's dead," answered the older one—not sadly, for she was too young to know the pith of it, but half-mysteriously, as one who vaguely understood of what she spoke.

"Who put you on the cars?" I asked.
"Papa did. We're going to see grandma, and stay two months and feed the chickens every morning."
The dear grandmother! I inwardly rejoiced that they were to enjoy this degree of maternal care, once removed, though it was.

"Here's an orange a man gave me," said Helen, the older one. "Isn't it big?" I guess I'll save it and give it to grandma. She's big, too."

"What will your papa do without his little girls—and what will Hannah do?" I asked.

"Oh, Hannah's gone to Arizona to see her sister. She's going to sleep in a chair car," she added proudly, as if the honor of sleeping in a chair car was not often conferred.

"Papa just hates to get up in the morning," said Helen. "Hannah has to call him about three times. Oh," she continued, "is your name Miss Hawkins? Because you look like her. She took care of Daisy when she had diphtheria. She was lovely. Her teeth were just like yours."

"And she could take out her under ones," chimed in Daisy, eager to have a finger in this conversational pie.

"But mine won't come out," I stoutly asserted.
"Let me see," said the incredulous Daisy.
I promptly gave one or two sharp pulls to my *mader teeth to assure Daisy, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that they were not detachable.

"Grandma's are so nice," presently answered Helen. "I've got two."

"I haven't even one," I answered.

This pitiful condition appealed so forcibly to her that she presently said:

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll go shares with you on mine." (Bless the generous, childish heart!)

"I'll go shares with you on both," she continued, with the beaming smile of one who has finally settled a troublesome problem.

"Are we most to Gordon?" she presently asked.

"No," I answered; "we won't be there for two hours yet. But let us count all the cows and horses and white houses with green blinds that we pass. A cow counts one, a horse two, and a white house with green blinds counts five. Twenty-five is the game."

The novelty of this exciting pastime banished all longing for a whole hour.

"Are we most to Gordon?" queried Daisy. "For we must pack our satchel if we are." So the little satchel was brought to me, and two tiny night dresses were carefully refolded and replaced. Two little tooth brushes and two little combs were also stowed safely away. Next a miniature purse containing a trunk check and a key was carefully inspected and replaced in Helen's pocket.

"Are we near Gordon now?" asked Daisy, with a shade of weariness in her fresh young voice.

"Only a few minutes more," I answered, "and then you'll be with your grandma. To-morrow morning you can feed the chickens."

"I hate to leave you," said little Daisy, winding her arms around my neck.

"So do I," chimed in the older sister. "Come to grandma's with us!"

"I must go home to my own dear mother," I answered, "but don't forget me and I'll not forget you, and some day—who knows—we may meet again."

We were approaching Gordon. I carefully washed the little faces and hands, and smoothed the pretty hair, so that they might look sweet and fresh when they reached their journey's end.

"What if grandma wasn't there to meet us?" exclaimed prudent little Helen.

"She will certainly be there," I assured her.

And when the train reached the station I was on the platform with the children. No need to ask which was "grandma." The face of a bright, buxom woman of perhaps fifty broke into the happiest of smiles at the sight of my dear little fellow-travelers. And into her careful hands I resigned them, hoping that some guiding hand might carefully and wisely direct the lives of the two dear children who had brightened a whole forenoon for me on a long journey across the continent.—Exchange.

BEAUTIFUL HANDS.

Three maids were going to a fair where a costly prize would be given to the one who could show the most beautiful hands.

One of them came to a little forest of wild tuberoses whose corollas were being robbed of their fragrance by the winds and the birds. One by one she touched the sweet-smelling flowers, which left on her delicate hands the snow of their petals and all that was left of their garnered sweetness.

The second one paused at a pellucid stream which rippled over golden sands, past beds of violets. In the crystal perfumed water she bathed her hands, which were thus made more beautiful.

Timid and modest, the third girl was hesitating about asking flowers and fountains for the secret of beauty, as her companions had done, when she met a ragged beggar, who in a voice of agony implored: "Alms, for the love of God!"

Drawing from her purse a coin, she gave it to the needy one, who, on receiving it, kissed the beneficent hand, letting fall on it a tear. The tear became a pearl, which imparted its delicate whiteness and grace to the hand of the compassionate girl.

Not that one whose hand had received the whiteness and fragrance of the wild tuberoses, nor that one on which glistened violet-scented drops from the golden-pebbled fountain obtained the rich prize offered at the fair.

Above all in grace, beauty and undefinable charm was seen the hand which the beggar's tear adorned and purified.—Translated from Spanish by M. Petrus, Bolton, Tex.

HEROES OF PEACE.

Heroes of peace are found in every walk of life and in every situation, says the editor of the Rico, Colorado, Item. In mine and workshop, in field and forest, they are always to be found in every time of need to risk or even lose their lives in the attempt to save their fellow creatures from danger and death. Not a week passes but the pulse beats quicker and faith in humanity is strengthened because of heroic deeds done, not to destroy life, but to save it.

People talk of a terrible mining catastrophe and of hundreds meeting death far down in the lower workings. And mingled with sentiments of pity is the glow of pride as they read of the rescuing party going down into the inferno of smoke and fire and deadly gas to rescue their fellows. They go down once too often and are brought to the surface, blackened and disfigured corpses. They sealed their devotion to duty and humanity by their lives.

Let us hope and pray and believe that war may be banished by 1915. Why not? It is a relic of barbarism as inexcusable as cannibalism.—Journal of Education.

Editorial.

NO CHANGE OF NAME NEEDED.

There is some talk in some parts of our Church about a change of its name, with a view to getting rid of the word "South." It is claimed that a geographic name limits our commission and hinders our work.

All this seems to us to be the sheerest folly. The Roman Catholic Church bears in its title the name of a city. The Greek Church is called by the name of a small nation, which is now almost moribund. The Anglican Church bears a name derived from a little country scarcely as large as the State of Louisiana or the State of Mississippi. How is it that geographic titles have not restrained the success of these great churches?

The name of a church expresses its history and spirit, as the primacy of the Roman See is indicated in the name of the Roman Catholic Church.

We have a history of which we need not be ashamed, and for which we need not offer apology or explanation. The word "South" in our name points to the non-political character of our ministry and the unworldly spirit of our work. It reminds us and all men that our Church refused to hinder its gospel among both masters and slaves at the bidding of fanaticism and partisan frenzy. Surely, we need not apologize for that heroic and Scriptural position. While the slavery question is settled, never to be reopened, the essential principles underlying the position taken by the Southern Methodists in 1844 are of unchanging truth and of perpetual application. We need to fall back upon those principles often in these days of politico-ecclesiastical movements.

The discussion of the change of our name should not have been opened. But, now that the matter has been brought up, the General Conference should reject the proposal so emphatically as to dispose of the subject finally and forever.

Our growth during the past year was larger than that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, although their ministry is far larger than ours. It is evident therefore that neither our name nor "the time limit" is hindering us. In so far as we are hindered at all, we are hindered by unseasonable agitation and discussion and unseasoned agitators and discussers.

Whereunto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule and mind the same things. Our salvation is of the Lord, and not of innovations and innovators. We need no change of name. Rather, we need to live more perfectly and faithfully in keeping with all its spiritual implications.

If the name were changed it would be more difficult to explain the change than to defend the honored and heaven-blessed name under which we have achieved our wonderful victories during more than sixty years.

A movement is under way in Baltimore to construct a $100,000 edifice for the Central Methodist Church. Bishop Wilson is said to be lending his influence to the enterprise, and Mrs. Jackson, widow of the late Governor Jackson, has subscribed $50,000 of the amount.

"THE EPISCOPACY UNDER FIRE."

We think Dr. Winton was unfortunate in the use of this expression. To say nothing of the connection in which he employed it, it seems to us to have been wholly out of place coming from the editor of our general organ. Of course, the episcopacy has its critics, but so has every thing else in the Church. The presiding eldership, the itinerancy, and the ritual have been shot through, time and again, with the arrows of criticism. Even our Twenty-Five Articles which have come down the centuries and which have felt the masterful touch of Wesley have been called "superannuated." It was Fanny Fern (was it not?) who said critics are miserable bores who find fault with you because you do things better than they. Not until we get to the good world, may we hope to be rid of them.

But our particular reason for objecting to the use of this expression by Doctor Winton is that we do not think "people who live in glass houses should throw stones." It occurs to us that, barring the present contention over Vanderbilt University, the thing in the Church which has been most "under fire" within the past few years has been the general organ under its present management. If memory serves us right, more than one Annual Conference has spoken out in condemnation of things contained therein, and such a resolution was introduced at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference and doubtless would have passed but for the magnanimous interference of Bishop Hoss, who requested its withdrawal. Dr. Winton wields a gifted and facile pen, and if he would only be more discreet and Methodist, he would be a worthy successor to the great men who before him made the tripod of the Nashville Advocate a throne of wholesome influence and power.

THE PASSION FOR CHANGE.

We have known some men who were professional "horse-swappers." They would no sooner get a horse than they would want to get rid of him. They were ever alert and keen for a trade. This swapping spirit sometimes gets abroad in the churches. Southern Methodism is sorely afflicted with it at present. We have among us not a few who want to exchange everything we have for something a little different. No part of our doctrines and polity are exactly right; every piece of the machinery needs a little readjusting. The Northern Methodists have abolished the time limit; hence we ought to abolish it. They have substituted district superintendents for presiding elders, and we should do likewise. They rake their Bishops over the coals at pretty nearly every General Conference, and we ought also to take ours to task. There is no use in expecting any progress and prosperity unless we turn things topsy-turvy and are our big sister. So say these brethren who have a mania for something new.

But unfortunately for these gentlemen when the facts are looked into it is discovered that we are far outstripping the Methodist Episcopal Church. The statistics furnished the New York Advocate of Jan. 27, by Dr. H. K. Carroll, one of the most accurate statisticians in the United States, show that our gain last year was 50,164, and theirs 47,465. And this, too, in the face of the fact that their aggregate membership is 3,159,913, and ours is only 1,780,778. If the time limit and our geographical name are such serious handicaps, pray tell us how you account for our phenomenal success? What sense can there be in adopting methods which do not work as well as those which we already have? Dr. Watkinson, in one of his sermons, tells of a cow knee-deep in clover, looking over the hedge and longing for the bleak, bare commons. So some of our brethren, rich in the glorious legacies of Southern Methodism, are looking out longingly upon the wild wastes of congregationalism and other church governments drifting toward it. Is it not amazing that we do not know when we are well off?

GATHERINGS OF LAYMEN.

The New Orleans Laymen's Meeting will begin next Saturday night and continue through Tuesday, the 15th. The one at Shreveport will immediately follow, embracing the 16th and 17th. The places where these conventions will be held are centrally located; the programs arranged are all that could be desired, and at each place there should be a large attendance. We urge our Methodist people to go and participate actively in the exercises of these great gatherings. They will both be benefited and be the means of blessing others, if they will attend. The followers of Wesley must keep step to this music of progress which is sounding the note of advance throughout world-wide Christendom.

PERSONAL.

Rev. L. A. Sims, of Epworth Church, this city, is meeting with much success in his work. The Sunday school is wonderfully prosperous, there is commendable activity in many directions, and the work generally is going forward.

Rev. J. Saller Rutledge is pleased with the progress of things at Indian Bayou, La. The spiritual condition of his charge especially is wholesome. We are grateful to him for service done for our paper, and also for a kindly message.

Rev. D. M. Floyd, of Dumas, Miss., has favored us with a list of names to whom the Advocate is to go. He is a local preacher and a supply, but one whose work God honors. Thank you, brother, for remembering your fellow-laborer, far from home.

We are requested to state that Mrs. C. A. Powell desires to dispose of most of Brother Powell's library and will sell at a bargain. Anyone interested may obtain a list of the books to be disposed of, with the prices, by writing Rev. L. F. Alford, Newton, Miss.

The following brethren have our thanks for subscriptions sent in during the past week: Rev. W. L. Graves, Ittadena, Miss.; Rev. J. O. Winburn, Sunrall, Miss.; Rev. Jas. S. Duke, Strong's, Miss.; Rev. M. J. Miller, Edinburg, Miss.; and Rev. W. L. Duren, Tupelo, Miss.

One of the most genial and agreeable pastors in New Orleans is the Rev. Albert S. Lutz, of Felicity Street Church. He is also a man of accomplishments, and is said to be a speaker of magnetism and force. His brethren are most complimentary in their references to his work in the Crescent City.

We make acknowledgment of a letter and list of subscribers from Rev. T. J. Durrett, of Houka, Miss., where he is having a successful pastorate. A quiet, modest toiler, he blows no trumpet to proclaim his achievements, but the recurring Conference sessions show that he keeps busy in the vineyard of the Master.

Rev. E. C. Newbern, who was received into full connection at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference, but who thought it best to locate on account of home encumbrances, desires to state that he is available for revival work. Brethren desiring his services may address him at Cedar Bluff, Miss.

Both Rev. W. M. Young and Rev. V. C. Curtis have apprised us of the serious illness of Mrs. J. W. Raper, the wife of our pastor at Bynalla, Miss. She is in a hospital at Memphis, and Brother Raper is deeply distressed over her condition. Let prayer be made for the anxious husband and stricken household.

Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, informs us that Rev. R. T. Pickett has been appointed to the Coalville charge, and that Rev. S. E. Flurry, a local preacher, has been appointed to supply the Mentor work. Brother Pickett's address is Woolmarket, Miss., and Brother Flurry's is Mentor, Miss.

Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Coldwater, Miss., who is in his fourth year, increases in popularity as the months pass. We have never known a pastor who had a firmer grip on his people. His life and example speak daily with an eloquence that has won all hearts. And that flock is one which any man might feel honored to serve.

To that courteous gentleman, Dr. T. C. Wier, of Starkville, we are indebted for an additional number of readers in that goodly city. Referring to his pastor, he says: "Rev. W. E. M. Brogan is making a very favorable impression on his people. He has been well received and starts the year with cheering and hopeful prospects."

The entire Advocate force keenly regretted the flagrant error in the title of Rev. R. A. Ellis' article in last week's issue. It is needless to say that he was in no wise to blame. It is strange that we overlook such things, but it is done occasionally in the best of printing offices. The subject should have appeared as it does in the present copy.

At the request of Mrs. E. C. Turnley, corresponding secretary of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., it was our pleasure to announce last week a series of appointments in the State for Mrs. M. H. Armour of Georgia. But now Mrs. Turnley writes that Mrs. Armore has been stricken with serious illness, and that all of her engagements are for the present canceled.

In a communication of the 4th inst. Rev. J. B. King, of McComb, Miss., states: "We are moving on nicely at Topisaw. I am in my fourth year here. Some of the people gave us a surprise supper last week, which was followed by a service at the parsonage. Brother King is mindful of the welfare of the Advocate, as is attested by the files in our office."

The congregation of the First Methodist Church of this city will tender Dr. and Mrs. S. H. Werlein a reception at the social hall of the church on Friday evening, Feb. 11. Dr. Werlein appears to be much at home on his native heath, and the people, without regard to denominational affiliation, seem happy to have him and his accomplished helpmeet back again.

One of the most wideawake and successful young men in the North Mississippi Conference is Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Moorhead. He is a Millsaps man and a Vanderbilt, but best of all, he is a plain, practical Methodist preacher, who makes proof of his ministry everywhere. We thank him for taking care of the interests of the Conference organ in his territory.

We are under obligations to Rev. W. W. Drake, of Lake Charles, La., for a list of subscribers. He is one of the strong men of his Conference and a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. His honored father was a noble itinerant, and laid his life down while planting Methodism in the fertile Mississippi Delta, where his name is yet "as ointment poured forth."

It may be observed by some that the editorial bearing on the name of the Church in this issue of the Advocate is not quite in accord with what we had to say on the subject two or three weeks ago. Further reflection has convinced us that under no circumstances should we discard the word "South." The explanation of why it was done would be a perpetual source of embarrassment.

A card from her pastor brings the information that Mrs. Florence Caldwell, of Starkville, Miss., continues to be confined to her room as a result of a fall which she had some weeks ago. A Methodist whose loyalty knows no abatement, and a Christian of large usefulness, while indisposed, she will be greatly missed in the working circles of her Church. We wish her a complete recovery at an early day.

Dr. W. E. C. Hunnicutt, of Jackson, Miss., writes: "Notice has just reached us of the death of Mr. Harry W. Pearce, eldest son of the Rev. Levi Pearce, who was long a well-known member of the Mississippi Conference. Mr. Pearce died quite unexpectedly after a short illness at his home near Punta Gorda, in British Honduras. His wife was Miss Kate Maudslayi, a sister of Mrs. Hunnicutt and Mrs. W. T. J. Sullivan."

Writing from Enterprise, Miss., Rev. John D. Ellis says: "We have been kindly received here, and the outlook is really encouraging. All collections have been taken out of the hands of the pastor by a noble board of stewards, and all the pastor has to do is to pat his foot, study, preach, pray and visit. Our doors are open to you or your representative any time. We appreciate this invitation, and hope to accept it by and by."

The lay delegation of the Mississippi Conference will have a strong leader in the person of Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson. Possessed of a liberal education and wide reading, he is yet the most practical and far-seeing man we have ever known. He is both a loyal Methodist and an earnest Christian. We hazard nothing in saying that among "the celebrities and less" who will assemble at Asheville, not one will be found of whom he is not the peer.

From Mrs. S. D. Gwin, of Lexington, Miss., comes a remittance for the Advocate, accompanied with the statement: "I have been subscribing thereto for forty-four years. My sainted mother gave me the first subscription as a bridal gift May 25, 1865." We confess to a special interest in the long-time readers of our paper. There are no friends like old friends. May God bless them, each and all, and brighten more and more the paths they tread!

We were cheered a few days since by an encouraging letter from Mr. J. R. Strater, of Black Hawk, Miss., who is esteemed and honored by all who know him. He has been a delegate to the General Conference, and for many years was especially active in the larger International Sunday School gatherings. His life from early manhood has been above reproach, and his usefulness has been manifold and far-reaching. There is no one whose kindly interest we more heartily appreciate.

Rev. J. H. Bass is in the midst of a series of revival services at Ripley, Miss., in which he is being assisted by Rev. J. A. Bowen, of the North Alabama Conference, who has lately been having marked success in evangelistic work. If we mistake not, Ripley was Brother Bowen's first charge, and no doubt the people will give him a royal welcome. We pray that the Holy Spirit may attend his ministrations and that Brother Bass may be rejoiced by a great awakening in his charge.

From West Point, Miss., the queen city of the prairies, comes a check for more than $40 for renewals and new subscriptions to the Advocate. We make our politest bow to Brother Dorsey and extend him our most hearty thanks. He is a man who allows no grass to grow under his feet, who does not mince words in characterizing evil, and under whose ministry things must move. And of the royal flock whom he serves, we dare not write, lest we should exhaust our vocabulary of superlatives.

Our honored friend, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, has sent us a nice list of subscribers from Tunica, Miss. He finds difficulties in his present field, but also much encouragement. That things will soon respond to his life-giving touch we do not in the least doubt. He commends the recent issues of the Advocate, and adds the following, for which we thank him: "My opinion is that your greatest trouble is going to be to cut down long communications. Whole page articles are seldom read except by a few." A hint to the wise ought to be sufficient.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, than whom there is no more painstaking presiding elder or faithful toiler, in writing of his work, says: "The Winona district is still intact. Very gratifying progress is being made in most of the charges. Salaries are being advanced in quite a number of places. Greenwood will pay this year $2000; Schlater, $1000; Webb, $1000, and Itabena, Belzoni, Klumichael, and some other places will also make advances in the assessments for ministerial support. The preachers are in fine spirits and the future is bright."

To Rev. J. H. Felts, the enterprising presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, we are indebted for the following interesting information: "Our District Stewards' and Laymen's meeting in Tupelo was a success. Hon. T. B. King, of Memphis, delivered the opening address. Nineteen of the twenty-two district stewards were present, and out of twenty-three pastors, nineteen were on hand. Much interest and enthusiasm were manifested, and plans for the year's work were projected. The outlook is much better than at this time last year."

We are appreciative of the following sentiment expressed by Miss Mary Lawrence, of Houghton, La., in a letter of the 1st inst.: "I am getting up another club for the dear old Advocate, which I hope to send very soon. It has always been in our family, and I am trying to put it in every Methodist home in this town and vicinity. My father, Rev. David Lawrence (a local preacher), subscribed for the paper when it was first issued, and the love of it has been handed down to the third generation. Long may it live and prosper!" Rich indeed is the journal which possesses such friendships and attachments.

In the last issue of the Midland Methodist, Dr. H. B. Johnson, who is one of the foremost men in the Memphis Conference, has a vigorous and timely article on the presiding eldership. We heartily agree with him both in his general discussion and conclusions. The talk which has been going on concerning the modification or abolition of this office is the purest balderdash. It is an integral and essential part of the itinerancy, and will last as long as that exists. No men among us are worked harder than the presiding elders, and none are contributing more to the upbuilding of the Church. We shall have more to say on this subject in the near future.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey has had a most cordial reception at Lauderdale, Miss., and the work prospers under his guiding hand. The Sunday school has doubled in attendance; the prayer meetings are growing in interest, and the public congregations are larger than for years. The night services are made especially evangelistic, penitents are frequently at the altar, and already there have been nineteen accessions. A liberal support has been provided for the preacher in charge, and both the pastor and people are cheerful and hopeful. The Advocate is remembered by Brother Ramsey in his work. We are pleased to hear such good things of our Conference classmate.

Rev. Robert B. Downer, of the Mississippi Conference, sends us the following information: "By private letter of the 28th ult., I learn of the serious illness of Mrs. L. Cray Saddler, of Slidell, La., and am requested to inform her old friends (through the Advocate) that but little hope of her recovery is entertained. She is conscious and would greatly enjoy a cheery letter from any of her old friends or ex-pastors. She spent the early years of her life as a member of Felicity Street Church, New Orleans, and has been a reader of the Advocate since its first issue, and quite frequently has brightened its columns with articles from her pen. Let special prayer be made that the Comforter may make bright the closing days of her long life."

The St. Louis Advocate of last week has this to say of the work of Dr. Theo. Copeland, of that city: "Dr. Theo. Copeland, of St. Paul's, is reported as being so modest that he rarely speaks of his own work, but nevertheless from chance interviews with his people we discover he has so hypnotized them that almost without exception they agree that he is the greatest man yet discovered. Almost, if not altogether. They are so ridiculously partial that the average Bishop is discounted in comparison with their preacher, and the ordinary doctor of divinity is not considered in the same class. Of course, the Advocate is too wise and politic to take issue with this entire congregation, hence we cheerfully repeat the litany: 'All this we steadfastly believe.' Seriously, Dr. Copeland is eminently successful and one of the most universally popular men we have ever known."

Albert the First, of Belgium, successor of the wicked Leopold, is rapidly winning the admiration and love of his subjects. Happy in his domestic relations and humanitarian in spirit, his life is said to be both clean and fruitful of great good. He is especially interested in the poor, and delights to minister to their necessities. He begins each day by attending mass, and it is announced that he will abolish gambling in his court, a thing which has long been the reproach of Belgium. Queen Elizabeth is the daughter of a physician and far-famed for her philanthropy. She has founded a hospital for consumptives, and it is said that no slum in Brussels is too dangerous or filthy for her to penetrate privately, if the sick need attention. The following beautiful incident is told of her ministrations to the afflicted: "A little time ago the Queen visited a poor sick woman, who raved over music. On her third visit a large box was carried into the room of the invalid. Her friends wondered what was in it. The Queen, having pledged them to secrecy, opened the box and took her violin from it. On it she played to the sufferer until the music brought her rest. The violin was left there, and day after day, until the sufferer was well, the Queen came privately and played to her." Such a couple should have a happy and prosperous reign, for they have added to the royalty of blood the far nobler royalty of goodness.

DECEASE OF MRS. H. R. TUCKER.

Dear Brother Meek: We buried dear Sister Tucker yesterday. (She was the wife of our lamented Rev. H. R. Tucker, whom you knew well.) She was taken ill about a week ago with la grippe. On Friday night pneumonia set up, and she died Saturday night about midnight. She was with her daughter, Mrs. Williams, at Strong's, Miss. Only two of her children, Mrs. Williams and Rev. R. A. Tucker, succeeded in getting to her bedside before her death, which was sudden and unexpected. Our Church and town are in mourning. No one who has ever lived here has so completely won the friendship of everybody and made so strong an impression on the town as she. She was a noble mother in Israel, and we shall miss her. We will send you a memoir later.

J. H. HOLDER.

Beoneville, Miss., Feb. 1, 1910.

We extend our deepest sympathy to our good friends in their sore bereavement. Their loss is, indeed, great—on earth irreparable. But not so in heaven. There, with the faithful husband, who, stricken down by the same disease, preceded her to the better land by a few years, she will await the coming of the others of the now broken family circle. Till that time of reunion, may God comfort every aching heart!

GENERAL CONFERENCE ENTERTAINMENT

The Methodists of Asheville are making ample preparation for the entertainment of the General Conference, which is to meet in that city during the month of May. Not only will the delegates be handsomely entertained, but every care will be taken to provide for those who wish to attend the Conference as visitors. Reasonable rates at hotels and boarding-houses have been secured.

A strong central committee has been appointed, which, through various sub-committees, will look after every detail of the entertainment of delegates and visitors. Captain W. T. Weaver is chairman of this committee, and Mr. J. P. Kerr is Secretary.

All persons who desire information of any kind are requested to write to the secretary, Mr. J. P. Kerr, Asheville, N. C., and their inquiries will receive prompt attention.

THAT "GIVE-AWAY" BILL.

In the Texas Christian Advocate of last week Dr. Winton appeared de novo on the Vanderbilt University situation; but there was in his "communication" little that was either new or novel. His reference to a certain Tennessee statute may claim attention for a moment. This statute our good brother seems to regard as a sort of half-brother to the Kirkland "give-away" bill which received its quietus in the last Tennessee Legislature. Dr. Winton asserts that under this law the Vanderbilt authorities could turn the University's property into real estate and then "give the whole business away." If that is true, their powers need to be abridged, and that at once. Our brother also thinks that this law proves that the Kirkland bill (which was defeated) was perfectly innocent and laudable. Let us compare the two:

The Existing Statute.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That all educational institutions chartered under the laws of this State shall have power to sell such portions of their real estate as they may find unnecessary for the purposes of their incorporation, or which they may have ceased to use in their corporate capacity for educational purposes, and shall also have the power to donate the same to any other educational institution which will use the same or the proceeds thereof for educational purposes.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That all conveyances of such property shall be made pursuant to the requirements of the existing charters of such institutions.

The Defeated Kirkland Bill.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That universities or other institutions of learning, organized and now existing, or hereafter to be organized, under the law of this State with power to maintain and conduct different schools or departments of instruction or learning, shall have the power to donate or transfer such portions of their endowments or other assets as they may see proper to any other incorporated institution of learning that is established and maintained for the purpose of conducting any department of learning included within the corporate purposes for which the institution donating or transferring a portion of its endowment was organized; provided however, that this shall not authorize a donation or transfer of any fund, property, or assets impressed by trusts or limitations imposed by donors, unless such donors consent thereto.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That whenever any university or other institution of learning shall avail itself of the privileges and powers granted by this Act, then such university or institution of learning may, at its option, discontinue the conduct and maintenance of the school or department of instruction or learning that is to be conducted or maintained by the incorporated institution to which the donation or transfer is made.

Nothing could more certainly betray the desperation of the cause which our Brother Winton is seeking to defend than his appeal to this statute. It needs no lawyer to point out the fatal differences between it and the defunct Kirkland bill. They do not belong in the same class of legislation. I ask intelligent men in the Church to say if either Dr. Winton's predicate as to the likeness of the statute and the bill is sound or if his conclusion as to the power which the statute gives to trustees can be even remotely justified.

I have asserted, and do now assert, that the Kirkland bill was framed with a view to accommodating between Vanderbilt and the Peabody School an alliance which could only be hurtful to, and finally destructive of the Church's interest in the former. The evidence is too plain to be doubted. The statute of Tennessee now existing permits universities and other schools to sell or donate to other incorporated schools real estate which, owning, they have never used or which has ceased to be useful under their charters. There is absolutely nothing else in this law.

But what of the Kirkland bill? Had it passed, then all incorporated universities and schools could have given away at their pleasure any part or all of their endowments or other assets to any other school that would agree to teach what the school making the donation had previously taught. When the Peabody scheme developed, it fitted into this bill like an acorn into its cup. But the cup had been shattered!

The Church will, it is not doubted, welcome the Peabody School as a neighbor of its greatest university. But the final announcement (just made) that the Peabody School is to be located near the Vanderbilt campus (but for a prompt opposition it was to be on that campus) will put the General Conference on notice that its action for the future complete protection of its property must be pointed and comprehensive. These are words of soberness, uttered to the end that the men of the Church should think out a deliberate action.

H. M. DuBOISE.

TRAINING SCHOOL REPORT.

To the Mississippi Annual Conference, Brookhaven, Miss.:

Dear Pastors and Brethren: Your Training School, located at Montrose, Jasper County, Miss., is enjoying a very gratifying measure of prosperity, considering the crop failure in much of the territory from which its patronage has hitherto been drawn.

The attendance during the spring term reached 254, while the fall term has thus far enrolled but 221, 27 of whom are boarding pupils and six of them ministerial students.

There are two male and two female teachers associated with me in the literary department, and there is also a well patronized department of piano under competent management. We expect to have by the opening of the spring term a well organized commercial department affording instruction in book-keeping, shorthand, typewriting and penmanship.

The course of study has been made to conform to the requirements of the General Board of Education and fit students for entrance into the freshman class of Millsaps and other institutions of similar curriculum. Our graduates are reputed to be possessed of superior standing at the colleges they enter.

No baseball or football games are allowed, but twice daily calisthenic exercises are conducted under the direction of a teacher.

A spirit of cheerful subordination to authority is maintained by the student body, and it delights us to report also an uncommon degree of fidelity and success in the prosecution of their scholastic tasks.

One two-story brick building contains five ample recitation rooms, well lighted and judiciously heated, and an auditorium with a seating capacity of 600, all fully equipped with new, single desks of assorted sizes and recitation seats having tablet arms. The floors are treated with a sanitary, dust-proof dressing; new blackboard surfaces and dustless crayons have also been provided.

Through the kindness of friends and the efforts of the students themselves, a desirable collection of books, periodicals and encyclopedias is being steadily added to the present meager supply.

The grounds are being beautified with shade trees, terraces, graveled walks, and open drains constructed of cement; painted settees and lawn grass abound. The premises are inclosed with stout, woven, galvanized wire and posts of heart pine.

A refreshing, religious atmosphere obtains in the institution and community, which contributes a valuable asset in the character building going on there. The Holy Spirit has repeatedly favored us with gracious seasons of revival and the hallowing influence abides.

Three times a week the members of the four highest classes recite a lesson in Bible. On Sabbath mornings, in the pastor's study, the students looking to the ministry receive instruction in Methodist biography, history and doctrine. The Sunday school, Epworth League and mid-week prayer meeting afford opportunity for cultivation of gifts and graces spiritual, and our students use them zealously and discreetly.

Two literary societies furnish facilities for forensic and classic culture.

It is our earnest wish and request that all our preachers and laymen seek to put us into communication with Methodist boys and girls needing the cost of training we are striving to supply in the name of the Lord. Respectfully submitted,

W. A. BETTS, President.

Seldom does the sin of indolence come farther to the front among grown-ups than on rainy Sundays, and its pleadings for self-indulgence should be met with as deaf an ear as ever justice turned toward a criminal demanding undeserved mercy.—Selected.

WARNING.

Quite a number of Syrians are going through the country soliciting money to build churches or schools in their country. I am persuaded that they are acting without authority and they may be impostors. If any of them have my name endorsing their work, I hereby declare it a fraud.

I wish our preachers and people would refuse to give them any assistance. T. W. LEWIS.
Columbus, Miss., Feb. 4, 1910.

Break off some one evil, seek to uproot some one sin, cut off some one self-indulgence, deny thyself some one vanity, do it as an offering to God, for the love of God, and some gleam of faith and life and love will stream down upon thy soul from the everlasting fount of love. Follow on, and thou shalt never lose that track of light.—Edward P. Puscy.

Criticizing other people is a thing that reacts dangerously. To doubt other's motives, to blame their actions, is to lose belief in good, little by little, and he who loses belief in good, loses his own goodness in exactly that measure. The gossip, the censor, the cynic, the soul that sits in judgment, are never good Christians or good men and women. Goodness and nobility cannot live in such atmospheres.—Selected.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The price of the Advocate is $1.50 a year with a commission of fifteen cents to agents to cover expense of collecting and remitting. The rate to preachers and widows of preachers will remain at one dollar a year.

The club rate for 1910 will be $1.25 each in clubs of five or more. We offer the club rate as a privilege that has been requested of us, and we will give a commission of ten cents, per subscriber, only when it is requested. This commission must cover the cost of remittance.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks, we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions, paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the regular price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by the thousands, it becomes a serious matter. We are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

Mrs. JOSEPHINE E. DAWKINS was born Aug. 25, 1842, in Choctaw County, Ala., and died Dec. 28, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. K. W. Parks, near Chunky, Miss. In 1856 she was married to Mr. William Dawkins. Two years after marriage, they moved from Alabama to the vicinity of Montrose, Miss., where they lived until about two years ago, their declining years being spent with their children. When Mr. and Mrs. Dawkins settled at Montrose, there was no Methodist Church there and these two good people, with their friends formed a society and raised money with which the Methodist Church was built. Mrs. Dawkins was converted when a child, and lived a consistent Christian all her life. To know her was to love her. Her husband, four sons and a daughter survive her; two sons and two daughters having preceded her to the better world. Her remains were interred in the cemetery at Montrose, Miss.

NETTIE PARKS.

JOHN W. FERGUSON, son of Alfred and Elizabeth Ferguson, was born in Vicksburg, Miss., Dec. 10, 1848 and died at Arcola, Miss., Dec. 31, 1909. From early youth until his death, he was under the shadow of affliction. He was denied the power to serve God and his fellowmen in the way accorded to most men, but he was given to habits of religious meditation and prayer, one of the last acts of his life was to kneel and offer up his devotions to Deity. He joined the Methodist Church some years ago under the ministry of Dr. J. W. Price. He died suddenly and was buried at Hollandale, Miss. His loved ones feel assured that he had entered into rest.

W. H. MOUNGER, Pastor.

It is with a sad heart we record the death of Mrs. ESTHER A. PURIFOY on Dec. 24 at the home of her daughter, Mattie McPherson, Hazlehurst, Miss., where she was visiting. She was born in Warren, Ga., Sept. 2, 1839, and was the daughter of Rev. Neal Maddox and Martha Neville. Reared by godly parents, she was impressed with the beauty and truth of Christianity and baptized by Rev. T. Anthony, presiding elder, and became a member of the Methodist Church at an early age. She was married to John Whitfield Purfoy, Jan. 21, 1871, at Barns ville, Ga., and one year later moved to Union Church, Jefferson County, Miss. Living there a number of years, the family located in Crystal Springs, Miss., where they all became active, useful members of the church. Mr. Purfoy, a good and pure man, passed away Jan. 7, 1900, and on Sept. 20, 1907, her sweet daughter, Lela, who was constantly her companion and advisor. During a revival held by Rev. W. M. Hopper, both sought and obtained the blessing of sanctification. Their love for the church of their choice was constant, always in their place in Sunday School and teaching class; hearing the word preached, getting thereby strength for daily needs, when it was possible to attend service. Often her soul was burdened for the salvation of the lost; yet while too timid in her nature to talk to them about the salvation of their souls, she would modestly tell her friends of her anxiety for those out of Christ, and bear them to the throne of grace in her daily prayers. Before a foolish and gainstaying world she exemplified the doctrine of Christ, and looked forward to that "home of the soul" that "mansion prepared," which she has entered. One loving, yet lonely daughter, three noble sons left behind, two brothers and one sister, besides numerous friends, grieve for the absence, until we too shall be called away. Her true friend.

(MRS.) EMMA SIEBE.

Mrs. SALLIE B. SULLIVANT, wife of Jessie Sullivant, was born in Marshall County, Miss., Aug. 16, 1852. She died at her home at Teasdale, Tallahatchie County, Miss., Jan. 5, 1910. She was converted early in life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and continued a faithful and consistent member to the end of her life. She has left her husband and five children, two sons and three daughters in great sorrow. She was taken sick on Dec. 25 with what at first seemed to be la grippe, but pneumonia set in and her precious life was quickly gone. One of her daughters, Mrs. Hickham, was the wife of Rev. I. W. Hickham, late of the North Mississippi Conference, who died at Wier, Miss., more than a year since. Another daughter is the wife of Rev. Mr. Carder, a Baptist minister, of Texas. One of her sons is the Hon. John Sullivant, now a member of the legislature from Tallahatchie County. The other son and daughter have remained at home with the parents. Sister Sullivant was a woman who tried to make others happy and in so doing she was happy. There was hardly any sacrifice too great for her to make that she might contribute to the pleasure or comfort of others. Her home was the home where you could rest and where the preachers always found a hearty welcome with words of comfort and encouragement. She loved her church, always attending the services when she could; above all, she loved her Savior, and with a great faith and devotion, she lived a happy Christian life. The writer of this knew her for a long time, and was her pastor for eight years, and I am sincere when I say she was as near faultless as any woman with whom I have ever been acquainted. The community and church will certainly miss her, and her place will be hard to fill. Her kind and loving attention to her husband, in his afflictions for the past several years was really beautiful. She enabled him to bear his suffering with much more ease than he otherwise could have done. We laid her to rest in Bethel Cemetery, but we expect to see her again. Brother Sullivant's health is poor, he is waiting awhile on this side of the river, and by and by will cross over and see his loved ones again. May God bless all those sorrowing ones.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Woman's Home Mission Society of Boyce at a called meeting on Wednesday, Jan. 26, 1910:

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst, our beloved friend and sister, Mrs. B. N. SEWELL, therefore, be it resolved,

First—That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and family of our deceased sister, praying that God in his infinite love and mercy may aid them in bearing the great affliction with resignation, ever bowing to the will of him, who doeth all things well.

Second—That in the death of Sister Sewell, our auxiliary has lost one of its brightest gems, she leaves to us the example of a noble life well spent in the service of her God.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of the society, one sent to the family and a copy be published in the New Orleans Advocate and Alexandria Town Talk.

A MEMOIR.

In the home of Dr. John Y. Murry, in Ripley, Miss., is a vacant chair which was occupied nearly 50 years by his queenly wife, and the Christian mother of his children. This good woman commenced her earthly experience in Hawkins County, East Tenn., being born to the late Rev. C. P. and Sarah Etter Miller, Feb. 18, 1833. Two years later, her parents moved to Ripley, Miss., where she developed her womanly virtues, and strong Christian character. This elect woman, descended from sturdy Methodist stock: her father being a preacher in the Methodist Church—a man of strong conviction of the right, who loved the doctrines of his Church, whose faith in the gospel of Jesus grew steadily to the end. Her mother was a most balntly woman and a cousin of the late Dr. W. G. E. Cunningham, of precious memory. Sister Murry joined the Methodist Church in her eleventh year and in it she invested her life with all pertaining thereto.

On Oct. 11, 1860, she was happily married to Dr. Murry, of her home town. To them were born six children, all of whom are now living to mourn their loss with their aged father, and to honor the name of their sainted mother.

It was very good fortune to be her pastor four years, commencing with 1887; and to my mind, during a pastorate of more than thirty-five years, I have never known any one to approximate nearer the ideal Christian than did Sister Murry. She was frail of stature, and annoyed by a cough which threatened a speedy termination of her life, yet I have seen her many times on raw, windy days, with a veil over her mouth to prevent inhaling the frosty air as much as possible, on her errands of mercy to the poor and the sick. It seemed she intuitively knew where help was needed, and did it as noiselessly as an angel. There was no sounding of trumpet about her deeds. She was so bent on the prosecution of the Master's work that she "counted not her life dear unto herself." She let no trivial thing thwart her plans in doing good, neither great things that could be overcome by divine grace. She practiced the Pauline idea "to live is Christ." More than twenty years have passed since these observations. Thousands of others under similar circumstances would have pleaded feebleness, as an excuse and done nothing, but not her. Sister Murry had a wonderful blending of those traits that go to make a great woman. She thought not of her own comfort, only as it came to her by making others happy. She had a keen insight to people and things, a broad mind, a catholic spirit, a big heart overflowing with love to God and for the salvation of the world. She was meekness personified. An unflinching hopefulness was one of her characteristics. She threw away no time in imagining that the world was growing worse. She never dwelt on the darkness of prospects, but looked up into the brightness of the heavens, and bathed her soul in the sunshine of God. She, with her noble husband, made their home a place where the good angels might well visit and where the preacher always found an abounding welcome, whether he was a Bishop or the untired, timid, beginner.

Sister Murry had two songs which were her favorites. One was, "Nearer My God to Thee, Nearer to Thee." This she sang much, and in its sentiment, and by faith, she moved nearer to him all the while. The other was "There's a Wilderness in God's Mercy." This one she used for others as well as for herself. In its use she gave heart to many downcast souls and especially those who were remote from public notice, for she was as considerate of their feelings as if they had been the most refined and cultured.

The conclusion of her earthly stay was on the early morning of the 7th of January, 1910, when she bade adieu to the loved ones for awhile, and hastened up to receive her unfading crown and to live with her Heavenly Father in his many mansion house forever.

Her funeral service was appropriately conducted at the home at 11 a. m. on the Sabbath by her faithful pastor, Rev. J. H. Bass, and her presiding elder, Rev. Ben P. Jacob. Though snow was on the ground, scores of people came and testified their appreciation to the life of this one taken from them. Was it not fitting that she should be laid to rest on the Lord's day? Many will miss her, but none so much as the husband and children. Most assuredly, she will be missed by her pastor. He will miss her councils, her cheer, and example, and she will be missed by the church. Who will take her place? May her daughters follow in her footsteps. Truly a great woman is gone, a mother in Israel has fallen, but we know where to find her.

THINK THE NOBLEST THOUGHTS.

You have length and breadth to your life, but have you height to it? You are a farmer—are your thoughts always of your farm and stock? You are a manufacturer, but do you think alone of raw materials, refined and verdicts, and decisions? You are a lawyer—do you think only of briefs, verdicts, and decisions? You are a mechanic—how is it with you? Are your thoughts only of tools, products of your skill, hours, and wages?

Add height to your life. Rise to God in thought, faith, hope, and love. Yield yourself to the invisible forces that draw the heart upward. Let your soul return to find rest in the God that breathed it into being. As you draw near to God the air invigorates, the clouds disappear, the stars shine, the heavens open. Doubt decays, faith revives, fears sink away, peace comes in joy springs up, light breaks all around.—Philadelphia Methodist.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped, I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 13, 1910.

WORLDLINESS AND TRUST

Matt. vi:19-39.

Golden Text: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi:33.

In his sermon the Lord follows his teaching on prayer by an exhortation on fasting: it can be inferred that as the mind is so intent on spiritual needs, no thought will be taken as to what we shall eat, thus making fasting a natural sequence of prayer. Unless we desire by fasting to take the mind away from worldly affairs, the act would savor of "a voluntary humility" and "will worship" that St. Paul speaks of in Colossians ii. A practical view of fasting is to abstain in order to give to him that is sick and hungry. Following this is the admonition that, in this hazy world where the predominant thought is to get and save for the sake of having, we are not to be content with accumulated worldly goods, relying on such achievement as a safeguard against adversity, thus neglecting the care the Father bestows upon us. Worldly treasures, whether they consist in wealth, fame, or friendship, are subject to the change that follows an adverse course of events, and their very instability produces a distrust of all things, in the mind of him who lays up for himself such treasures. Let heaven be the storehouse, for treasures laid up there never know a change, and the heart that follows and abides with treasures there, will partake of the divine nature. The light of the body is the eye, and the glory of the soul is the mind; if, therefore, the mind be filled with love and good works, the glory of God will fill the soul. But if the mind is wholly occupied with worldly affairs, the spiritual vision of unseen things, that are eternal, is blunted and darkened.

There can be no division of loyalty, we cannot be true to God while serving the world. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve" said Joshua to inconsistent Israel. It is fear, and a doubt of God's promise to provide for us, that causes anxious thought for the future. Our earthly needs will be supplied; and much more; for we have the gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Lord. It is wrong to be anxious lest we have food to eat, after having learned to pray "Give us this day our daily bread" believing that "they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." He that is in God's service is well paid; for he giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not. The purpose for which God hath given us life is much more than that by which life is sustained. If we have a work to do, God will provide health and strength to do it. Observe the birds, God made them, and through all the cold and storms of winter he provides them with food; we do not see how they return God's goodness, for they work not as we would; yet in God's wisdom their creation and being was chosen by the Savior as a lesson to us. We are of more value to God than they. If by "taking thought" or by concentrating our mind on preserving our physical condition, we will live no longer than the time appointed for our mission on earth to end. As for raiment, consider the lilies of the field; they know, if flowers can know, that God only requires of them that they grow; he clothes them as was not King Solomon in all his glory. God only requires of us that we grow, grow in grace and in readiness for service. If God bestows so much care on the flowers that so soon wither and fade, how much more will he care for the bodies that he hath created in his own image. Therefore, we are not to be so entirely occupied with the practical things of life as to exclude all thought of God and eternity; those who make no pretensions to religion are thus occupied, and surely the Christian must so live as to appear different from them. We all must work, and working is serving God, for he has made it so that work is a blessing. All nature tells us that God works continually, and that results are produced from the exercise of energy. The best men are the busiest men. The most efficient church worker is the man who is diligent in his every day affairs. If a man gives part of his time to God, God will bless the use of the time he gives to his own business. One day of seven is little enough to give for God's service, and the godly man will stop secular work on Saturday night, to be resumed on Monday morning; yet all the intervening weeks days, he is in the spirit of prayer and in sweet communion with the Father. This is the man who has first sought and found the kingdom of God, and has all other good things added unto him.

That which may happen to-morrow, of evil, whether of misfortune or ill-health, let it not overmuch concern us; but rather let us pray, that with to-day we may, each day be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. We are all children; we need the constant care of our Father, and we have it. Our temporal and our spiritual needs are so closely allied that he does not direct the one without the other; we are wrong if we need any help that we cannot ask God for. Every point of indecision should be made a subject of prayer, and there are no matters too small to tell the Father of. Prayer is the first form of faith in practice, and faith grows stronger as it is brought into service, and the more often we are found at the throne of grace, the more boldly can we come to obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

Tidings from the Field

Benton, La.

I am opening up my second year in this pastorate and my fiftieth year in the itinerant work with gratifying results. In a meeting, just closed, in which the preaching was done by Rev. A. C. Holder, Ph.D., there were a number of conversions and eleven additions to the Methodist Church, and others to the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches. Having observed the methods and intense earnestness of Dr. Holder and heard the doctrines which he preaches, I cheerfully recommend him to those wanting assistance in protracted meetings.—J. A. Parker.

Starkville, Miss.

We are planning for a great revival here in the spring. We will have Rev. W. G. Harbin with us. The prospects are good for a great meeting. The people are praying for the success of it. The church has taken on new life in many ways. The pastor's salary has been increased $200, and the assessment for the presiding elder advanced to $217. The stewards have adopted "the hudget plan" for handling the finances, and will relieve the pastor of all work of that character. We are having from 350 to 450 at church, both morning and evening. Good prayer meeting; good water; good people; good everything. In fact, it is down hill from Starkville to every point in the North Mississippi Conference. Those cultured and saintly men, Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. S. Harrison, have been a great help to this young itinerant. They are pillars of strength to this church and people. I count it a blessing too great to express in words to have had the companionship and wise counsel of the Rev. Amos Kendall, now ascended to the Church Triumphant, in Aberdeen, and it delights me to have wise counselors here. God bless the old soldiers, victors on many battlefields, and make their declining days bright! —W. E. M. Brogan.

Sardis, Miss.

On Jan. 10, the district stewards of the Sardis District met at Coldwater to do their work. They raised the presiding elder's salary $100. In the afternoon a considerable number of lay leaders were present and discussed their work. They adopted a resolution requesting the stewards in every charge to raise all of the finances, and allow the pastors to give themselves wholly to the spiritual work of the ministry. Following this meeting, the presiding elder was kept in doors for two weeks by an attack of bronchitis, but by the special kindness of the brethren the work went on. Brothers Curtis, Brown and Porter in particular giving valuable assistance. All of the quarterly conferences held so far indicate a good year. Last Saturday and Sunday, the 29th and 30th, I was with Rev. B. B. Sullivan at Longtown, where we held the best quarterly conference I have known on that work. We had a large congregation Saturday morning, a fine service, and a good dinner following. The pastor's salary was advanced $100; good reports came in from every part of the circuit, and a club of new subscribers to the New Orleans Advocate was started. The Sunday services and communion were gracious and inspiring, and the outlook is very promising in this field.—W. M. Young.

Madison, Miss.

The District Steward's Meeting is so often a dry and uninteresting gathering in which one or two men do all the real work that it is quite refreshing to attend a meeting that engages the thought and interest of all in attendance. Such a meeting was that of the Jackson District Stewards held at First Church, Jackson, Miss., Jan. 12, 1910. The presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones, called the meeting to order, and, after a brief address, led in prayer, announced a hymn, requested further prayer, lead by Dr. W. B. Lewis, of Canton. After the usual preliminaries, the appointment of the committee, composed entirely of laymen, to apportion the Conference assessments to the various charges, the unusual part of the program was taken up. Laymen and preachers entered into a most interesting and instructive discussion of the work of the district. Special emphasis was laid upon the subjects of home religion and revivals. The discussions grew enthusiastic, and drew many expressions from the laymen. It looks like an auspicious beginning, when laymen and preachers meet together in the early year and in open and enthusiastic discussion declare for the old fashion revival, and the "old-time religion" and pledge themselves to help each other in the plans and campaigns for the year. May it so be that this year shall see the greatest revivals and the greatest spiritual progress in the history of the Jackson District!—J. W. Ward, Sec.

Editorial.

Even power itself hath not one-half the might of gentleness.—Leigh Hunt.

Let every man be occupied, and occupied with the highest employment of which his nature is capable, and die with the consciousness that he has done his best.—Sydney Smith.

A cheerful disposition is a great factor in the achievement of success. A despondent heart is fit only to lead a retreat. Nothing worth while was ever wrought by dominant pessimism. The optimist is the one who marches on to victory.

The best gauge of one's religion is the extent to which he feels the sense of obligation. The man who feels free to do as he pleases is far from the kingdom; but the individual who, like Paul, feels that he is "a debtor to all men," has well-nigh reached the summit of Christian attainment.

The important thing is not how we end, but how we spend our days. The thoughts and actions of the present are woven into the warp and woof of character by the ever-busy loom of time. What we do to-day will determine largely what we are to-morrow. One who lives right will die right, and man in eternity will be what he makes himself in time. It is literally true under the economy of redemption that "every one is the architect of his own fortune."

The indispensable weapons in the Christian warfare are not carnal, but spiritual. The might of money is needed, but more so the might of the Holy Ghost. The sign by which we are to conquer is not the dollar mark, but the Cross. We are firmly convinced that too much emphasis is put upon the material prosperity of the Church in this day. Unless increased equipment produces larger spiritual results, it is a reproach, a shame, and not a thing of which to be proud.

This is pre-eminently the age of the demagogue. In every field and sphere his reign is well-nigh supreme. Men who seek to do what is right rather than what is popular are painfully scarce. Never was there a time when people with convictions and the courage to maintain them were worse needed in both Church and State. We are sick ad nauseam of seeing important principles sacrificed for petty office or the greed of gain. We do not like to sound a pessimistic note, but we confess that there are spectacles about which, at times, make us almost despair of popular government. The reignancy of the masses is too often the reign of ignorance and inflamed prejudice. We believe in "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people," but we want the people who rule to be enlightened and moral. The hope of the nation lies in its schools and churches. Unless we educate and Christianize the millions beneath our flag, the Republic will surely fall.

TWO GREAT MEETINGS.

The Laymen's Convention in Jackson last week was one of the most notable religious gatherings ever assembled in Mississippi. The local committees had left nothing undone to make the occasion a success, every needed convenience having been provided; and all possible courtesies were shown the visitors. The Coliseum, with a seating capacity of 2500, was an admirable place for the convention to hold its sessions and do its work. The attendance of laymen and preachers was not less than 1000 or 1200. They came from every section of the commonwealth and were representative of the best citizenship of the State. This, in view of the fact that many from the northern tier of counties attended the Memphis convention, was a remarkable showing. It is needless to say that the addresses delivered were of a superior order. Many of them provoked much applause, and enthusiasm was at high tide. The denominational rallies were well attended and prophetic of abiding results.

The New Orleans Convention is in session at this writing. It opened last Saturday evening with a banquet at the Athenaeum, at which there was an attendance of over 400. Sunday, the 13th inst., was a great day throughout the city. The various Protestant pulpits were filled by distinguished visitors, and in the afternoon and evening large missionary rallies were held. The sessions of the convention are attracting much attention. Not since the memorable Missionary Conference in 1901 have so many noted mission workers been assembled in Louisiana.

As we have before stated, we regard this activity of the laymen as perhaps the most significant religious feature of our time. It means that the great body of the Church—those who hold in their hands the wealth and resources of Christendom—are awakening to the importance and duty of evangelizing the world. The Movement is luminous with hope and promise. If it were to stop now, with the larger publicity which it has given to the missionary cause and the other results achieved, it would deserve to be written down as a phenomenal success. But the awakening is yet in its incipency. We feel confident that it will not be arrested, but that it will grow and widen in the sphere of its influence as the months and years pass. Henceforth, the men of America will make their power felt, not alone in commerce and politics and the affairs of secular society, but in the far nobler work of extending the divine kingdom.

THE PICAYUNE TO THE RESCUE.

In its issue of the 11th inst., The New Orleans Picayune undertakes to palliate, if not to justify, the action of Pope Pius in refusing to see Vice-President Fairbanks because he had made an engagement to address a Methodist congregation in the city of Rome. A more abortive attempt at defense than that made by our distinguished contemporary, we do not remember ever to have seen. For instance, note the following: "But when it became known that Mr. Fairbanks was to take part in public exercises that were expected to express great hostility to the Catholic Church, the Pope or his Cardinal chamberlains declined to receive the visitor. In so refusing, the Church authorities expressed their regret that a prominent American citizen was affected by it, but the announced and expected hostility of the meeting at which Mr. Fairbanks was to officiate justified the exception in his case." We demand the proof that the meeting in which Mr. Fairbanks was to participate was designed to attack or display hostility to the Romish Church in any sense whatever. None of the press dispatches that we have seen have so represented. On the contrary, they have described it as an ordinary Methodist gathering met to pay tribute to a distinguished visitor and hear any message which he might have to give.

But this is not the only remarkable statement contained in the editorial of The Picayune. Here is another even more astonishing: "If, as is reported, a Protestant congregation established in Rome can denounce and combat the Catholic Church at its throne and center, it shows that the state of religious toleration there is not surpassed anywhere." Tolerant, indeed! Does not The Picayune know that what makes possible the existence of the Protestant Churches in the city of Rome is the strong arm of the Italian Government? Does it not know that if the Vatican had its way they would be swept immediately out of existence? The Protestants do have toleration in the Imperial City, but it is that produced by intervening swords and bayonets.

GOD'S IMPARTIALITY.

The Heavenly Father is no "respector of persons." His best gifts are for all his children. All may breathe the free air; all may quaff the life-giving water, and all may gaze upon the beauty of earth and sky. The common things are in reality the most valuable. Iron is more serviceable to humanity than gold; coal is worth more to the world than diamonds, and the impartial sunlight is a richer possession than all the hoarded treasures of the rich and great. Nor is it different in the spiritual realm. All may not have the gift of healing, the gift of tongues, the gift of prophecy, or the gift of eloquence; but all may have love, the divinest gift; all may have Christ in whom are riches unsearchable, and all may have heaven with its infinite wealth and fadeless glories.

The saddest thing conceivable is a Christless old age. Feeble in strength and bent in form, with wasted years behind, the friends of former days gone, and the joys of the world without power longer to charm, the aged sinner stands tottering upon the brink of the gaping grave, waiting for the stroke of death to lay him low in the narrow tomb. No consciousness of the divine presence drives away the loneliness; no resurrection promise cheers him; no star of hope lights the darkness of the future. Soon the flickering fire of life will go out, and then will come—he knows not what. Is it not inexplicable that any human being should pursue a course that leaves him thus impoverished, abandoned, and hopeless in his hours of greatest need?

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

I have been requested more than once by different persons to give, through the columns of our Advocate, a reminiscence of my life from birth till now. It will be quite an undertaking for me, because I have never kept a record of any part of my life, and shall have to depend wholly upon my memory. Some say this is good. We shall see.

Let me say, in the first place, a man by the name of Lewis, some two or three hundred years ago, came from Wales to the United States of America and settled in Virginia. Here my grandfather, Benjamin Lewis, was born in 1760 or 1762. His parents died when he was quite a child. He was reared by a Mrs. Hill. One of his earliest recollections was that of hearing his elders discuss English oppression in the Colonies. The Stamp Act, which caused such a blaze of indignation throughout the Colonies, was repealed when he was but 2 years of age; and before the country had quieted down, duty was imposed on glass, paper, paints and tea. This added fuel to the smoldering flames, and when, a few years later, a shipload of tea landed at Boston Harbor, the famous "Boston Tea Party" was held.

The blood of young Lewis, my grandfather, boiled with indignation against England, and his soul was fired with a zeal for America's independence. When war was declared, he at once offered himself for service; but on account of his youth and smallness of stature, he was refused enlistment. A few years later, however, a troop of British cavalry encamped near his home, and the officer promised amnesty and protection to all who would take the oath of allegiance to Great Britain. Mr. Hill at once proposed to accept the offered amnesty, but grandfather as stoutly refused. Finally, irritated at the persistency of the boy, Mr. Hill decided to compel him to take the oath. Learning of his purpose, young Lewis left him, made his way to Kinston, was sworn in and equipped for service.

One incident in his life during his service as a soldier made a profound impression upon him, and became a factor in the molding of his character. It was at the battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C. Generals Green, Marion, Sumter and Pickens had throughout the summer of the year 1781, fought a splendid series of battles, ending with that of Eutaw Springs. Wednesday, Sept. 8, the company to which young Lewis belonged was stubbornly engaged with that immediately opposing it. Many were killed and wounded on both sides. Lewis, though unharmed, had many narrow escapes. A bullet cut the hair from his right temple, and killed the man just behind him. Another bullet passed through his trousers and broke a man's leg behind him. The man cursed him and asked him why he did not stop that ball. By a splendid charge, the British were swept from that part of the field, and pursued by the victorious Colonists. Young Lewis, because of his youth and smallness of stature, was unable to keep up with the company, and was soon left behind. While picking his way among the dead and wounded, he was startled to see a troop of cavalry dash out of a near-by wood, and charge down on him. Halting, the captain demanded who he was. Young Lewis could not tell from the uniform of the soldiers whether they were English or American. While debating in his mind what was best to do, the officer reined his horse close up to the now thoroughly frightened boy, drew his sword and demanded in fierce tones that he answer the question. Looking the Captain full in the face, he said: "Sir, I do not know to what army you belong. If I say I am a Briton, and you are an American, you will kill me. If I say I am an American, and you are British, you will kill me. Sir, if I die, I will die with the truth on my lips. I belong to General Green's army, and could not keep up with them when the order was given to charge." Sheathing his sword, putting out his foot and extending his hand, the officer said: "Jump up behind me, my little man. I am going to General Green now."

In after years, in relating this incident to his children and grandchildren, he would always close with this statement: "Children, it pays always to tell the truth. It saved my life."

A few years after the war closed young Lewis married a Miss Celia Martin, of Robeson County, N. C., and settled down on a farm. Six children were born unto them—five sons and one daughter. My father was the third son. His name was Quinneá. When in his twenty-second year, he was married to Martha Spier, who was only 16 years old. About the year 1820 they moved to Mississippi and settled on or near Pearl River, in Marion County.

My parents were reared by Baptist parents. About the year 1823 both of them were happily converted and joined the Methodist Church. My father was steward, class leader and exhorter. For more than fifty years he and mother were among the most zealous workers in the Methodist Church in Marion and Pike Counties, Miss.

Eleven children were born unto them. I was the eighth child. They tell me that I was born on "All Fools' Day," about two years and eight months after the stars fell in 1833. I have no recollection of the time. My mother told me that I was born on Wednesday morning, about 8 o'clock; and I believe it, because my mother knew, and she was a woman of truth.

In my next I will tell where I was born, when and where converted, etc.

OUR MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: Our Missionary Secretaries at Nashville have just sent out the following stirring appeal, which is self-explanatory, and to which I ask your earnest and prayerful attention. They thus speak of the momentous changes now going on in our various mission fields, and of the need of immediate action:

"The whole heathen world is astir and under the influence of the Spirit of God. China has held the first elections in her history, is preparing for the opening session of her Parliament, and calls for an army of 30,000 teachers. If we could supply that force, a Christian empire might be within our grasp.

"In Korea the work grows so fast that some of our churches are being rebuilt for the third time, and each of our missionaries is in charge of from ten to twenty churches. One missionary has over fifty in his care. In Mexico our evangelistic campaign has resulted in hundreds of conversions, and on the west coast, where, up to a recent date, pistols and machetes hung upon the walls of our chapels for defense from bushwhackers and fanatics, Scripture texts have taken their places, and the atmosphere is one of peace and religious devotion. In the mission fields of the world last year there were 3,600 communicants and 10,000 adherents added to the Church every week. Surely, we can say: 'Behold, what God hath wrought.'

"Such progress brings extraordinary demands. The problem is not in the foreign field, but at home. Every man on the firing line is doing double duty, and several are on the verge of breaking down. We must re-enforce from home or cripple our work abroad. We have the men, but not the money. Unless we get the money by the close of our fiscal year, March 31st, we will face disaster. We cannot beat a retreat. We do not know how. There has been some advance in contributions since last year, but not enough to strengthen our work where it needs strengthening most. Since our regular collections, and not specials, constitute the basis of appropriation, our reliance is upon you to help us in an hour when it is imperative that we should hold every inch of ground that we have taken.

"May we not count on you to take your collections for foreign missions within the next thirty days, and send the proceeds to your Conference Treasurer? By so doing, you may save a missionary's life, you may hold a walled city with its teeming thousands, you may redeem a province with its unevangelized millions. We must have your prompt and hearty co-operation. We must sound the call to advance and press the battle to the very gates.

Let us, one and all, comply with this earnest request of Drs. Lambuth and Pinson for early collections. Let us not forget that many of our domestic missionaries are already needing aid, and as there is no money in the treasury, some of them will be in sore straits before many weeks unless the stronger charges come to their relief. Hence, I respectfully urge that collections, for both foreign and domestic missions, be taken speedily, and the amounts forwarded at once to our Conference Treasurer, Brother Linfield. Thanks to the influence of the Movement, our laymen are awake as never before to the supreme nature of the obligation to evangelize the world, and if we will only lay the facts before them, they can be relied upon for a prompt and liberal response. "IS THE INFANT IN CHRIST? IS HE UNCONTAMINATED BY NATURAL GENERATION?"

By Rev. R. A. Ellis.

In this article I shall notice some of the Scripture and reasoning therefrom in opposition to an affirmative of the above question.

In the Nashville Christian Advocate the editor well said: "In all matters concerning which differences of opinion arise it should be remembered that the attitude of men is determined in a measure by their previous training and consequent point of view."

The above is eminently true in this controversy. I most solemnly aver that depravity is not sin, or that it has any existence apart from the individual transgressor, if that which is usually referred to as proof of its existence be all that can be adduced to substantiate it, and I suppose that it is, at least it is all that I have seen.

It is constantly affirmed that we inherit a tendency and inclining to the wrong, the inclinations of the carnal elements of our nature to excesses is proof of a sinful nature, a proof of depravity, it is claimed.

Why brethren cannot, or will not, see that if this proves that we have a sinful nature, it effectually establishes the fact that Adam had a sinful nature to begin with, or before he sinned.

It is not denied that we inherit these inclinations to wrong; we do without hesitation deny that they are sinful, for the reason that it charges God of being the author of sin or a sinful nature, for we know that these inclinations, or inclinations to the forbidden, was a characteristic of Adam while he was yet innocent. Indeed, we cannot see the possibility of the introduction of sin but by this tendency to cross the law, to go beyond in such of that which is forbidden to satisfy some element of our sensual nature. To resist these clamorous appeals of our animal nature was life in the beginning; that is to perpetuate life. It is as true to-day as ever.

Originally, man naturally had this power to check the goings of the carnal nature, and hold it in due bounds and thus preserve his frailty. We have the same power to-day, not by that which was originally man's power, inherent, but by grace, by the gift of God, and man is now as capable of meeting the demands made of him under the new covenant as was Adam under the old.

Brother O. T. Rogers, some time ago, took me to task for propagating Pelagianism. We here give quotations attributed to Pelagius. He is represented ed as contending: "That we are now as capable of obedience to the will of God as Adam was." This statement is wrong only in the fact that he repudiates the fact of "the necessity of internal grace or the aid of the Divine Spirit."

Some of them taught that "Christ was a mere man." Pelagius attributed all things to nature. My contention has been, all is of grace. Pelagians are represented as affirming: "It is not free will if it requires the aid of God; because everyone has it within the power of his own will to do anything, or not to do it. Our victory over sin and Satan proceeds not from the help which God affords, but is owing to our free will." The above are some of the objectionable features of Pelagianism; none of them can be lodged against anything that I have said or written.

So, on close examination, the heresy-hunters will find naught to rest their charges of heresy.

Augustine taught that by the fall human nature was totally corrupted and deprived of all inclination and ability to do good. This I believe to be literally true. This being true, had he been allowed to propagate his race in that condition, none of them would have been more able or inclined to good than Adam, who, in his higher nature was morally dead, incapacitated for the end of his creation.

A new system was inaugurated, suited to man in his corporeal make-up, for by this he was an easy prey to manifold temptations.

So, sin to-day does not disarm man of moral ability or of moral inclination to the right. It certainly depraves him and tends to confirm him in a course which will ultimately ruin him. See the unfaithful servant; he kept his talent until his day of mercy ceased, when it was taken from him, for it was not his, but had been given him for the purpose of his own benefit, as well as for the glory and honor of the giver.

Now, the 51st Psalm is referred to as if it was incontrovertible proof of the morally corrupt race at birth.

We have noticed the criticisms of Dr. Alderson—just in the main perhaps. But I fail to see anything in the text to justify the conclusion reached from it, which is, that all are born sinners or with a sinful nature. I think in this Psalm we have an exhibition of human nature which has corrupted itself by some carnal indulgence. In this case lamentations over the sin of murder and adultery a burning sense of his crime almost overpowered him, and he, in common with humanity, wished to find something to palliate his crime.

The subject of the moral condition of the race was not in discussion, and to make it describe the moral condition of the race, to me seems far fetched. But the most serious difficulty I find is this view or construction of the Psalmist antagonizes the view that Christ entertained concerning little children. See Matt. 18th and 19th chapters.

I know that the construction that is usually put upon these passages is controverted. One of Dr. Alderson's critics construes the passages adversely to that which is common. It will be remembered that others as learned construe the passages in a way which seems natural. And if they be correct in their construction, it will at once repudiate the conclusions reached by some who contend that the 51st Psalm is in evidence of a universally sinful state of the race. I am not unapprised of the fact that my statement that depravity has no existence apart from the transgressor, is one that will meet resentment, but I ask that you consider my reasons for so saying—if there is no weight to them put them aside.

Mr. Chalmers position is, "that the evil disposition is by inheritance." Bishop Foster says, "with this we find ourselves in hearty accord—that it is ground for guilt; from this we dissent. We consider it a great evil, and one from which the soul must be delivered in order to its final holiness and happiness."

Foster on Sin, p. 226: "Now, in all good faith, I ask, was not the dispositions alluded to above manifestly in Adam in his creation? Was this great evil in him, one from which his soul must be delivered in order to its final holiness and happiness?"

Was he not able to resist this disposition toward the forbidden? Was its possession incompatible with or to the existence with holiness? Now, why this disposition to wrong should be termed abnormality in the race, when it was found in Adam as a constituent element of his nature, therefore normal, is a question unanswered. Adam simply followed his normal disposition, which, when led beyond the limit indicated, resulted in sin; it is precisely so to-day. Adam had the opposite disposition—the disposition to righteousness, and the ability thereto.

But he lost that disposition and power, and by consequence the race, if the penalty threatened was inflicted, and I am sure there is no just ground for the assumption that the penalty was suspended in order to introduce the system of grace, for it is an assumption.

The possibility of extending grace was not dependent on the suspension of the penalty. God was free to exercise grace to man in a morally dead state, as he was, or would have been, in suspending the penalty threatened.

And this he did, as we think, by restoring the race to life under such arrangements and extension of offered help as would, in spite of the weakness of the flesh, secure the ends contemplated in his creation.

The grace of redemption was unconditional, but the development of the graces of this new redeemed life from an embryo state is all conditional; grace is no more an active agent, doing things, but is seen in God's attitude of helpfulness to those who feel the need of his aid, through the revelation he has made to men.

The idea of congenital corruption is almost universal, and is thought, in reason, cannot be disputed; but, from my viewpoint, congenital life is the heritage of the race, and is more in keeping with reason and the Scriptures than congenital corruption; for in such cases no provision is made for the elimination of that corruption in the case of the dying infant. I know that there is a difference made between personal and inherited depravity; I know also that it is expected that inherited depravity will, without doubt, result in personal depravity, which is the result of sin, therefore punishable.

The fact that we have tendencies to the wrong is regarded as proof of depravity. The same applies to Adam before the fall.

CERTAINTY OF RESULTS.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

I would give a gladdening word to those Christians who are longing to do special good to their fellow-men, but who are sometimes discouraged because they do not see any particular results from their labors. This is an old story, the history of which goes back through the ages. But govern yourself by the thought that the Christian who daily prays for wisdom to know how he may best serve God, and then prays that God will give effectiveness to his efforts, may feel sure that true blessings will follow, whether or not he ever sees any good results. Let your encouragement be in the truth that God does bless the use of one's talents in well-doing, rather than in looking for encouragement in visible results. Oftentimes what seem to be very favorable issues of work are not such in fact, and hence they are not always reliable. But, on the other hand, encouragement, founded upon God's promise to make effective the labors of his servants, is ever reliable and restful. The very fact that God bids one to do good to others is itself the best guarantee of blessed results.

The pastor who preaches the true gospel, in Christ's name, may be completely confident that genuine blessings must follow. Though at times his ministry may appear to him to be a failure, yet it cannot be so. Unseen by him, there are issues of greater power and worth than he can possibly estimate. The Word of God, preached to-day, may bring large and living fruit ten years from now. Much of the true preacher's work goes into the formation and upbuilding of good character in his hearers. And what is true of the preacher is also true of the editor of a religious paper. Abiding blessings must follow his work. He may see or know but very little of the blessings, but what of it? If into every issue of his paper, he puts fervent prayer and large faith, great blessings must result. It is so, also, in the case of every writer for religious papers; if he be devoted to the highest welfare of his readers, his prayers and work must issue in results that will be harvested in heaven.

THE KIND OF PREACHING OUR PEOPLE NEED.

By W. T. Pitts.

Preach good Methodist sermons, of course.

Master your sermon; don't use manuscript; it has a tendency to disgust people with going to church. If you have not time to memorize a long sermon, make it short, but know it well. Don't whisper, don't yell, but deliver it deliberately and distinctly.

Preach that there is a hell as well as a heaven; that there is eternal punishment as well as eternal happiness. The modern preacher evades too often preaching the penalty of sin and the final destination of the sinner.

Admonish your people to elect to office, from Governor to coroner, honest Christian gentlemen, and to demand of them the same stewardship that they demand of their preacher.

Admonish your people not to dodge jury service, either grand or petit jury. If they do, they turn the scales of justice over to people who have but little idea of justice and no respect for their oaths.

Preach against the common evils of the day—especially against pistol carrying and gambling. Statistics show that there are ten times more people slain by the pistol each year than by all the common carriers combined, and that there is enough money gambled away on cotton futures alone each year to build a church and a schoolhouse on every sixteenth section in our State.

Implore the parents of your congregations to educate more of their children for the ministry, for we have many fields even in our dear Southland where missionary work is needed nearly as badly as it is in the Oriental countries. Ask for more preachers and better pay, and you may guarantee a better citizenship and a more prosperous people.

Here is a pretty story from life told by the Morristown (Kan.) News: "He was the worst boy in school; she was the teacher. She was angered by his stubbornness; he was defiant. She took him to the hall for punishment. Angrily she administered the penalty and—then somehow a great wave of pity for the boy swept over her. She looked at the worn coat of the little fellow; she thought of the frail body deprived of nourishing food; she thought of the hard and loveless home and of the starved soul of the poor kid. Tears sprang to the teacher's eyes as the boy waited for further punishment. Then he saw the tears. His own eyes grew moist and overflowed. Thinking of how the poor boy had no chance, in an impulse of love she put her arms around the boy and they cried together. That is religion. She and the boy both found it."

The new subway railroad in New York City will cost, including the equipment, $240,000,000. It is 26 miles long, so that the average cost per mile will be $9,237,650. The present subway in that city cost about $80,000,000.

Mr. Clark Howell, the well known editor of the Atlanta Constitution, was stricken with appendicitis on the 9th inst., and immediately underwent an operation, which he is reported to have stood satisfactorily. He is expected to recover speedily unless complications should arise.

Edward Payson Watson, who is 71 years of age, has started from Los Angeles, Cal., to New York city on foot, and expects to make the trip in a hundred days. He is one of the most famous pedestrians in the world, having before walked from San Francisco to New York in 105 days. His friends are said to be confident of the success of his present venture.

Judge William C. Perrault, of the Sixteenth Judicial District of St. Landry's Parish, died on the 11th inst., at 4146 Canal Street, where he was undergoing treatment for illness from which he had suffered for the past two years. He was a native of Baton Rouge and fifty-four years old, and was one of the most prominent citizens of St. Landry Parish.

Mrs. Marilla M. Ricker, a widow, a Dover lawyer, a leader in the woman's suffrage movement, and a disciple of Ingersoll, has announced her candidacy for the governorship of New Hampshire. From this it would appear that there are other States worse off than Mississippi. Mrs. Ricker's entrance into politics seems to be an invasion of the East by one who has the spirit of the West.

A memorial to Phillips Brooks was recently unveiled in Copely Square, Boston, Mass., near Trinity Church of which he was the rector for so many years. He well deserved this tribute paid him by his friends, but he built in the hearts of his fellowmen a monument far more majestic and imperishable. We are not sure that Bishop Brooks was not the greatest preacher that America has produced.

Hon. J. J. Vertrees, of Nashville, the most brilliant lawyer in Tennessee, has been invited to represent Mr. Ballinger, whose administration is now under investigation at Washington. We are pleased to see Southern men thus honored, but we regret that the examination of Mr. Ballinger's course is not to be conducted without interference by the special pleading of attorneys. Too often a demanded investigation is tantamount to a request that the whitewash brush be vigorously applied.

Ex-President Roosevelt is expected to return to the United States about the middle of June. He will speak at Paris April 15; at the University of Berlin, May 1, and soon thereafter before the Nobel prize committee at Christiania. He is slated to reach England on his homeward journey about May 15th, and before setting sail will deliver an address at Oxford University. He is receiving many invitations to speak at other European cities. Mr. Roosevelt and his entire hunting parties are reported to be in excellent health.

Dr. A. E. Winship, editor of the New England Journal of Education, who came to New Orleans to attend the meeting of the National Editorial Association, addressed the teachers of the grammar schools of the city on Friday, 11th inst., on the subject "Criticism of the Public Schools." He said that the South in the last five years has made greater advancement in its public educational systems than any other section of the country.

"Can Congress divide a State?" This is the question which is now agitating the people of California. A bill has been pending in Congress for fifty years which, if passed, would provide for the separation of the northern part of California from the southern. It was first introduced in 1859, and has been brought up at intervals since. Now the agitation with reference to the passage of the bill has broken out with renewed strength in California.—The Visitor.

The press dispatches report that a Detroit girl has contracted a case of leprosy by wearing false hair imported from Europe. The physicians say that absolute disinfection of shipments of hair before they are sent to America is almost impossible, and that leprosy or any other disease with which the peasants are infected may easily be communicated. We sincerely wish that the manifest danger in wearing false hair might lead to a discontinuance of the use of it. But we have little doubt that this is a vain wish.

The National Editorial Association celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary at the Grunewald Hotel in this city on Feb. 10 and 11. The gathering was warmly welcomed by Governor Sanders and Mayor Behrman, both of whom were formerly editors. Over two hundred occupants of the tripod from all parts of the Union were in attendance, and a number of brilliant addresses were made. The session was highly satisfactory in every respect. Several places are contending for the next meeting, but it will probably be held in Toledo or Atlantic City.

For several years the Chinese government has been endeavoring to reduce both the production and consumption of opium, and late reports show that they have made considerable progress in the undertaking. Their hope is ultimately to rid the nation of this terrible curse. Public sentiment is being aroused, and there is talk of an absolute prohibition of the cultivation of the poppy plant within a reasonable length of time. An eminent English physician who has had much opportunity for observation has expressed the opinion that about eight-tenths of the officials, and three-tenths of the people have given up the habit of opium smoking.

Vermillion Parish is in the throes of a local option contest. The whiskey men are resorting to their usual policy of offering to do good with the revenue obtained from the issuance of licenses by proposing to donate a large share of it to the maintenance of the public schools. Such a proposition should be scorned by all moral and patriotic citizens. "Doing evil that good may come of it" is a most pernicious doctrine, which should not find the slightest tolerance among right thinking people. It would be better to close the public schools absolutely than to keep them going by giving the saloons the right to debauch the manhood and corrupt the politics of the State.

Whenever a new census is taken there has to be a reapportionment of representation among the several States of the Union. Those in a position to know say that this will likely cause a tremendous struggle during the present session of Congress. The membership of the House at this time is 392, and the body is already somewhat unwieldy. There will be strong opposition to enlarging it, and, on the other hand, if no increase is allowed, some of the States will probably lose some of their representatives. It is stated that the total number of congressmen will have to be about 440, if the representation of no commonwealth is cut down. We shall await with interest the settlement of this vexed question.

The Chinese generally in the large cities of the United States are celebrating the new year of Confucius 2461. In New York especially the observance of the occasion has been elaborate and noisy. The press dispatches say: "All Mott Street is gay. Great yellow flags are everywhere, with Chinese dragons showing their shapes on the yellow billows of the Celestial colors. Bombs are bursting, rockets are flaring, firecrackers are sputtering, chop suey joints are crowded to the limit, and in the Joss house more incense is being burned and more prayers said than ever before in its history." The Chinese have one custom in celebrating their New Year which we think is most commendable, and might be imitated by Americans with great profit to all. They pay all

Dr. Ira Remsen, the distinguished president of Johns Hopkins University, celebrated his sixty-fourth birthday on Feb. 10. He was born in 1846 of one of the early Dutch families that settled the New Netherlands. After graduating from the College of the City of New York in 1865, he studied medicine with a view to becoming a physician, but soon gave up that profession for the study of chemistry. He spent several years in Germany under the most celebrated chemists of Berlin, Munich and Göttingen. Upon his return to the United States he became assistant professor at Williams College, but soon thereafter joined the faculty at Johns Hopkins, in which institution he has done the work of his life, and of which he has been the official head for several years. He is perhaps America's foremost chemist, and has received honorary degrees from many of the world's most renowned colleges and universities.

The Jews are reported to be returning to Palestine in great numbers, coming mostly from Russia and Persia. The new Constitution in Turkey is said to have accorded them the privilege of going back to the land of their fathers. A special cable to the New York Sun contains the following statements: "In Jerusalem four-fifths of the population of 100,000 belong to the Jewish faith, while at Jaffa, Tiberias, Safed, and Haifa, Jews are reckoned by the tens of thousands. Almost the whole of the extensive plain of Esdraelon has been bought by them, and the valley of the Jordan, once the property of Sultan Abdul Hamid, is now being eagerly sought after by Jewish capitalists. The Holy City is dominated by Jewish influence, containing already over a hundred Jewish schools and many synagogues. The Turks are said to view this incoming tide of immigration with not a little feeling of opposition.

Apparently marvels will never cease. We scarcely wear away our astonishment over one discovery before another is made. For some time, we have been hearing by wire, but now the scientists announce that they have succeeded in developing a contrivance which will make it possible for us to see by wire, that when we shall converse with a friend at a distance, we shall be able not only to hear his familiar voice, but also to see his well known form. Those working at this problem, which they think is about solved, are the famous German electrician, Ruhmer, and a brilliant young French scientist named La Rochelle. Such an achievement seems utterly incredible, but so did wireless telegraphy. As is usual in such cases, this new discovery has brought with it new words. Seeing by means of electricity is called "television," and the instrument used in the process is called "telephote."

Church News

A new and commodious brick church has nearly been completed at Brinkley, Ark., in place of the one which was blown away in the terrific cyclone which swept through that town on the 9th of last March. The new structure is said to be superior to the old.

Hendrix College is planning for a great "home-coming" next June. The movement was started by the Alumni Association, who will leave nothing undone to make the occasion a memorable one. The endowment of this institution, all told, is now said to be $300,000.

The World's Sunday School Convention, which is to meet in Washington, D.C. on May 19, will send to the World's Missionary Conference, which is to assemble in Edinburgh in June, a memorial bearing on the subject of mission work in the Sunday Schools. Dr. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., has been appointed to prepare and convey the paper which will be presented.

The Southwestern University now maintains a medical department at Dallas, Tex. In a recent issue of the Texas Christian Advocate, Dr. Rankin, in referring to it, said, "It is in the midst of a successful term. Its halls are full of students and its work is most satisfactory."

Centenary Church, Lynchburg, Va., of which Rev. J. H. Thomas is pastor, will raise $500 for the maintenance of our French mission work in Louisiana. This is a noble benefaction, wisely directed. There are a number of parishes in this State in which Protestant Christianity needs to be heartened and reinforced.

At Greensboro, N. C., during the recent laymen's meeting, when the missionary offering had been increased in the churches of that city from $5,000 to $25,000, one of the speakers said: "We have got rid of Alexander, the copper-smith, in the church, and are trying to do away with the nickel-aitans (Nicolaitanes)."—Central Methodist Advocate.

Dr. S. A. Steel will begin a series of revival services at Centenary Church, Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 10. Dr. Steel has an interesting communication in the last issue of the Nashville Advocate. We are far from agreeing with him in all of his positions as to what the General Conference ought to do, but we invariably read what he writes with interest. He still makes his home at Brownwood, Tex.

A Roman Catholic paper says that there has never been in all the history of the Catholic Church in America a notable legacy to the cause of missions. None amounting to $100,000 can be recalled. The further statement is that it will take thirty-five years with Catholic societies giving as they are at present to equal the donation made by the late John S. Kennedy to Christian work.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

The next commencement of Whitworth College will be held May 8-10. The commencement sermon will be preached by Dr. S. H. Werlein, of New Orleans, and the sermon before the Y. W. C. A. by Rev. R. J. Jones, of Jackson, Miss. Monday night, May 9, will be the golden anniversary of the first graduating class, and on Tuesday, the 10th, the annual address will be delivered by Dr. Luther Sexton, of this city, who was formerly a Mississippian.

The Executive Committee of the Mississippi Sunday School Association met in Jackson on Feb. 8. Mr. W. Fred Long, the Secretary, submitted a report of the year's work, showing that much progress has been made. The following have been added to the list of organized counties in the State: Pearl River, Clay, Holmes, Coahoma, Pontotoc, Lamar, Sunflower, Scott, Forrest, Jasper, and Union. Twenty-eight county Sunday school conventions were held, and Secretary Long was present at twenty-five of them. He is a most energetic and aggressive worker.

Mr. Pierpont Morgan has given $100,000 for the establishment of the William M. Laffan Professorship of Assyriology and Babylonian Literature at Yale University. Dr. Albert T. Clay, of the University of Pennsylvania, has been invited to accept the new chair. He is an archaeologist of great distinction, and has written a number of volumes dealing with the exploratory work which has been done in the valley of the Euphrates. He is considered one of the ablest of the scientific defenders of the Bible, and more than once has shown how the spade has confirmed the historicity of the events recorded in the Old Testament.

Through the kindness of Dr. J. C. G. Newton, we have received a copy of the Twentieth Anniversary Catalogue of the Kwansei Gakuin, of Kobe, Japan. This school was founded in 1889 by Dr. W. R. Lambuth, who purchased eight and a half acres of ground just outside of the city limits upon which to locate the institution, borrowing the money from an Oriental bank to do so. Its first large benefactor was Mr. T. R. Branch, of Richmond, Va., though it was really Bishop Wilson's influence that gave this particular direction to Mr. Branch's bequest. The present campus comprises thirteen acres, valued at 160,000 yen. The buildings consist of a recitation hall, two dormitories, and a chapel (the gift largely of one man), with a seating capacity of 500. The College has been accorded government recognition, and since its foundation has had ninety-seven graduates, some of whom have taken high rank in the various professions. The atmosphere of the institution is distinctly religious. Sunday school is held in the chapel every Sabbath morning, and preaching every Sunday night. The school is opened every morning with devotions lasting thirty minutes, and on Thursday nights there is a general prayer meeting. The Y. M. C. A. has eighty-two members and seven officers. There is also a "Bible Reading Band," concerning which the following statement is made in the catalogue: "Each member of the Band promises to make it his habit to carry a pocket Testament regularly, and to read at least one chapter every day. Nearly all of the teachers are members of the Band, all of the theological students (twenty-five) belong to it, and 103 of those in the academic department."

Christianity is making remarkable progress in the Empire of Japan. Last October the semi-centennial of its introduction into that country was celebrated in Tokyo. Dr. William Embrie, one of the speakers, said, "Fifty years ago 'religious liberty' was a phrase not yet minted in Japan. To-day it is written in the Constitution of the nation. Less than fifty years ago the Christian Scriptures could be printed only in secret. To-day they are circulated without let or hindrance. Fifty years ago there was not a Protestant Christian in Japan. To-day they are to be found among the members of the Imperial Diet, the judges of the courts, the professors in the Imperial University, the editors of influential newspapers, and the officers of the army and navy. Even forty years ago there was not an organized Protestant Church in all Japan. To-day there are synods, conferences and associations, with congregations dotting the empire from end to end."

In a recent issue of Zion's Herald is contained the following statement: "Rev. H. S. Bradley, D.D., who came from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was, on Jan. 18, installed pastor of the Piedmont Congregational Church, Worcester. Dr. Bradley read a brilliant paper, disappointing in some of its features by reason of what it did not say. But members of the Council state that in the oral examinations, which supplemented the published written statement, Dr. Bradley gave good evidence of cherishing a firm conviction of the Deity of our Lord." Some of our Southern church papers seem to have been made quite happy by the announcement that a searching inquiry disclosed the fact that Dr. Bradley still has some sort of a faith in the divinity of Christ. For our part, we should prefer to have his view certified to by some other body than a committee of New England Congregationalists. Dr. Bradley's article on "The Second Coming," published in The Methodist Review some months ago, was quite enough for us. We have never shed any tears over his departure from the Southern Methodist Church. He is a brilliant man, but no amount of brightness can make up for a want of faith in the essential doctrines of Christianity. The place for all such is in the pulpit of some other fold, or better still, in no pulpit.

ACTION OF MISSISSIPPI METHODIST LAYMEN.

During the Laymen's Missionary Meeting in Jackson, Miss., Methodist men from over the State in large numbers met in the First Methodist Church. Z. Z. Linton was called to the chair and he made an inspiring speech. J. R. Bingham was elected Secretary. After a season of prayer the meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D., of Nashville, Tenn., and the Hon. G. L. Jones, lay leader for the North Mississippi Conference, in speeches of force, fire and fervor. A free interchange of ideas and much heart-to-heart talk led to the adoption of these resolutions by a unanimous, standing, hearty vote:

First—We recognize it to be the present urgent duty of the Church of Christ to undertake to preach the gospel to every creature in the world.

Second—We rejoice that the laymen of the churches are rising up in large numbers to co-operate with their pastors and missionary boards in the attempt to evangelize the world in this generation.

Third—That we unite our efforts and prayers in a persistent attempt to enlist the Christian men of Mississippi in undertaking their full proportion of world responsibility.

Fourth—That we earnestly recommend the appointment in every congregation of a strong missionary committee, which shall conduct a campaign of education on the subject of missions, and also organize and conduct a personal canvass, embracing every member of the congregation, to the end that some worthy, systematic contribution to the cause of world evangelization be made by every one.

Fifth—That we strongly urge the adoption of the weekly system of missionary offerings as the most Scriptural, fair, economical and practical method, believing that, when properly introduced and worked, it secures the largest possible educational, financial and spiritual results.

Sixth—We recommend that all churches in Mississippi, which have not already reached a higher standard, aim to increase their systematic offerings to the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the non-Christian world until they shall be brought up to at least 25 per cent of the church's total offerings for all purposes, including congregational expenses.

Seventh—We recommend the organization in every city, town and community in the State of a co-operating committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which shall keep in touch with the methods of the General Movement, and shall co-operate with all individual congregations in reaching and maintaining their highest missionary efficiency.

Dr. Pinson pronounced the benediction and the meeting adjourned. J. R. BINGHAM, Secretary.

A CORRECTION.

In the Finance Table, for the Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference Minutes, in the last item of the Table, Page XIV of the Statistics, the lines are misplaced, so that from No. 11 to the last items in the District are wrongly placed. No. 22 should be where No. 12 is, and each number should follow to the line below, i.e., the figures following No. 12, or Jackson, should be the figures following No. 22, or Zachery. Then the figures following No. 13, or Kentwood, should be the figures that follow No. 12, or Jackson. This same error continued throughout the remaining lines to No. 21. Especial attention is called to the figures that should follow No. 17, or Ponchatoula; the figures following No. 16 are intended for Ponchatoula, Ponchatoula being the only charge in the District that paid all the assessments in full. Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN, Editor.

IF WE KNEW.

There are gems of wondrous brightness
Ofttimes lying at our feet,
And we pass them, walking thoughtless
Down the busy, crowded street.
If we knew, our pace would slacken.
We would stop more oft with care,
Lest our careless feet be treading
To earth some jewel rare.

If we knew what hearts are aching
For the comfort we might bring;
If we knew what souls are yearning
For the sunshine we might fling;
If we knew what feet are weary,
Walking pathways roughly laid,
We would quickly hasten forward,
Stretching forth our hands to aid.

If we knew what friends around us
Feel a want they never tell,
That some word that we have spoken
Pained or wounded where it fell,
We would speak in accents tender
To each friend we chanced to meet;
We would give to each one freely
Smiles of sympathy so sweet.

—Genesee Richardson, in The Methodist Recorder.

"JESUS IS MINE."

What is it to be able to say, from the heart and with full assurance, "Jesus is mine?" How can this most precious possession become more completely ours? Is not this the great question of life? And can one confer as much benefit upon others in any way so well as by helping them in this matter?

What is it that Jesus stands for? He stands for certain qualities, for a clearly defined character, for an aggregate of attributes and dispositions making up the most impressive personality known to history—such qualities as meekness and gentleness, patience and purity, hatred of sin, love for men, sympathy for suffering, helpfulness to the poor, active beneficence, passive acceptance of the divine will, obedience to God, humility, serenity, reciprocity, kindness, prayerfulness, the rebuke of evil, the proclamation of good tidings. He stands also for certain truths, for a body of doctrine; he was a teacher and preacher, continually declaring to men the mind of God. He spoke of the Divine fatherhood, of human brotherhood, of the necessity for the new birth; he offered himself to men as the source of spiritual rest and nourishment and guidance, as the light of the soul, the way of salvation. If this is what Jesus means, then it would seem that to possess him is to have, in large measure at least, this character, to hold these truths. This it is to "put on Christ." Accepting his lordship in our life, we adopt his principles, we drink in his spirit, and strive to make application thereof to the situations in which we find ourselves. We aim to reproduce him under modern circumstances, so that they who see us will see a fair representation of him. He is the model on which we form ourselves, the standard by which we judge our progress.

Possession in its deeper sense, means power to enjoy, liberty to use. A man owns a thing or a person when he can command it to his service and appropriate it to his own personal benefit. We have a proprietary right in Jesus to the extent that we avail ourselves of what he proffers. He makes himself our servant on certain simple conditions; he puts at our disposal all his powers if we, on our part, will do the same to him. He is ours by exchange. There is a blessed transfer, for he is willing to ignore the amazing disproportion in the barter, and swap even. We give ourselves wholly to him, he gives himself wholly to us. He is "made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." He is made unto us power and peace and purity. We "can do all things in him that strengtheneth" us. In him we "have all and abound"—strength for the conflict, light on the pathway, comfort in trouble. There is no better rule for guidance than at each emergency or perplexity to call up a vivid image of the living Christ, and let that decide, to submit one's self to the spell of his presence, and do nothing which our truest, highest conceptions of him would forbid, to fling ourselves, as it were, into him; to take him into our minds and hearts and lives, and let that thought control. This is where prayer comes in, that we may isolate ourselves from worldly considerations, and get the viewpoint of the Divine. This is why much study of the gospels is indispensable, because only thus, by absorbing his story, can we trust ourselves to know as by instinct what he would do in our place. Through long meditation, combined with absolute consecration, we may certainly arrive at a very safe and sound conclusion about this. We may, at least, feel reasonably sure of our own personal duty in the premises.

He in whose life Jesus becomes the power that he may and should be, what wealth untold, what might immense is his! He finds that a little talk with Jesus really smoothes the most rugged road, lifts the burdens, drives away the gloom. To walk and talk with Jesus, to sit at his feet, to learn from his lips, to look in his face, fills the soul with rapture, crowns the days with triumph. "His name yields the richest perfume." There is sweetness in it, and joy to the uttermost. He stills the craving of the mind, he meets the deepest needs of the heart. If only he is ours, this friend unfailing, then all else is given, then our souls have heaven. In him there is every blessing, hope and love and trust and gladness; his love "passeth knowledge," passeth praises. His presence banishes fear. His voice is music, balm and blessing. In proportion as he is dear to us we may measure our advance. The maturest saints have prized most highly the possession of Jesus as their one supreme treasure. Their transports have not been always the same, for temperament has something to do with emotion and its expression. But always they have found in him a well-spring of unmingled joy; always they have felt that for him to die would be an unspeakable privilege. We cannot love him too much, nor strive too much to be like him. It is safe to abandon ourselves utterly to this pursuit, and become overwhelmingly, increasingly, absorbed, swallowed up, in this aspiration. We may have new visions of him all the time. The oldest has something yet to learn about what he can become to one that fully trusts him. The youngest may truly know him.

How much do we know him, and own him? How far, how fully and boldly, can we say, "He is ours?" Have we his joy, his peace, his gentleness, his courage against wrong-doers, his manliness as well as meekness, his empowering for duty, his oneness with the Father's will? How may he take a larger place in our life and come into closer relation with us, so that we may even say, with Paul, "To me to live is Christ," and "Christ liveth in me?" This is the question of questions. To answer it fully would require volumes, would comprise about all the counsel that spiritual sages have ever uttered. But it may be said, in brief, that we can have him to the degree we really determine, that if we make a business of it, are willing to put all else aside to gain it, esteem it the one thing desirable and act accordingly, studying, planning, watching, working, indefatigably, exultantly, with strong faith, high hope, fervent love, we cannot fail to see most glorious results. To be much like him we must be much with him in thought, word and deed. The assimilating process requires time. But all the way along he will amply reward our every endeavor, and in the end it will be bliss ineffable.

"As by the light of opening day
The stars are all concealed,
So earthly pleasures fade away
When Jesus is revealed.

"Creatures no more divide my choice;
I bid them all depart;
His name, his love, his gracious voice,
Have fixed my roving heart."

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas our beloved president, Dr. W. L. Weber, who has been to us an efficient instructor and loyal friend, has been forced, on account of failing health, to take a temporary leave of absence from his duties; and whereas we feel the keenest interest in his welfare, and trust that he will not long be absent from us; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the students of Centenary College of Louisiana, having learned this with deep regret, wish hereby to express our appreciation of and gratitude for his untiring efforts in our behalf. We hope that the all-wise and great Physician will see fit to restore him speedily to his former strength and usefulness.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be given to Dr. Weber and a copy furnished the Maroon and White, New Orleans Christian Advocate, Shreveport Journal and Shreveport Times for publication.

"WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?"

The "neighbor," for the purposes of the gospel, is definable as any man to whom one may do good. Every life touches many other lives, and every touch should mean an imprint of blessing. The touch should be not merely tactual, but also spiritual. The Good Samaritan touched the life of the victim of the brigands on that dangerous road going down to Jericho at but a single point, but he touched him with a blessing. The best gift he gave the unfortunate was, not his purse, but his personality. In so doing, the Samaritan became a kind of a human savior, the incarnation of neighborliness, the epitome of gospel, the exponent of tender tactual religion. He was emphatically the man of mercy. And the Divine Samaritan, summing up the lessons of the episode, drove its moral home on the conscience of the scribe, and so of every hearer of his words in every age since, with the injunction: "Go thou, and do likewise."—Selected.

A LITTLE FISH NURSE.

How many of you, my little friends, have ever stopped to think, as you fastened up your blouse or your pinafore, where the buttons came from that hold these garments together? Listen to the wonderful story of a common pearl button.

If you were to examine carefully some of the muddy water taken from the upper Mississippi river, you would see tiny eggs floating about or lying half buried in the mud at the bottom of the stream. After Mother Mussel placed these eggs in the water, she gave them no further thought. It seemed as if they were left to live or die as chance directed. Not so, indeed, for the great Father of us all has even provided a foster mother for these tiny mussel babies. As the river currents swung them about, tossing them this way and that, suddenly a school of little fish came gliding along. Every mussel knew instinctively that his nurse had arrived, and all hastened to attach themselves to the fishes. Not until each baby had drilled a hole in the fish's skin and crawled in through it did he feel entirely safe. So tiny are the mussels that a fish six inches long can carry five hundred beneath his skin without feeling the slightest inconvenience, and large fishes can carry many more.

From one to two months must the fishes play foster mothers to these little parasites, but at the end of that time each baby drops off of its own accord, a perfect mussel, but still very tiny. The mussels now plant themselves in the mud, and proceed to grow. It takes from three to five years for a mussel to mature. Now when they are well grown, the fisherman comes with his rake, and rudely tears them from their bed, to which they are attached by strong fibers. They are carried to one of the many factories along the river banks, and their pearly linings are taken out and cut into buttons for mother to sew on your clothes.—M. Leighton, in Boys and Girls.

THE BORROWED GOWN.

"May I go, mamma, and what shall I wear?" cried Grace, quite excited over the prospect of her party in the country. The little girl and her mamma were spending part of the winter with grandma, while papa was away on business.

"Yes, you may go, as it is in the afternoon," answered Mrs. Oliver. "Your blue serge with a pretty white apron will be the most suitable dress."

"Oh, dear!" pouted Grace. "I wanted to wear my new silk, and kid slippers, and carry the fan auntie sent me at Christmas."

"But I'm sure none of the little girls will be dressed like that," returned mamma. Mrs. Herbert says in her note of invitation, 'Let Grace join us in an old-fashioned frolic.'

"But, course, seeing I'm from the city they would expect me to dress differently," persisted Grace.

"Very well," said mamma, quietly, "you may do as you please about the dress, only—you must remember the silk was made for you to wear at Cousin Julia's wedding, and if it gets soiled or crumpled or torn, you'll have to stay at home."

Not to go to the wedding would be dreadful—for Grace was to strew flowers for the bride to walk on—and she had half a mind to wear the serge. But the temptation to show off her pretty clothes to the country children was too strong to be resisted.

There were a dozen or more little folks romping in the big old-fashioned parlor when the city visitor arrived. Daisy and Bessie Herbert helped take off her wraps, and looking admiringly at her finery. Still, when they asked her to join in a game of blind man's buff, and she replied, "I guess I'd better look on," Bessie said:

"It's too bad you didn't have any play clothes to wear."

It was rather nice that they should suppose she hadn't anything but silk clothes to wear. She sat down and tried to make believe she was having a good time. Daisy and Bessie went back to their game, the other children glanced at her shyly once in awhile, and it wasn't long before Grace was very tired of watching the fun, and wished she had listened to mamma. Pretty soon came Mrs. Herbert to invite the merry crowd into the kitchen for a candy-pull, and the room was deserted in a twinkling of all but a sorry little girl, left sitting in her finery.

"Come right out, dear," urged Mrs. Herbert. "Don't you like candy?"

"Yes'm," faltered Grace, almost crying, "but I'm afraid of spoiling this old—I mean new—gown. An' the m'llasses might get into my slippers."

"I see," said the kind-hearted woman. "Maybe I can lend you a playdress. It'll have to be an old one, that my girls have out-grown, they're both so much larger than you, if you don't mind."

Grace declared delightedly that it would be just lovely, and though the borrowed frock wasn't a bit stylish, and was faded besides, and the shoes that took the place of her dainty kid slippers were a size too large, there wasn't a merrier little girl than she in the company the rest of the afternoon, and when the merry-party broke up she had made friends with everyone.

She told mamma all about it when she got home. "It was awfully pokey at first," she owned, "and some of them thought I was stuck up, for wearing a silk gown. I'm going to wear the dress you want me to next time without any grumbling."—Louise Liddell, in New York Observer.

THE BIGGEST MAN.

"Who was the biggest man you ever saw?" asked Johnny of Uncle John. Uncle John had sailed ever so many times around the world, and seen wonderful things.

"The biggest man I ever saw was in the Society Islands," said Uncle John, stroking his white beard. "It was on my first voyage, Johnny, and I was ready to be surprised at anything. But Tamatoa—that was the islander's name—was the most astonishing person I have ever seen from that day to this. He was six feet eleven inches tall—a real, true giant, and the king of the island."

"Did he wear a crown?" said Johnny.

"No," said Uncle John. "He didn't need to. You could pick him out for the king wherever he went, for he was head and shoulders above the rest and he was the strongest and cleverest of them all. Before the missionaries came, Tamatoa had been actually worshipped and had sacrifices offered to him, because the people thought he was greater than any man could be and so he must be a god. They did not know anything about the true God, anyway, but worshipped idols."

"Was Tamatoa kind to the people?" asked Johnny.

"Sometimes he was a good enough king," said Uncle John. "But the trouble with Tamatoa was that he drank. He bought liquor from the trading vessels that came to the islands and when he was drunk he was a terrible creature. He would seize a club or a spear and run out and strike down the first person he saw. Once he did not have a spear handy, so he struck a man in the face with his big fist instead. He hit so hard that he made the man blind, but Tamatoa's own forefinger was so smashed up that it had to be taken off."

"Wasn't everybody afraid of such a giant?" said Johnny, feeling glad he didn't live in the Society Islands.

"Yes indeed," said Uncle John. "But something wonderful happened. Tamatoa heard the missionaries preach, and he became converted. He threw away his idols, and refused to let the people worship him as a god. He came and sat in the missionary school and learned to read the Bible. He stood up before all the islanders and said he wanted to be a Christian; and on the day he joined the church he promised never to taste liquor again as long as he lived. There is a kind of intoxicating drink the islanders make from the hava-root of which Tamatoa was very fond. He promised never to touch that, either, and he kept his word. He never again tasted intoxicating drink, and instead of being a terror to everybody, he was kind and good."

"Weren't his people glad when he stopped drinking and was a Christian?" asked Johnny.

"They were so pleased," said Uncle John, "that most of them stopped drinking, too. Tamatoa set such a good example that the whole island tried to follow it. In fifteen years the missionary counted only two drunken persons, where before there had been many. Tamatoa became a true king you see, leading his people to do right, and follow Jesus. If he had not turned away from liquor, he would have ruined his own soul, and other people's, too. I always think of Tamatoa when I go to a temperance meeting."—Child's Hour.

THE TEARS IN BOOKS.

It is not hard to understand why, when a book makes you laugh, you want to read it and to read it over and over again. But it is rather puzzling to find that one also enjoys reading and re-reading books that make one want to cry. What can there be in us that likes to be made to feel unhappy? In real life we don't try to do things that will make us suffer—not at all. But there are books that you cannot think of once you have read them, without tears coming to your eyes, and yet you will find that you love those books perhaps more than any others.

To feel deeply is one of the best things in life; and there, maybe, lies the explanation of why we do love sad stories. They make us unhappy in a way, but they do not leave behind any bitterness or sense of personal loss. And they usually have a special beauty of their own.—St. Nicholas.

THE FAIRBANKS INCIDENT.

The Hon. C. W. Fairbanks, late Vice-President of the United States, has recently been making a tour of the world. Arriving in Rome, Italy, a few days since, he made three specific engagements, as follows: On Saturday he was to call on King Victor Emanuel; on Sunday he was to deliver an address in the Methodist Episcopal Church of that city, and on Monday it was arranged for him to visit Pope Pius at the Vatican. Being informed of his purpose to speak to the Methodists, the denomination of which he has long been a member, the Pope notified Mr. Fairbanks that he would not receive him unless he would cancel that engagement. Hearing of the ultimatum delivered to the distinguished visitor, Dr. B. M. Tipple, the Methodist pastor, at once offered to release him from his promise to address his congregation, but Mr. Fairbanks insisted upon keeping his appointment with his own Church and did so.

As was to be expected, an account of the incident was wired everywhere, and it has excited widespread interest and comment. Without exception, Mr. Fairbanks' dignified and manly course has been enthusiastically commended. Indeed, he has made himself a hero, and is receiving the admiration and applause of the entire Protestant world. And we dare say that even the Catholics really have more respect for him than they would if he had repudiated the faith of his fathers and fawned at the feet of the Roman Pontiff. Pius little understands the American spirit if he thought the mere prospect of a sight of his holiness would command an immediate sacrifice of independence and life-long principles. Such servility might be possible for a European, trained to bow down before the slightest semblance of authority, but not for a worthy citizen of the Western Republic who acknowledges the inherited right of no king and pays tribute to no State Church.

The various attempts of Roman Catholics to explain this act of flagrant discourtesy and intolerance are puerile and wholly unsatisfactory. The truth is, the several reasons assigned for the course pursued by the Pope are in irreconcilable conflict. For instance, one statement is that the Pontiff is glad to see representatives of Protestant denominations generally, and that his only cause for making an exception of the Methodists is that they have made themselves particularly spiteful and offensive in the city of Rome. But unfortunately for this view, the Vatican justifies the snubbing of Mr. Fairbanks on other grounds, as is shown by the following dispatch from Rome on the 8th inst.: "The Vatican explains that it is customary for the Pope never to receive a personage who acts in any manner other than that of a Catholic minister in Rome. It is pointed out that Seth Lowe, the ex-mayor of New York, was received by the Pope and afterwards delivered an address in a Protestant Church, like Mr. Fairbanks, which the Holy See extremely regretted." From this it is clear that the attitude of the Pontiff toward all of the Protestant Churches is one of implacable hostility and that the treatment of Mr. Fairbanks would not have been different, had he been booked to speak to a Presbyterian or Episcopalian congregation. We do not doubt, however, that the Pope's dislike of the Methodists is more intense because of their larger activity and success at his very door, and that on this account it gave him more pleasure to strike at them than it would at any other denomination. But the real position of the Roman See in receiving all visitors is that they must come in the guise of Catholics, and that the slightest exhibit of loyalty to Protestantism will shut the door of the Vatican, hard and fast, in their faces. In other words, where it is not concealed because of the fear of enlightened public sentiment, the spirit of Rome is little, if any, less bigoted and intolerant to-day than when she stained the floors of dungeons with the blood of martyred saints and kindled the fires of the Spanish Inquisition.

Of course, we do not mean to contend that there has been no clash between Methodists and the adherents of Roman Catholicism in Italy. They could not operate in the same field without their variant views coming more or less into conflict. They do that in America and in all Protestant lands. The teachings of Wesleyans can no more accord with those of the papal hierarchy than light can blend with darkness. The Methodists believe in justification by faith; Rome teaches the doctrine of justification by works. Methodism holds that the Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation and are a sufficient guide for human conduct; Rome insists that the Bible alone is not enough and enthrones tradition along side of revelation. Methodism believes that God, and God only, should be worshiped; Rome fills her cathedrals with sacred images and fastens upon her votaries a hybrid species of idolatry. Methodism believes in an open Bible and the enlightenment of the people; Rome believes in closing the Divine Book to the masses and that "ignorance is the mother of devotion." Two churches with teachings so antagonistic could not possibly propagate their doctrines in the same land without feeling to some extent the opposition of each other.

But we do not, for one moment, allow that the Methodists have done anything unusual or improper in Italy. They may have shown their admiration for Garibaldi, the liberator of his country, but since when did it become an unpardonable offense to pay tribute to a promoter of human freedom? In preaching what they conceive to be the gospel of Christ, they may have made proselytes from the papal faith, but is not Rome everywhere doing her utmost to make converts from Protestantism? It may be true that they have spent twelve million dollars in establishing Methodism in Italy, but has not Rome spent hundreds of millions trying to establish herself upon the American shores? No, no, we do not believe that Rome herself really thinks that the Methodists are sinners above other Protestants in the methods of work which they have adopted. Burning with a hatred of all not of her own fold, and particularly jealous of the Methodists because of what they have achieved, Rome, for the moment, forgot her customary cunning and displayed her old-time spirit of bitterness and persecution. And now seeing her unfortunate mistake in so doing, she is endeavoring to misrepresent and stigmatize the Methodists to furnish a shield from the arrows of criticism, which, from all over the world, are coming thick and furiously against her.

The mere spectacle of Roman Catholicism finding fault with another denomination for unworthy methods of propaganda, is in itself enough to excite laughter and derision. Has she forgotten the career of her Jesuits? Has she dismissed from memory her history of intrigue, and of the fagot and sword? Has she ceased to know that the blackest and bloodiest chapters in the annals of Christendom have been written by her followers? No matter what any Protestant denomination may ever do, it will never be able to approach Rome in the disreputable character of the methods adopted to promote its extension. We would remind the adherents of Roman Catholicism that this is the twentieth century, that nothing can now fetter the human conscience or restrict the freedom of human thought, and that such exhibitions of arrogance and impudence as that shown in the treatment of Mr. Fairbanks, will not strengthen, but make more insecure the already shattered papal throne.

OUR MISSION AND RELATED BOARDS.

Dr. John M. Moore, of St. Louis, in a recent issue of the Texas Christian Advocate, insists that there should be a readjustment of the Boards controlling the several departments of our missionary work. He suggests two possible plans of so doing. "One is the forming of one great Board of Missions with various departments. These departments may represent Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Church Extension, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Woman's Home Mission Board, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Board—six departments, over each of which would be an assistant secretary, and over the entire Board one general secretary." A second method would be to create a Board of Foreign Missions that will have charge of all the missionary work of the Church, including Church Extension, in all of the countries outside of the United States, and of any missionary work that might be established in Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands; and a Board of Home Missions and Church Extension that will have charge of all the general missionary work and Church Extension in the United States, excepting Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. Put over these boards a secretary and an assistant. These two boards would represent the two fields. The secretary of Foreign Missions would have his whole thought and time and powers for foreign missionary work. The secretary of Home Missions and Church Extension, with his assistant, would have free play of their abilities in the solution of the home problem."

Of the two plans suggested by Dr. Moore, we much prefer the latter. We have observed that larger results are accomplished when a body of men give themselves to a certain definite and specific work. If they broaden the field too much and undertake too many things, a loss of efficiency generally follows. We also heartily favor leaving the woman's work just as it is at present. We think the autonomy of their boards should be left undisturbed. The women of Southern Methodism have wrought nobly and should continue practically untrammelled in the prosecution of the glorious tasks which they have assumed.

CONCERNING CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE ADVOCATE.

We touched upon this subject in our first issue, but we feel constrained to make a few additional statements concerning it. We need well prepared contributions dealing with pertinent themes and we invite all who may feel disposed to do so to write for the paper, but we desire the brethren, in the interest of their Conference organ, to allow us to exercise our best judgment as to what can appear in its columns to the greatest profit. The space at our disposal is not ours to use as we please, but there is an obligation upon us to make that disposition of it which we think will contribute most to the upbuilding of the Church. No brother should take offense if his article is not printed, for we mean no discourtesy and would not intentionally wound the humblest contributor. We claim no infallibility and are quite liable to be in error as to the quality of a composition. Besides, contributions may be declined upon other grounds than that of merit. They may be admirably written, but not timely; or they may be similar to articles which have just been published, and, of course, too much repetition is not allowable. We request our friends to guard against too great prolixity, and we wish it to be distinctly understood that we will return no manuscript unless accompanied by stamps to pay the postage, as will be at once seen. In dealing with so many we could not afford to do that. And we urge those sending in obituaries and other matter to prepare them in such a manner that they can go to the printer without alteration. The editor's most laborious task is the rearrangement and revision of material sent in for publication.

We wish also to write a line to those in charge of the woman's work in our territory. It is a pleasure to serve those charged with the responsibility of this, but we respectfully request them not to make too great drafts upon our space. Notices and brief appeals, we are glad to publish, but it is taxing to handle lengthy reports and discussions. It should be remembered that the general cause of missions needs occasionally to be presented, and that there are other departments of church work entitled to a hearing. We are happy to do anything in our power for any Methodist in our territory, but we do not desire to serve some to the neglect of others.

ON TO DALLAS!

The outlook for the Laymen's Conference at Dallas, which begins on Saturday, the 19th, could scarcely be brighter. Everywhere throughout the Church great enthusiasm is being displayed, and a record-breaking attendance seems assured. The occasion bids fair to be an epochal one, and we sincerely hope that the Methodism of our territory will be well represented. Let prayer be made throughout the connection that the Holy Spirit may overshadow and guide the deliberations of this great assembly.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. M. Henry, of Baton Rouge, is attending the Laymen's Convention now in session in this city. He has a host of friends in New Orleans, who are always glad to greet him.

Rev. R. A. Clark requests us to announce that the annual Epworth League Conference of North Mississippi will be held at Kosciusco, June 14-16th. A program of the meeting will be published in the near future.

Rev. James M. Lewis, of Vancleave, Miss., is pleased with the progress being made in his charge. He sees indications of a coming revival and is expectant of an ingathering ere long. May he have the realization of his earnest desire!

That stalwart Methodist and good friend of the Advocate, Rev. G. W. Bachman, continues to place us under obligations to him for subscriptions sent in. He is a faithful and untiring toiler, and a Wesleyan in whom there is no variableness or shadow of turning.

Rev. J. W. McLellan sends some subscribers and a message of cheer from Chunky, Miss. He is delighted with the situation in his field, and expects to see a great spiritual awakening in the not far future. He has Rev. W. G. Harbin booked for three weeks of service in August.

Rev. S. J. Davies requests us to state that Rev. R. W. Vaughan, the editor of the Conference minutes, is in no way to blame for the incomplete report from the Bastrop charge. He desires that no injustice shall be done Brother Vaughan, who is painstaking and thorough in his work.

During Mardi Gras Mr. B. T. Goza, an esteemed layman of Magnolia, Miss., favored the Advocate office with a call. He spoke in the highest terms of his pastor, the Rev. H. B. Watkins, and reported that his congregation contributed to the Orphans' Home on the first Sunday in February more than $300.

Bishop Warren Candler is now holding Conferences in Mexico. Dr. G. B. Winton, editor of the Nashville Advocate, is making the round with him in that part of the field. Bishop Candler has acquired sufficient knowledge of the Spanish language to converse readily with the brethren who speak that tongue. They are most fortunate in having the superintendence of our Georgia chief-shepherd.

In a note written on the 10th inst., Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir says: "I desire to express thanks through the Advocate to the editor and friends for their sympathy and prayers during my severe illness, both prior to my coming to the Sanitarium in Alexandria, La., and since I have been here." He desires a continuance of the supplications of the brethren for his complete recovery, of which his physicians hold out much hope.

Among those participating in the New Orleans Laymen's Convention are Hon. T. H. Yun, the distinguished Korean statesman and educator; Drs. W. H. Park and A. P. Parker, of China, and Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn. Methodism has reason to be proud of those representing her in the present missionary campaign among the laymen. None connected with the movement are rendering more substantial service.

Bishop A. W. Wilson celebrated his 76th birthday at his home in Baltimore on Sunday, Feb. 6. He has measurably recovered from his recent illness, and expects to attend the Laymen's Conference at Dallas. American Methodism has in it no more majestic figure than our honored senior Bishop, and we join his great hosts of friends in praying that he may long be spared to bless the Church with his noble ministry and wise counsel.

Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Shaw, Miss., always a good fellow, continues to grow in grace and good works. His latest manifestation of it is the forwarding of a second club of subscribers to the Advocate—sixteen new ones. We note among them the name of Rev. W. H. Morgan, one of the most wide-awake and lovable Baptist ministers in Mississippi. We do not need to say that we are grateful to Brother McKeown and the worthy flock which he serves.

From a special to the Times-Democrat on the 14th inst. from Grand Cane, La., we take the following: "The first quarterly conference for this circuit has been in session at this place for two days, and closed last night with an able sermon by Presiding Elder Warlick of Shreveport. The entire session has been well attended and profitable. The Sunday school workers are putting new life into all phases of Sunday school work, and are banding themselves together in a study circle."

Rev. D. L. Cogdell, of Lula, Miss., a veteran of two wars—that between the States and the one now being waged between the forces of light and darkness—has, as usual, made a fine beginning in his new field. He is the church builder of his Conference and is never so happy as when he hears the ring of the hammer upon an upgoing parsonage or house of worship. We are pleased to learn of his success, and extend to him our hearty thanks for a club of ten subscribers.

Rev. L. F. Alford, of Newton, Miss., in a communication to the editor, writes as follows: "The oldest son of Rev. T. J. O'Neill, our presiding elder, has had typhoid fever for about five weeks and is still in a serious condition. Two of his other children have had the same malady, but are now up. I ask the prayers of the brethren for this stricken family. We have been given a cordial reception, our congregations are large and the outlook in our present pastorate is really encouraging."

We thank Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., for the following items of interest: "Our laymen's committee held a very enthusiastic rally on the fifth Sunday night in January. We elected delegates to the Shreveport Convention and expect to attend in force. Rev. L. E. Wicht is starting off well on the Haynesville Mission. He has large crowds at every appointment, and is planning for an aggressive revival campaign in the summer. I begin this week a meeting for the Y. M. C. A., at Centenary College."

Rev. H. T. Cunningham, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but now presiding elder of the Marshall District of the Texas Conference, has kindly mailed us a program of his Pastors' Meeting and Missionary Institute. It is up-to-date in every respect, and shows that Brother Cunningham is bent on forging forward. The following is the rallying cry adopted: "At least one thousand new converts. A revival of family altars. Collections up and over. A forward movement in the whole district." We wish this energetic leader the largest possible measure of success.

While in Jackson last week attending the Mississippi Laymen's Convention, it was our pleasure to dine at the hospitable home of Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Murrah. Our associate guests were Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn.; Mr. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss.; Mr. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton; Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Hattiesburg, and President H. L. Whitfield, of the Industrial Institute and College, of Columbus. There was high fellowship in that circle, and it is needless to say that the one who added most to the brightness of the occasion was the charming hostess.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, of the Louisiana Avenue Church, of this city, is planning to hold a series of revival services in the near future. The preaching will be done by Rev. N. E. Joyner, and Mr. I. N. Niebergal will lead the singing.

That elect lady, Mrs. J. W. Mason, of Benoit, Miss., writes hopefully of the outlook for the work of the church in her community. She is pleased to have Dr. J. W. Price as her pastor, and believes that he will render the service needed by the congregation of which she is a member.

We were pleased to have Rev. K. W. Dodson call at the office a few days since. The year has opened auspiciously at New Iberia, La., where he is in charge. The assessment for pastor has been increased $200 and is paid up to date. The prospect in every particular is considered highly gratifying.

A dispatch to The New Orleans Picayune from Covington, La., on the 13th inst., says: "The first quarterly conference of the current year for this charge convened here to-day, presided over by Rev. F. N. Parker, D.D., presiding elder of the New Orleans District. Dr. Parker preached at both the morning and evening services to good congregations, and at the conclusion of the morning sermon administered the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The business session was well attended. Rev. L. I. McCain submitted good reports, and the following delegates were elected to the District Conference: W. G. Evans, F. Mathies, G. A. Carpenter, L. W. Alford and John Bawn."

Bishop Hoss' last reply to Dr. Winton, which has just appeared in the Texas Christian Advocate, measures up to "the high water mark" in every respect. Its spirit is admirable, and, as we see it, its logic is overwhelming. Dr. Rankin has announced that the controversy is now at an end, so far as his paper is concerned. Some of our readers wanted us to reproduce the discussion in the New Orleans Advocate, but it has taken such a wide range and is so voluminous that we have deemed it best not to do so. Bishop Hoss has suggested to Dr. Winton the plan of having their several communications published together in pamphlet form and scattered broadcast throughout the Church. We sincerely wish that this might be done.

We are indebted to Mr. Robert C. Ogden, President, for an invitation to attend the Conference for Education in the South which will be held at Little Rock, Ark., April 6-8. Mr. Ogden, among other things, says: "We are going to Little Rock in response to urgent and cordial invitations from the Governor of the State, the State Superintendent of Education, the President of the State Normal, and various influential bodies of that State and city." Leading professional men, business men and educators from every section are expected to be present.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

Louisiana Conference.

The Executive Committee of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension will be held at Winnfield, La., March 22. All applications should be carefully filled out, all questions answered, and all facts and figures correctly given. Neglect at any point will lessen the chances of success. All papers should be sent to the President or Secretary of the Board in ample time to come properly before said meeting. It is the rule of the General Board to ignore all applications reaching it later than April 1.

J. D. HARPER.

Rear-Admiral Schroeder, in command of the Atlantic fleet now engaged in practice maneuvers in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, in a recent report to the Navy Department, stated 2500 men in his squadron are unable to swim. It would seem that this is rather a poor showing for Uncle Sam. It certainly appears that those who live on the water ought to know how to take care of themselves in the case of accident.

STARTING THE YEAR ON THE NATCHEZ DISTRICT.

The territory of the Natchez District has been scourged by the Mexican boll weevil. The western part of this territory, where the effete system of agriculture, best described by the words "cotton only, and on a credit" has obtained, received the first invasion of the pest: hence financial depression prevails. Nevertheless the circuits and stations in that area have started well.

Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, realizing keenly the depression, felt compelled to inform the presiding elder before Conference that the salary this year would be less than it was last year. This was done with no knowledge as to who would be pastor. Rev. Rob't Selby, who had served the charge for three years, was returned. As if to make amends for this necessary cut in salary, the people there seem to be doubling their efforts to be kind and considerate. The presiding elder was there last Sunday and found new rugs, matings and sundry other comforts in the parsonage; and he heard of a "linen shower" for "the mistress of the manse," and a pounding for all, as events since Conference; and Brother Selby, though neither lame nor decrepit, was using a handsome walking-cane, because it came at Christmas as a token of love from the Sunday school. This pastor and his wife are beloved in Natchez, and deserve it all.

Van Hook, at Woodville, pastor of the church and president of the College, has all that he can do, and is meeting every demand in both spheres—such is his wonderful versatility, coupled with wide culture.

Brother R. Bradley, at Washington, with his good wife, is pleasing both the Lord and his people. They have found out there that Bradley can preach.

Time would fail me to tell of H. P. Lewis, Jr., and his gratified flock at Pearl Street; of W. F. Baggett and Hamburg circuit, a recent combination quite happy, and of J. L. Red and the Meadville circuit. Of this last I must record a protest: one new place, without a church building, protested that the amount assessed for pastor's salary against it was too small, and increased it more than 75 per cent. Such protests are refreshing.

Brother H. C. Brown and Centerville are hopeful. Rev. J. T. Griffin, local supply on the Woodville circuit, found that he could not serve the charge, though he held on during January. Rev. E. A. Moody, of Waynesboro, takes his place. The outlook there is very hopeful, notwithstanding the boll weevil.

It is hardly necessary to say that W. H. Huntley, the scholarly gentleman and everybody's beloved, is pleasing the people here at Gloster. He is delighting everybody.

All of these good things on the district make life for this hard-worked presiding elder very bright. I have not visited the other charges yet.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN, P. E.
Gloster, Miss., Feb. 4, '10.

NOTABLE DEATHS OF THE YEAR.

Among the many missionaries that God called home last year were five famous veterans, whose names will ever have a place in the history of missions:

Dr. William Ashmore, whose half-century of work at Swatow had a profound influence upon the development of missions in China.

Dr. William S. Arment, whose ministry during the Boxer troubles greatly endeared him to Christians both in the home land and in China.

Dr. George E. Post, of the Medical Department of the Syrian Protestant College, whose medical works won him honors and decorations in many lands.

Dr. Sheldon Jackson, whose work for the pioneers of the West, the Mormons, the Indians, and the Alaskans, gave him first rank among the home missionaries of his day.

Mr. Egerton R. Young, whose thrilling stories of work among the Indians of the great Canadian Northwest have delighted readers of all ages and won many friends for missions.

The noble army of martyrs received three accessions among the missionaries—Daniel Miner Rogers and Henry Mauer, who were shot at Adaan while trying to save the girls' school; and Homer C. Baskerville, who fell while leading a sortie out of Tabriz to relieve the famished city. Though the latter had severed his connection with the mission, he was fighting in behalf of a sorely oppressed people, and few will doubt that he gained a martyr's crown.

A peculiarly sad death was that of Miss Lilavati Singh, professor of English literature and philosophy in the Isabella Thoburn College at Lucknow, who had come to this country for a graduate course at Radcliffe, and died in Chicago while traveling in the interests of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Missionary Review of the World.

AN INTERESTING MEETING.

The Religious Education Association is to have its seventh annual convention at Nashville on March 8-10. The topic is to be: "The Church and Education." It is a big and vital and present subject. Special railway and hotel rates are offered. Speakers of national prominence will be present for set addresses, but much time will be given to open-court, free-for-all discussions. Teachers, editors, ministers, lawyers, business men who have this great subject at heart should by no means miss this meeting. The gathering is not to be dominated by previously made sentiment or partisan propaganda of any kind. It will be what the members of it make it. The South never had a better opportunity to testify to the nation and to the world of her loyalty to a great fundamental truth—namely, that there can be no true education that does not involve the training of the moral nature—than she has at this meeting. Let her sons be on hand. Great college presidents and professors like Faunce of Brown, Harris of Northwestern, Snyder of Wofford, Sanders of Washburn, Kirkland of Vanderbilt, Coe, Votaw, Claxton, Burton, and great church leaders like Bishops McDowell, Hendrix, Atkins, Drs. Merrill, Fosdick, Young, Hammond, Tillett, and many others will lead and give tone to the discussions. The full program is ready for distribution, and will be forwarded by the secretary, Mr. Henry F. Cope, 72 East Madison Street, Chicago. We hope that the Methodists will not let others take their crown in enthusiasm for this great cause.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

MRS. RUSSELL SAGE TAGGED FOR $1500.

As a result of tag day (Saturday, Feb. 5) for the Benefit of Rest Awhile, the Travelers' Aid and the Public Playgrounds Association, Mrs. Russell Sage, who has been visiting in New Orleans, gave $500 to each of the three organizations.

The donations were in the form of checks on the Fifth Avenue Bank of New York, and were turned over by Mrs. Sage to Russell Blakely, manager of the St. Charles Hotel, she requesting that he turn the money into the treasury of the organizations. The checks were made out in Mrs. Sage's own writing and were dated Feb. 7. They were signed "M. Olivia Sage," and made payable to the respective treasurers of the three organizations.

Mrs. Sage's gifts are the result of an incident Saturday, when hundreds of women and girls were out in the interests of these three charitable institutions. Mrs. Sage, who had her own automobile here, was out riding near West End Saturday afternoon, when the machine stopped while the chauffeur was attending to some of the details of the mechanism.

"Won't you buy a tag?" a little girl asked as she approached the machine.

"What are they for?" Mrs. Sage asked.

"For charity," the child answered.

Mrs. Sage took a tag, giving the girl a dollar, explaining that that was all she had in change.

Printed on the tags, possibly you will remember, were the names of the three organizations. After Mrs. Sage had returned to the hotel, she got to thinking it over. Finally she consulted with Manager Russell Blakely. She asked him about Rest Awhile, the Playgrounds Association and the Travelers' Aid, and, assuring herself that the causes were worthy ones, she said she thought she would give another donation in addition to the dollar given to the little girl out on the Shellrood.

"All that I ask," said Mrs. Sage, "is that nothing be said until I leave town."

Mr. Blakely respected this desire of one of America's richest women, and kept the subscription a secret until last night, several hours after Mrs. Sage had started on her way West.

Mrs. Sage said no one had asked her to give—that the little girl and the tag had interested her and the causes seemed deserving.

Mrs. Sage and party were traveling in a private car. Several days will be spent in San Antonio, and then they will proceed to California. At Pasadena Mrs. Sage will remain some time.

"I am going there for an extended rest," she told Mr. Blakely.

Saturday night a little girl who had been out working for charity all day returned home, tired, hungry, but happy.

"Mamma," she said, "I sold one tag to-day to a mighty nice old lady, and she gave me a whole dollar. I wonder who she is! Some Carnival visitor, I guess."

And others, are wondering who this tired little girl is, who interested Mrs. Sage in tag day and who might be said to be responsible for getting the $1500 gift, probably the record price for three tags.—Times-Democrat.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The price of the Advocate is $1.50 a year with a commission of fifteen cents to agents to cover expense of collecting and remitting. The rate to preachers and widows of preachers will remain at one dollar a year.

The club rate for 1910 will be $1.25 each in clubs of five or more. We offer the club rate as a privilege that has been requested of us, and we will give a commission of ten cents per subscriber, only when it is requested. This commission must cover the cost of remittance.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks, we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the regular price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by the thousands, it becomes a serious matter. We are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

Mrs. A. S. ARMSTRONG (nee Guice) was born Jan. 3, 1821, and died Dec. 20, 1909. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church in her fifteenth year. She had been in the Christian pilgrimage for seventy-four years without ever having backslid. Her husband was Rev. Geo. C. Armstrong, one of the pioneer local preachers of this section. She was the mother of several children, all of whom, with her husband, preceded her to the better land. One grandson survives. Her salvation was emphatically a conscious salvation. She passed through many trials, but her sentiment ever was, "earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal." She was a true wife, a good mother and a useful, faithful servant of Christ. She was her pastor's friend and helper. She was for many years president of the Ladies' Aid Society of Fayette Circuit. She was ever present to meet and welcome the new preacher. She lived well, and died triumphantly. She leaves many relatives, and a host of friends to mourn her departure. But their loss is her eternal gain.

IRA B. ROBERTSON.

Mrs. HESTER ANN FURR, the subject of this memoir, was born July 5, 1831, in Hanover County, Va., and died Oct. 4, 1909, at the home of her grandson, Eugene A. Anderson, near Memphis, Tenn. Between these two dates a long and beautiful life was lived. She was the daughter of Stephen and Louisa J. Knapp, and was married to Caleb T. Furr in Holly Springs, Miss., April 28, 1850. Ten children were born to these parents, all of whom survive: Augustus F., C. L. and W. T. Furr, and Sallie E. Street of Memphis; Henry C. Furr and Mary J. Whiteside, of Hickory Flat, Miss.; Isaac G. and Paul S. Furr, of Holly Springs; W. C. Furr, of New Albany; and Hester J. Whiteside, of Tyler, Tex. She was a sufferer for many months and was much emaciated in body before the end came, but her mind was strong and clear to the last. She took an active interest in current events, and by constant reading kept well informed. As her strength grew weaker, her faith grew stronger. Without a cloud in her spiritual skies she passed over the river and joined the countless host on the other side. To her devoted daughters and loyal sons, I extend heartfelt sympathy.

S. A. R.

MINNIE JESSIE KIMBRELL, the daughter of John and Willie Kimbrell, was born June 23, 1903. The angel of death came and bore her away on his snow white wings, Oct. 11, 1909, after a brief and painful illness. She was a sweet little doll and loved by all who knew her. She had a lovable disposition and her future seemed so bright to us. But the dear Lord, who doeth all things for the best, knew she was too precious for this world. Dear one, how we miss you, though we realize that our loss is heaven's gain. Your little form on earth, we no more shall see. The voice we loved is still. There is an aching in mama's heart, that never can be filled. Dear Lord, help us all to be submissive to thy holy will. She had all the attention that loving kindred, friends and a dear physician could give. She was laid to rest by her Aunt Minnie in Wyatt's Chapel Cemetery. Brother J. H. Mitchell, of Water Valley, performing the burial service. May God bless the bereaved.

USEFUL INFORMATION FOR MOTHERS.

THE CHILD'S FOOD.

There is nothing more important to the welfare of a child than the food it eats and every mother should give this matter of proper food her most careful consideration.

The first year of a child's life is of necessity confined to a milk diet. Every mother who can nurse her baby is indeed fortunate, for a child brought up on mother's milk is in better condition to withstand sickness than one brought up on a substitute for nature's best food.

In case a mother cannot nurse her baby the next best thing to use is cow's milk, modified as prescribed by the physician.

Toward the end of the first year or early on the second year, in addition to milk, the child should be given a little wheat, oatmeal or barley gruel, followed a few weeks later by beef juice, eggs, orange juice, peaches, strawberries, etc., without the pulp or seed.

In the early stages of a child's life, when all other foods have failed, physicians have found the following food to agree with children: soak 20 grains of gelatine for a few minutes in cold water and then dissolve in 1-2 pint of boiling water. Into this stir, while still boiling, 1-teaspoonful of arrowroot, which has been previously rubbed up into a paste, by the addition of a little cold water. Add milk and cream at the same time in varying proportions. The gelatine and the arrowroot prevent the formation of a heavy curd and enable the delicate stomach to assimilate this food.

The third year, steaks and chops may be added to the child's diet, together with the ordinary vegetables, such as potatoes, rice, etc. Fruit should be given in abundance at all times, but discretion should be used in this matter as to quality and quantity.

Pure gelatine contains all the constituents of steak and chops and does not impose such a task upon the digestive organs. It is very nutritious, and there is absolutely no waste to it. Fruit and gelatine make a pleasing combination, very nutritious and wholesome. Gelatine may be combined to advantage with almost any article of food, meats excepted, and aside from its important place in the child's food, it is a great favorite with those who prefer a vegetable diet. As the custom of eating fruits, nuts and vegetables rather than so much meat increases, we shall see gelatine come more and more into its proper place on the table. And Boston Crystal Gelatine by reason of its purity, economy and the great variety of dishes which it makes possible, will bring increasing millions happiness. Crystal Gelatine Company, Boston, Mass.

Your Nerves

Ask your doctor if alcoholic stimulants are not often very disastrous when given to nervous people. He will tell you why.

Your nerves must be fed with pure, rich blood, or there will be trouble. Poorly fed nerves are weak nerves; and weak nerves mean nervousness, neuralgia, headaches, debility. Weak nerves need good food, fresh air, and Ayer's non-alcoholic Sarsaparilla.

A MEMOIR.

Mrs. HELEN THOMAS was born near Lumberton, Roberson County, N. C., Sept. 12, 1834, and departed this life Jan. 3, 1910. She was the daughter of F. A. and S. A. Townsend, who were of old-time Methodists of the praying and working type. Her parents moved near Lodie, Miss., in her girlhood, where they reared their family and spent the remainder of their earthly pilgrimage in serving God and the church. In 1853 Helen was happily married to Mr. J. B. Thomas. Mr. Thomas was a Confederate soldier during the late war between the States and fought bravely as a worthy son of the South under the Stars and Bars for what he and his people believed to be their inalienable rights. At the close of the war in 1865, he moved to the State of Arkansas. In 1870 he was licensed to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in 1882 was admitted on trial into the travelling connection in the Little Rock Conference in which he served the Church as a true, faithful and efficient undershepherd of the flock of God until his translation from labor to reward in 1896. Having no children at the death of her husband, Mrs. Thomas removed to Minerva, Miss., and spent the remainder of her days with her relatives. She died in the home of her brother, Rev. F. A. Townsend, and was laid to rest in Salem Cemetery by the writer. Mrs. Thomas was a strong and positive Christian character. Descended from a long line of the cleanest citizenship of North Carolinians, which has given some able ministerial talent, and reared in a home of ante-hellum Southern plenty, and given the best advantages the country afforded, she possessed characteristics of mind and heart which fitted her for a place of usefulness and honor in any circle. Though always pleasant, and capable of adapting herself to any and all circumstances she was naturally of a serious and reflective cast of mind. Life was real and great to her. No part of it was ever thrown away. Everything bearing upon it was significant and vital. Character was no side-issue. It was the crystal fountain from whence flowed all that is great and good. Her convictions were deep and earnest. To her inner vision, no dim, hazy line ever hung nebulously between right and wrong shading them indiscriminately into each other. They were separated by an impassable gulf. In her early girlhood she consecrated her heart to God and her life to the Christian Church. Brought up in a home of Christian piety, and taught and trained in the doctrines of Methodism, it was easy and natural for her to be a Methodist of the purest primitive type. But, like all who are thus trained, she was a Methodist of broad and catholic spirit. Sectarian narrowness found no sympathy in her heart. To be a Christian was not to accept a creed, but to have Christ formed in the heart the hope of glory, and a life surrendered to his holy service and worship. For fourteen years she shared the labors and trials of the Methodist itinerancy. This she did, not reluctantly, but with the willing courage and optimistic joy of a heroine of the cross. It was the true, the ideal life. After the death of her husband when the shadows long and thick fell heavy across her path, she delighted to talk about her experiences in the itinerancy. In her last days she was so engrossed with these reminiscences that even the happy days of childhood seemed to have almost passed from her memory. For two years before her departure, she was almost helpless. Her left side was paralyzed. She had no use of her left hand, her mind was impaired and she suffered a great deal. But amid it all, she remained the same simple, sweet Christian. One day last September, when conversing with her, she showed me this helpless hand and said: "I can't use it at all." "No," I replied, "but it will not be long until you will have two good hands." She looked me straight in the face for a moment and then said: "Who, I? I will soon have two good hands." I said, "Yes, you will soon be in heaven and will have two good hands." The tears began to course down her cheek and with a ring of triumph and praise she said, "Yes, I will soon be in heaven and will have two good hands." So when the end came it was not a surprise. She was ready, watching, waiting, longing for the coming of Christ and the angel hostmen to hear her over the turbid sea into the Paradise of God. There with her sainted husband and the spraying fountains of eternal joy and beneath the waving branches of the ambrosial tree of life, she is anxiously looking across the jasper sea for the home-coming of the loved ones left behind. May God bless and keep them until that happy day. Her pastor, D. M. GEDDIE. The Arkansas Methodist will please copy.

Easy to have prevented, but impossible to cure. Every parent has a great responsibility in the medical care of the members of the household, not to mention the domestic animals. Those who have used "Gray's Ointment" rely upon it implicitly in cases of festering wounds and cuts, bruises, burns, old sores, chronic ulcers, carbuncles, boils, bone felons, sprains, poison oak and all inflammations. Get a 25c. box at your druggist's, or if you have never used it send for small sample box which we gladly send free, postpaid, to demonstrate our claim that no medicine shelf is complete without it. Headache?

Want to know the quickest and best way to stop it? Take

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills.

They are the best because they do not leave any disagreeable after-effects. Just simply quiet the nerve irritation which causes the distress. What is equally important they do not derange the stomach—only a pleasurable sense of relief follows their use.

"I am in fairly good health, but subject to frequent heavy, cloudy head, and occasionally dull pain. I get relief with one or two of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They are very beneficial to me and I do not like to be without them." D. F. LEWIS, Cleveland, O.

The first package will benefit; if not, your druggist will return your money.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special, curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 20, 1910.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

Temperance Lesson. Matt. vii:1-12.

Golden Text: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. vii:12.

During all this long discourse our Lord must have had an attentive audience, for he had just been speaking of things very practical; of clothes, of food, and of how much care should he bestowed upon such things; and now he begins to tell them how they must conduct themselves toward their friends and neighbors, or toward any that should meet them in their various callings, or in their homes. He sets forth the danger of forming a hasty opinion, or estimate of character, of others, lest the same spirit of fault-finding be set in motion only to rest upon him who made the first digression. This admonition was for all, and there were those that were nearest to him, that could hear him best and had learned that what he said was always to be stored away in the mind that its full meaning could be studied out, or failing in that, they could appeal to him for further light; these were the future heads and pillars of his Church, and many a weak brother were they to admit to fellowship, and that too without judging. The Captain of our Salvation thus even wields the two-edged sword: protecting the weak one that is doing the best he can; and in defense striking a vulnerable part of the stony heart of him who is devoid of Christian charity.

All generations can attest to the truth that a man can measure for himself the treatment he is to receive from his fellows, by the manner in which he treats them. Then follows the query as to how our vision is so clear as to see a mote in our brother's eye when if we would only look inward, behold, we would find a great heath, that prevents a clear sight, if we would cast out the mote for our brother. Casting out the mote under these conditions, our Lord says, is the act of a hypocrite. A man must get himself right with God before he can do acceptable service for him. The Christian worker sometimes comes in contact with haters of all that is good; men who are ever ready with some scornful retort, or with some irrelevant question calculated to provoke fruitless argument; such cannot appreciate the sacredness of gospel appeal. What is more, they would trample the pearl of great price under their feet, and turn upon the servant of God with some blasphemy that would rend the tender nature that is ready to do them good. This is the time the Christian must have his armour on, the whole armour of God, and he must stand, for Satan shoots his fiery darts from the tongue of the wicked.

The follower of Christ so loves his Leader and Savior, that it seems a matter of wonder how a man can stand up before all and use such stout and vehement words against him. It seems so unreasonable, so fool-hardy, that it produces impatience and perhaps anger, and the Christian must be on his guard, lest an unkind rejoinder would drive away him whom he seeks to save. Let only sorrow abide in thy heart, sorrow that men can be so hardened as to reject so precious a gift. Some day, and somewhere, the mighty power of God's spirit may bring them to repentance. It is at such times as these that we long to go to that place of secret prayer and ask for comfort, ask for mercy; our whole soul going out in one great pleading prayer. Jesus knows how hard it is to reach the scornful, and he knows that his servants often feel that they have suffered defeat, and then we must ask for strength, and we shall receive it. We must pray and not faint; seek a clearer knowledge of God's will, seek it in his Word guided by his spirit, and we will certainly find it; knock, the door is not closed to the child; knock, for the Father is within and wants his children very close to him. He will open unto them. Is there a wayward, wandering sheep of the flock that fears to ask? One whose sense of unworthiness prevents him from seeking? One who says "He will not open to me." "I have strayed away too far and too often; I must not knock, for if the door should open I am not fit to enter." Listen, O fearful heart, O penitent one; it is to you that the loving Savior calls: "For every one that asketh receiveth. Every one that seeketh findeth, and to every one that knocketh it shall be opened." Remember God is the ever-loving Father; if our child should cry to us for food how swiftly, how eagerly would we satisfy it. We love our children, but not with such love as the Heavenly Father loves us; but if our imperfect love impels us to care for our children, how much more shall our Father in heaven give good things to his children who ask him? The great Preacher is now approaching the end of his great sermon. In reviewing the discourse we see that it has been divided into sections with a "Therefore" for a division mark. There are but two more "Therefore's" to consider. This lesson comprises one of these sections and ends as the others. Therefore: as it has been set forth that when we judge or condemn others, we invite the same harsh criticism toward ourselves; as we discover some slight imperfection in others, behold a great beam which obscures our vision and prevents our seeing some virtue they may possess; as we have seen that seeing others' faults and being unmindful of our own, is the work of a hypocrite. Therefore, as we have learned that discretion must be used in Christian work; that God's holy work is for the earnest enquirer, and not for the scoffer; as our every petition will be heard and answered by him who hath said, "He shall call upon me and I will answer him, I will be with him in trouble." As our Father watches over us with greater care than we watch over our children; therefore, after having learned these glorious truths; all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

By Rev. T. B. Clifford.

The Mississippi Convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement was held in Jackson, Miss., Feb. 8-10, and was without doubt the most significant meeting ever held within the bounds of the State. It was a gathering of the men of Mississippi to consider the King's business in the light of the world's need and of the adequacy of our resources in men and means to meet that need. To formulate a plan by which our generation may make the sceptre of his righteousness to reign throughout the nations and the sway of his peace to pervade the earth.

This convention was a part of a national campaign in which meetings are to be held in about seventy important cities in the United States. When all these meetings have been held there is to be as a culminating feature of the campaign, a National Missionary Congress in Chicago in May, 1910, at which it is planned to have five thousand or more of the representative men of America. The Jackson convention was one of the best organized and most enthusiastic meetings yet held. This was the testimony of some of the speakers who have attended a number of the conventions already held. Dr. Samuel B. Capen, of Boston, told this scribe that it was "the best" he had thus far attended.

For many weeks the State Executive Committee at Jackson had labored diligently to furnish information and stir up enthusiasm throughout the State. Union services and rallies were held in many towns addressed by prominent laymen and the Executive Secretary, Mr. S. R. Whitten, worked unceasingly to bring to Jackson a large delegation from all parts of the State, and these efforts were rewarded in the registration of nearly one thousand men during the days of this great convention.

The singing was led by Mr. William A. Evans, a prominent young business man of Cincinnati, who volunteered his services and who by his own singing and genial manner in directing the vast throng won the love and admiration of the convention.

It was a matter of great disappointment that by reason of physical indisposition, Mr. J. Campbell White, and Col. E. W. Halford, of New York, and Mr. T. H. Yun, of Korea, were prevented from filling their places on the program.

It would be a lengthy task to undertake to give even a synopsis of the addresses delivered or an account of the men who delivered them. Perhaps the most thrilling talk made during the convention was that of Mr. Willis R. Hotchkiss, of Lumbwa, Bristol, East Africa, a missionary from the Quakers (Friends), who has labored fourteen years in that far-off land. Those who were fortunate enough to hear him will no longer doubt (if they ever doubted) that the days of miracles have not passed, or that the gospel is unable to reach and save the least and lowest of the race.

During the closing day of the convention, denominational rallies were held, at which plans were laid for a quickening of the missionary conscience of all the people in the respective churches and for developing a larger liberality in providing the means to send the gospel to those who yet sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

Well did Mr. Williams, that distinguished laymen from New York, say in his opening address that no man could go back home to his business from these meetings and be quite the same man he was before. With an awakened conscience, and an enlarged horizon, there will come a changed life that will mean new obligations and new duties to perform. We feel confident that all the churches of all denominations in Mississippi will feel the influence of this notable gathering so recently held in the capital city of the State.

GIPSY SMITH'S AMERICAN TOUR CLOSED.

Gipsy Smith has returned to England. His campaign at Cincinnati closed his current American work. It is stated that the Free Church Council of England, to whose direction the Gipsy makes himself subject, has mapped out for him a campaign of five years' duration in British cities. On the other hand the churches of Portland, Oregon, are working hard to secure the evangelist as a leader for a great mission in that city next winter or the winter following. Which influence will finally determine his movements cannot of course be predicted now. The Cincinnati meetings were held in Music Hall, and were constantly attended by great throngs. As in Chicago no attempt was made to enumerate converts, and as in Chicago many warm sympathizers felt, that the most telling effect of the Gipsy's preaching was the intensification of the evangelistic spirit among the members of the churches. The local committee refused to consider at all the idea of a march through the district of vicious resorts, and in consequence no contention or criticism attended any portion of the campaign. The churches are laboring diligently to conserve results of the Gipsy's work.—The Methodist Review.

IN THE MARCH CENTURY

Oscar King Davis has written of "Big Business" and the Sherman Law" for the March Century. It is an authoritative and helpful discussion of the question; nevertheless, it is said that Mr. Davis finds that it has a humorous side.

Louise Forsslund's book, "Old Lady Number 31," has just been printed for the sixth time. Miss Forsslund (who is Mrs. Waddell in private life) has a story in the March Century, with the title "Amén Petticoats." It is a tale of the American Dutch on Long Island.

PRAYER.

Prayer is not only asking, communing, and expressing life; it is also readiness to receive life. Listening to God is as truly prayer as speaking to him. "Be still, and know that I am God"—this also is prayer. Savonarola said that, in his time, the saints were so busy talking to God that they had no time to listen to him. In our time there is danger that the saints will be so busy serving that they have no time to listen. Perhaps one reason why we do not get more answers to our prayers is that we do not wait in a quiet, receptive mood to learn the answer.—Lyman Abbott, in the North American Review.

BIBLES IN HOTELS.

The Gideons' constitute an organization that seeks to have a copy of the Bible placed in each room in every hotel in the United States. The Hotel Victoria believes in the Christianizing influence of the Bible. The first thing an arrival will see when he enters his room is a medium-sized and nicely bound copy of the New Testament lying on the table. "It is the funniest thing in the world," said the pretty Irish maid, "to see how the different ones are affected by the unexpected appearance of the Good Book. Some take it up and look it over with the greatest interest, as though it might be the first one ever seen. Others slam it in a bureau drawer or on the top shelf of a wardrobe and leave it there. One man, a rich manufacturer from out of town, rang his bell furiously, and when I answered it with extra towels, thinking that would be the only thing he would ring my bell for, he thrust the Bible in my hands and roared out: 'Do you think I'm a bloomin' heathen in need of sermons?' Women take more kindly to finding the Bible in hotel rooms, but the traveling public, as a rule, seems more familiar with current literature than with the New or Old Testament.—Harriet Quimby, in Leslie's Weekly.

REMARKABLE TREATMENT.

Almost miraculous cures of persons affected with the opium, morphine and whisky habit are being accomplished daily by Dr. Woolley, of Atlanta, Ga. For over a quarter of a century Dr. Woolley's cure for the drug habit has been in the public eye. Dr. Woolley's treatment is harmless and absolutely removes the desire for opiates and stimulants. This feature no doubt appeals with considerable force to those who fear their craving will remain unsatisfied after they put themselves under Dr. Woolley's care. He will send you his book on these diseases free.

Editorial.

Many have lost devotion, while they sought to search into things too high.—Thomas a Kempis.

Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone.
Save thou a soul, and it shall save thine own.
—Whittier.

The Church of England has been called the Church of missed opportunities. Let us not by our worldliness and inactivity make it possible for the future historian to apply the same phrase to Methodism. By every token, in this swift moving age we need to be up and doing.

One frequently hears the question: "What harm is there in cards, the theater or the dance?" A more pertinent inquiry would be: "What good is there in them?" Life is too brief to be trifling with things that possess no utility. Mere harmlessness, even if it could be proven, would be a poor recommendation for any practice. We should have to do only with the things that are worth while.

To pray effectually is no easy task. It requires heart-searching and agonizing of the soul such as but few are willing to undergo. To far too great an extent the supplication of the saints has been interrupted by the busy activities of modern life. In all ages the closets of prayer have been the "power-houses" of the Church, and their abandonment must necessarily result in an enfeebled and impotent Christianity. John Wesley, the most laborious worker since apostolic times, allowed nothing to encroach upon his two hours of daily Bible reading and devotion. And therein lay much of the secret of his mighty power. Our Lord himself spent much time apart in communion with the Father. We are not sure but that the greatest need of our day is men and women who know how to prevail at the Throne of Grace.

To undertake to enlarge woman's sphere is to attempt the impossible. The fields already open to her are limitless in their sweep and the loftiest known on earth. The influences which radiate from the home are more far reaching than those which go out from kingly thrones. The opportunity to teach and train childhood is wider in its possibilities than any that politics, or science, or literature, or even seats in ecclesiastical assemblies could bring. The most potent human influence in the world is the mother's touch. Speaking of himself, John Randolph, of Roanoke, the brilliant American statesman, said: "I should have been an atheist if it had not been for one recollection, and that was the memory of the time when my departed mother used to take my little hand in hers, and cause me on my knees to say, 'Our Father who art in Heaven!'" Would Methodism or humanity be better off with the children left in the care of nurses, and the mothers away for days and weeks at the Annual or General Conference? For our part, we certainly do not think so.

BEARING FRUIT.

In his farewell address to the sorrowing disciples, Jesus said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." As the vine laden with the purple clusters delights the husbandman, so God is pleased with the Christian whose inner disposition is adorned with the spiritual graces, and whose outward life is rich in good works. To be a worthy follower of Christ, one must both be good and do good. He must strive for the perfection of his own character and the enrichment and ennoblement of the lives of his fellowmen. He must neglect neither the inner, nor the outer realm. Within the soul he must develop gentleness, patience, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love, and into the needy world without, he must crowd all the helpful activities of which he is capable. The fruitage of personal holiness and a devoted and unselfish service, are what our Lord wants, and we should see that he is not disappointed. Lamentable, indeed, will be the condition of the disciple who stands before the Master in the day of judgment bringing with him nothing but the leaves of an empty profession. And even in the present life neglect often brings regretful memories and the agony of remorse. Pathetic and tremendous in their significance, are the lines penned by brilliant Helen Hunt Jackson, who had wasted no little of her life, when the shadow of the eternal world was falling full upon her:

"Father, I scarcely dare to pray
So clear I see, now it is done.
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun.
So clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless, were a sin.
So clear I see that I have sought
Unconscious, selfish aims to win.
So clear I see that I have hurt
The souls I might have helped to save.
That I have slothful been, inert,
Deaf to the calls thy leaders gave.
Father, in outskirts of thy kingdom vast,
The humblest spot give me;
Set me the lowliest task thou hast,
Let me, repentant, work for thee."

THE METHODIST CHURCH.

Of all the Protestant religious organizations in America, the Methodist Church is easily in the lead. She has a membership considerably larger than that of any other denomination, and in the amount of property owned and extent of influence, she stands almost without a rival. Every passing day witnesses the erection of nearly a half-dozen Methodist houses of worship in the United States alone, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean there is scarcely a community where the followers of Wesley may not be found. The leading university of the South—Vanderbilt—is a Methodist institution, and our Publishing House is the largest this side of Mason and Dixon's line. In piety, learning and eloquence, our ministry will compare favorably with that of any other denomination, and no other church has a more intelligent and capable laity.

Nor are the influences which have made Methodism great difficult to discover. Her doctrines have had much to do with her marvelous progress. She has stood for a universal atonement, until her teaching has broadened the theology of the world. Her affirmation of the freedom of the human will has become the accepted tenet of modern moral philosophy. Her insistence upon a conscious salvation is both reasonable and scriptural, and the high standard of Christian attainment to which she has summoned her followers has made them everywhere famous for their piety and devotion.

Her admirable form of government has likewise contributed to her phenomenal growth. Some find fault with what they are pleased to term its despotism, but as an evangelical agency it has never been surpassed, if equaled. While the congregational churches have a vast array of idle ministers and practically one-third of their churches unsupplied all the time, Methodism in all her vast domain from sea to sea has not a single charge without a pastor, or a single pastor without a charge.

Her cosmopolitan spirit has also been an important factor in the making of Methodism. She has kept close to the masses of the people. She has felt herself a debtor to all mankind. Her vision of service has embraced alike white and black, rich and poor, the great city by the sea and the pioneer settlement in the far wilderness. Like her illustrious founder, the world has ever been her prospective parish, and neither mountains high nor oceans wide have been able to stay her mighty march of conquest. Even the Pope himself has publicly certified to the fact that she is now a force that must be reckoned with in the Imperial City of the Caesars.

A worthy Methodist need not hang his head in any religious company. Others may boast of belonging to organizations of greater antiquity, but a glorious present is better than any past. The manifest endorsement of God to-day is a diviner credential than a traditional connection with any ascended saint. There is nothing more pitiable than a degenerate posterity which can boast of naught but the glory of illustrious fathers, whose spirit they have lost and whose names they are unworthy to bear.

THE WORST POVERTY.

Pitifully poor is the man without Christ. He may have the wealth, honors, and pleasures of the world, but they cannot feed or satisfy the immortal soul. They cannot hush the accusing voice of conscience, or keep back the waves of sorrow, or stay the ravages of fast-fleeting time, or barricade the approach of death. An unchristian life shuts one out from that which is highest and best here, and promises nothing in the hereafter. It makes man an orphan in time and outcast in eternity. It leaves him a wreck in outer darkness, with no star to herald the coming of another day.

The proper measure of a sermon is its helpfulness. Theological and scientific speculation should have no place in the pulpit. It is the gospel of Christ alone which has power to transform and save.

THE TRUTH IN LOVE.

By Rev. John T. Sawyer, D.D.

A God-made preacher stood in his place
One beautiful Sabbath day,
And, after a hymn of praise was sung,
Reverently knelt to pray.

So earnest, child-like and full of faith
Were the words he spoke in prayer,
That all who thus heard him talk to God
Felt it was good to be there.

In his lack of wisdom, strength and light,
He asked for aid from above,
That the clear-cut truth might reach dead souls,
As he gave it forth in love.

His prayer ended, and the lessons read,
He urged the people to sing,
And so they did, with fervor of love
For Jesus, their rightful King.

As he read his text—his hearers knew
That the Lord was in that place,
And had sent a message unto them—
It glowed in his servant's face.

His text was found in the thir'd of John,
Christ's answer given to one
Who came by night in search of the light,
Asking the thing to be done.

He pictured forth the natural man
In the burning words of truth,
As being dead in trespass and sin—
And held up themselves in proof.

Conceived and born in sin, said he,
Like sheep you have gone astray:
And, unless your nature has been changed,
You dwell in your sins to-day.

No church-dogma, nor merit, nor works,
Can bring you the change you need—
Nothing of man, nor the will of man,
Can do for your soul the deed.

"Ye must be born again," said the Lord,
And such is his word to you;
Born of the Spirit, a man is made
In heart and in nature new.

To live in sin, to die unrenowned,
Is to make your bed in hell—
Thus faithfully spake the man of God:
Then, of Christ began to tell.

He preached a Redeemer crucified,
The uttermost Savior, He,
Whose death had purchased life most full,
And to every seeker, free.

In honest, nervous and heart-warm words,
He beseeched them not to wait,
But to seek at once God's saving grace—
To-morrow might be too late.

He called the wounded, sin-sick souls,
If any such souls were there—
To press right up to the mercy-seat,
And engage with him in prayer.

The mourners crowded the altar-place,
And so did the Christians, too—
The mourners to seek God's blessing rich,
The Christians to help them through.

Fit scene for angels to gaze upon,
And angels no doubt were there—
Greater than new worlds rolled into space—
Were God's answers given in prayer.

Many received full pardon and peace,
Many were born from above—
'Twas God's own seal to the faithful man,
Who had preached His Truth in Love,
February, 1910.

"KNOWLEDGE IS POWER."

By Rev. J. T. Lewis.

The above expression is doubtless very familiar to all who will read this article. However, it does not necessarily follow that all who have knowledge are "powerful." The fact is, whether knowledge is power, and to what extent it is power, depends almost wholly upon the particular person who happens to possess the knowledge. Many persons possess knowledge that lies as a latent force in their minds. Of course, it does not take a sage to know that all such knowledge is really worthless. If knowledge is not transformed into power by the will of the individual who possesses it, then, so far as real worth is concerned, the individual had as well have a blank mind as to have one filled with information. It is true, of course, that it is the individual "who knows" that does things. Or to put it more strikingly, the individual "who does things" must first know.

In view of the foregoing, I think it will not be amiss for us to ask, and seek to answer the question: "What should a minister of the gospel know?" I will seek to answer that question under three heads: (1) A minister should know God; (2) he should know the Bible; (3) he should know human nature.

First—A minister of the gospel should know God. And, at once, methinks I hear some one say: "Certainly, he should know God; he isn't capable of preaching unless he does know God." Exactly so. Still it is a fact that there have always been, are now, and ever will be men who are preaching, who do not know God. And yet these same men know much about God. They know something of his omnipotence, of his omniscience, and of his omnipresence, and can talk for hours, holding their audiences spell-bound while they discourse upon the great wonders of the Almighty; but, with all their vast knowledge about God, they do not know him.

Now to be a minister of God, one should first know him as a sin-pardoning God; then as a keeper of our souls and bodies from sin; and last, though not least, he should know him as a loving Heavenly Father, who wills not that any should perish, but that all might be saved. There was a time when men knew God as a tyrant, who delighted in punishing human beings. That conception of God, under Christ, is unthinkable; still there are men to-day who thus know God. They misjudge God, and, of course, when they preach his word, they necessarily misrepresent God to a dying world. God can be known in all the richness and fullness of his saving power and love, but none know him thus except those who deny themselves daily and follow after him. To sit beneath the instruction of one who really knows God as a pardoning, keeping and loving Heavenly Father, is to listen to a message from the heart of God. As one who thus knows God preaches to us, "our hearts burn within us," and we feel that "he is near." O grant to us who preach thy Word that living knowledge of Thee!

Second—A minister should know the Bible. Of course, he accepts and uses the Bible as the means by which God has revealed himself to the human family, but he should not think that God is shut up to that one means of speaking to man. We can read a lesson from God in any department of nature, if our hearts are but attuned to catch the message as it is spoken to us through nature. However, since it is through the Bible only that the great plan of redemption is revealed, it is all-important that, as ministers, we know the Bible in order to give out the message it contains.

In our arduous and painstaking study of the Bible, we may find some chaff that has come down to us incident to the various translations, the fallibility of man, to whom the message has been intrusted, etc.; but, as wise shepherds of the flock, we should studiously lay the chaff aside, while we diligently feed pure wheat to the flock.

Certainly, we need to read and study other books, but the Bible is the one great Book of earth, and it is our business, as ministers, to know that Book. For centuries the forces of hell have been trying to undermine the authority of that Book, but, despite all the attacks of all the ages, God still speaks to a sin-cursed world through the Bible. And as we pore over its pages, the Holy Spirit is by our side, helping us to differentiate between the wheat and the chaff. When one who knows not God views the Bible with a critical eye, Satan is by his side to magnify the importance of the chaff, while he causes the critical one to be blind to the presence of the wheat it contains.

Third—A minister needs to know human nature. Without that knowledge, he can do little toward leading men to Christ. All men cannot be approached upon the same basis. We must study human nature, that thereby we may know the basis of approach to each man whom we would lead to Christ. We must study men, then, and to study them, we must mingle with them, rub up against them, and let them discover the Christ-like heart that throbs within our breast.

To be successful soul winners, it is absolutely necessary that we know God, his Word, and man for whom he died. God grant to this writer (and all others who desire it) the disposition to diligently work, that he may come into the full possession of this three-fold knowledge that should obtain in the hearts and minds of preachers, and then may said knowledge become "powerful" under the leading of God. Amen!

FAIRBANKS AND THE METHODIST ASSOCIATION VS. THE POPE AND BISHOP IRELAND.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman.

When one reads in the secular press the incident which recently occurred in the city of Rome between the Pope and former Vice-President Fairbanks, and Bishop Ireland's comment on the same, he is reminded of that couplet from Erin's homely bard:

O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as others see us!
It would frae monie a blunder free us,

This good Bishop charges that the Methodists are active and pernicious proselyters. While we recognize that there is no argument in a retort, we must suggest that "Physician, heal thyself" is just at this point eminently suggestive. A pastorate of thirty years in communities where the Roman Catholic Church had, or was seeking, a foothold, convinced us that in the art of proselyting they are experts, and scruple at nothing to make a convert from Protestantism to Romanism. The writer has had given to him by inmates of hospitals, pamphlets which were diatribes of the bitterest sort, and in some of which Martin Luther was characterized as the arch-demon of the centuries.

He charges that the Methodists of the holy city take advantage of the poverty of the poor "to impress upon them the value and claims of their religion." It is a known fact among the Protestant ministry that it is among this very class in our cities that the Priest, the Brother and the Sisters of Charity seek to make their gains from the Protestant ranks. If Rome adopts such means in America, why may not Methodism apply the same rule in Rome—that others may see her good works" and profit spiritually as well as physically. The Bishop says again that what he says concerning Methodists does not apply to other denominations in the Eternal City. This recalls an article which fell into my hands some years ago in which a Romanist writing of the churches in Australia said: The Catholic Church has nothing to fear from any of the sects but Methodism. So whether in Rome, old effete Rome, or among the moving, stirring peoples of a new world, Methodism, it seems, is the only menace to the autocracy of that power which would stifle individuality and freedom in the worship of God. Of course, His Highness does, and will continue, to resent any effort which he thinks may interfere with his supreme authority over the consciences and souls of men. Methodism should be proud to acknowledge Mr. Fairbanks as of her fold, and that honorable gentleman may well congratulate himself that he represents so virile and worthy a company as the people called Methodists, whether they be in Rome, Australia or on the frontiers of our own great American Republic.

It is more than likely that the lamented Sam Jones expressed the correct view of the case in that aphorism, "The hill dog howls."

NOTES AND ELSE

By Rev. C. B. Carter.

In January, 1888, at the Conference that met in Shreveport, I, with ten others, of whom only four abide at present—Henderson, Williams, Porter and Denson—was admitted into the Louisiana Conference and assigned to Morgan City and Patterson. That was my first experience as a traveling preacher. Since that time I have been doing as best I could the work that has been assigned me. Ever since those first two years, when I had what we now call a half-station work, I have had every kind of an appointment that falls to the lot of the average preacher. I have had experience sufficient in all works except real circuit work. I only had one circuit, and then station work from then until five years ago, when I was put on a district. To that work I gave myself without stint for four years, and then asked to be released. I liked the work of a presiding elder better than any other work I had hitherto done in the church. There are attractions in it for me which I confess, draw me. I liked it. I never complained of the great burden of the office and its wearing and wearying responsibilities. After the first year, I was presiding elder because I wanted to be, and I delighted in the work.

But, then, there are some things a man cannot do or be when he is in charge of a district (I mean, of course, a man with my limitations); so, when I had served my time, I asked to be relieved.

One of the easiest things for the average man to do is to get into a rut. The hardest thing for the average man to do is to get out of a rut. Now, "rut" is only another name for habit. The thing from which I, and the whole Church, have suffered unspeakable and innumerable ills is the habitual, the perfunctory presiding elder. We have them now, have ever had them, and will ever have them, I guess—presiding elders whose being has never been justified by them, nor their makers.

One of the most useful pieces in the mechanism of Methodism is the quarterly conference; yet, without an effort, it can be made the capital of Boredom: its king, "The Same Old Six and Seven." One of the things I should like to know, among a great many, is, how often has that title been given to some elders and to how many it has been applied.

There is one thing about the eldership for which I blame my predecessors in that great and honorable office—that is, its distance from the people in the church. It's there; no mistake about that. There seems to be a "great gulf fixed" between him and them. There is scarcely any fellowship between the laity and him, and you might say, no sympathy. What is its cause? And does not the real opposition to this office and its holders grow out of this fact? To overcome that sense of distance from my various officials was one of the hardest tasks I had; and I can say for that large body of loyal laymen with whom it was my privilege to be associated for four years, that there came to be no such sense, and they each simply recognized in me a co-worker in the kingdom. The remembrance of those associations and friends in the kingdom of God is to-day the best heritage that those years have left; their friendship and association is not the smallest contribution to my life.

But when you have said this you do not feel you have a people; you are, in a sense, cognizant that you are more responsible for the district, as a whole, than for any particular part. And the temptation comes to the elder, like it comes to every one in every walk of life, to lose the man in the mass. The great mistake of every propaganda, merely human, has been, and still is, its effort to reach the masses. The only propagandist who will ever reach the mass is he who can reach the man. If you cannot reach a man, you will not be any more useful, no matter how big the crowd. This is a human infirmity; this continual restlessness in reaching round for the mass. Some are so mass-mad that the man escapes their notice altogether.

The most interesting thing in the world to me are folk—just your plain, common, blunt, every-day folk, without the many additions incident to present-day, highly-organized society. I don't like artificials, either in men or flowers. I don't like imitations, either in women or other jewels. So, after five years, I am again in charge of a people—and a most pleasant people, too. This is the first time I was ever east of the Ouachita River, and I am agreeably impressed, both with the country and the people.

After many years, I again have a half-station work, Collinston being with it. Here, I am in the midst of childhood acquaintances and friends for the first time since those long-gone days. It is certainly pleasant to renew the friendships of the past and to pass in review the incidents of childhood's careless days. I know I will be able at the annual review, when my name is called to repeat the time-honored phrase which every new bishop seems called upon to criticize, "had a good year, Bishop?" for it began when I got here and has continued so, and will continue. Much kindness has been shown me, also much appreciation. All this is pleasant to me.

I found things in good order and my predecessor in high favor with these good people; and I only had to take up where he left off. The work is opening up well, and prospects for doing something are good. Some work has been begun, and more will be inaugurated. I am exceedingly fortunate in having with me this year the good woman who made such a success of the juvenile work at Ruston in 1908; so, I am expecting good results in this department. One section has been organized, and another will be next Sunday. Our Sunday schools are doing well. One feature is very promising, and that is the adult Bible class. This is an organization that will benefit any school anywhere. The longer I am in the work of the Church, the more the conviction becomes firm, and is now almost set, that the graded, organized Sunday school is the best possible aid to our Church. I have yet to see anything that has been permanently and profitably substituted therefor.

AN IRENIC ON THE ORDER OF WORSHIP.

By J. E. Harrison, President San Antonio Female College.

When I was pastor of West End Church, Nashville, Tenn., I preached a sermon on Christian Perfection. Bishop McTyeire sat in the pulpit and concluded for me. The first words of his exhortation were, "Brother Harrison has given us an irenic sermon on a controverted subject." So let this be.

Some days ago I began the big task of sending to each pastor of the M. E. Church, South, a letter of inquiry concerning the Order of Worship for which I sought to get his opinion without arguing the question.

Before I have mailed letters to all the brethren a large number have responded on both sides of the question.

In reading these replies to my enquiry I have been impressed with the brotherliness of spirit manifested.

A large majority, 3 to 1, of those answering, desire to restore the order of worship as it was in the Discipline of 1902, while many of our best men feel that it is for the good of particular churches to use the new order, but all admit that the new order can not be used generally in our churches. Men in the highest positions, editors, presiding elders of city districts and pastors in important city charges, wish the old order, while men in equally important positions wish the new. The difficulty in the case lies here.

The creed and the gloria patri having a place in the Order of Worship in our Book of Discipline, although in brackets with a foot-note giving permission to omit, carry a moral authority and command which embarrass those pastors who do not think it helpful to Methodism to put them into the regular Sunday worship.

Many of the brethren on the other side indicate that the main feature of the new order, as they see it, is the liberty allowed the pastor. It seems to me, therefore, that we may get together on this question and give to each party what is desired without harm to any interests of our beloved church, by agreeing:

(1) That the Discipline shall give each pastor the liberty of adjusting the Order of Worship to the needs of his church.

(2) That the Apostle's Creed and the gloria patri shall not appear in the Order of Worship set forth in the Discipline.

Agreement number one allows any pastor to use the creed or the gloria, or both, when he sees proper to do so; and agreement number two relieves the embarrassment of the pastor who has the very laudable desire to do whatever his church suggests, and yet is unwilling to use the creed and the gloria in the regular preaching service.

Don't you think these two agreements constitute an irenic settlement of the question?

EXPLANATORY.

Dear Brother Meek: I am appreciative of the statements from Miss Tate relative to the Blue Mountain Church.

After some time residence in Blue Mountain, Miss Tate is in a position to know of things there, and specially of the new church. No glory should be detracted from the pastor, Rev. J. H. Bass, and the heroic little band of Methodists who built it. My own poor services were only preliminary in the smallest sense, and had little to do, I am sure, with the splendid results at a later time achieved.

My statements, as printed very innocently in the Advocate by Dr. Boswell, were not intended for publication, but only to correct the impression gotten by Dr. Boswell to the effect that the "Methodists had been upon the ground less than a year."

I thank Miss Tate for the write-up of the situation, and trust for much prosperity to all interests of that progressive location.

Secular News and Comment

On Tuesday of Mardi-Gras week the street cars of the city took in $20,000 in cash fares. This is the largest business ever done by them in a single day.

The Vicksburg American, unable to cope with the adverse financial conditions encountered, has suspended publication. It had been regularly issued in that city for nine years.

King Gustave, of Sweden, was operated on for appendicitis on February 5, and is reported to be making satisfactory progress toward recovery. This popular disease apparently makes no discrimination. It invades alike both the hovel and palace.

The Russian Government, through her ambassador, Baron Rosen, has presented to the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital of this city a vase, as an expression of appreciation of the services rendered Russians at that institution. The gift has not yet arrived, but has been forwarded and will be received in a few days.

On Sunday, Feb. 6, the naval tug Nina left Norfolk in the face of a threatening gale for the Charleston navy yard. She was last seen that morning breasting the tempest off Cape Henry, and nothing has been heard of her since. The conviction is now general that she was wrecked, and that all of her crew of thirty-two were lost.

Hon. William Hodges Mann, the lately elected Governor of Virginia, was inaugurated on February 1. He was a gallant Confederate soldier, is a lawyer of recognized attainments, a legislator who has wrought well for his State, and, best of all, a man of uprightness and Christian character. His inaugural address has been highly commended by the press. The Old Dominion is, indeed, fortunate in having such a Chief Executive.

On the 14th inst., Senator Bailey, of Texas, addressed the Legislature of South Carolina in advocacy of the ratification of the income tax amendment to the Federal Constitution. He contended that without such a tax tariff reduction of a substantial character would be impossible, even under a Democratic administration. Mr. Bailey is one of the greatest platform speakers in America, and was accorded an enthusiastic reception by the Carolinians.

The year just passed was a most active one at the New Orleans Charity Hospital. The daily average of patients in the various wards was 797, and the total thus treated during the year was 10,358. The accident cases numbered 7,992, and the "out-door patients" ministered to, 17,443, thus making the grand total of patients 36,000 in round numbers. The expenses of the institution slightly exceeded the incoming revenues. Two new buildings are said to be urgently needed—a larger laundry and an isolation building.

On February 15, 1898, the battleship Maine was blown up in the Havana harbor. The anniversary of the tragic and memorable occurrence, which perhaps more than any other one thing brought on the Spanish-American War, was observed a few days since. Appropriate exercises were held in Havana, New York, and at Arlington National Cemetery, in Virginia. At the latter place the recovered bodies of 160 victims of the disaster are buried, and their graves were profusely garlanded with flowers.

The estimated population for 1909 of the six largest cities in the world is as follows: London, 7,452,986; New York, 4,564,792; Paris, 2,792,988; Chicago, 2,224,490; Berlin, 2,164,944; Vienna, 2,100,356. The average annual increase of these places is reported as follows: New York, 125,287; London, 109,046; Chicago, 58,435; Vienna, 50,222; Berlin, 31,199; Paris, 9,865. At this rate of growth it is figured out that in fifty years London will have a population of 13, 000,000; New York, 11,000,000; Chicago, 5,000,000; and Vienna, 4,500,000. Beyond any question, the problem of city evangelization is a pressing and a growing one. Unless the vast hordes in these congested centers can be educated and Christianized, they will become a serious menace to modern civilization.

Some time ago it was announced that no summer school for teachers would be held in New Orleans this year, as has been customary; but in response to the efforts of the mayor of the city and others interested, the State Institute Board has rescinded its former action and will arrange for the usual summer normal here. The length of the school, however, has been reduced from nine to six weeks, and the city will be required to contribute $2,000 toward its maintenance.

Senator Heyburn, of Idaho, recently subjected himself to severe censure by a bitter speech delivered in the Senate against authorizing a loan of government tents to the Confederate veterans at their annual reunion in Mobile, Ala., next April. No reply was made to his unprovoked diatribe, and when the vote was taken it was found that he stood absolutely alone. A more severe rebuke than this could not possibly have been administered. It will be a happy day for the nation when the "fire-eater," both in the North and the South, has become a thing of the past.

Oral hygiene is now reckoned to be an important factor in the prevention of germ diseases, tuberculosis among the number. Poor teeth are said to contribute materially to the communication of many maladies, and the National Dental Association will address itself to the task of diffusing information on this important subject. The committee for the Southern branch of that organization has been in session in New Orleans for several days, devising ways and means to accomplish the end in view. Plans were adopted for the establishment of an oral hygiene headquarters in every State, and it was also decided to conduct a free oral hygiene clinic in the public schools of the five largest cities of the South.

The following are said to be the amounts appropriated by the several Southern States for pensioning the needy Confederate soldiers within their bounds: Florida, $950,000; Georgia, $950,000; Virginia, $600,000; Texas, $500,000; Arkansas, $465,000; Tennessee, $450,000; Alabama, $400,000; North Carolina, $400,000; Mississippi, $300,000; Louisiana, $250,000; South Carolina, no report. Senator Vance, of Panola County, is endeavoring to have the Mississippi Legislature increase the appropriation in that State from $300,000 to $400,000, but the press dispatches say that it is doubtful whether he will succeed in doing so. We sincerely hope that he may. By indirect taxation the Federal Government makes us contribute to the support of the Union soldiers, and surely we should be willing to provide modestly for the indigent ones among those who imperiled their lives in defense of the South in "the days that tried men's souls." Not one who wore the gray should be allowed to suffer from penury in his old age.

A bill has been introduced in the State Senate of Mississippi providing for the submission to the people of an amendment to the Constitution increasing the number of supreme judges from three to five. There seems to be little division of sentiment as to the desirableness of this increase, but the measure is not certain to be adopted, for the reason that many favor the calling of a constitutional convention and they think that submitting separate amendments would tend to weaken their advocacy of such an assemblage. It seems to us that if the needed changes in the organic law of the State can be secured without calling a constitutional convention, that it is the wiser course to pursue, since such a convention would cost an enormous sum of money, and there is always more or less risk in re-writing the Constitution of a commonwealth. Whether Mississippi has at present among her sons one who is equal to the task of doing over again the work of her great constructive lawyer and statesman, James Z. George, is, we think, a matter of very grave doubt.

You don't get it when you buy loose or bulk coffee, or coffee by the pound wrapped up in a paper bag. The least exposure to the air lets strength, aroma and flavor escape—all that makes coffee worth while. You get what is left and you get badly left. If you think you are getting all you pay for, BUY

NEW ORLEANS CHURCH NEWS.

Reported by Rev. A. I. Townsley.

The Rayne Memorial Church is making steady progress in all the departments of work. The men are organized into a Brotherhood and they are expecting to bring things to pass this year. The Sunday school is well organized and is doing better work than ever before. The social and industrial work at the Church House in Laurel Street is attracting large crowds of boys and girls, and the mothers are being helped by the wise counsel of the consecrated deaconess in the Mothers' Club meetings. The pastor, Dr. John A. Rice, is preaching a series of sermons based on a careful scientific study of the Gospel according to Matthew. The theme of this study is "Jesus as Matthew Saw Him." The sermons on the "Epoch-making Characters in the Old Testament" were so popular and awakened such deep interest in the study of that vital portion of the Holy Scriptures, that the pastor was encouraged to attempt a similar series in the study of the New Testament. We know of no man among us who is better prepared to give such a study than is Dr. John A. Rice.

The work on the Parker Memorial Church building is making progress much to the delight of the never-tiring pastor and the faithful members. These good people have labored long and persistently for this house, and they deserve all the sympathy and help that can be given them. The pastor says that his purpose is to make his church a real missionary church. Both the men and the women are already vitally interested in the spread of the gospel abroad. In order that the laymen of the other churches may have the opportunity of seeing the progress on the church building, Parker Memorial has asked for the District Conference to be held on March 31 to April 22.

Rev. Albert S. Lutz, the pastor of Felicity Street Church, took advantage of the Laymen's Missionary Conference and the rising tide of enthusiasm, and secured, in good subscriptions and in cash, the Foreign Mission assessment for his church on last Sunday morning.

The congregation at Epworth is growing so rapidly that the pastor and members are planning for a new building. We understand that plans are now being made by the architect. No church in our city has had the phenomenal growth within the past three years that this church has had. It has one of the finest Epworth Leagues in the city. More than one hundred attend Sunday school every Sabbath, and all the other departments are in prosperous condition.

Dr. F. N. Parker, the presiding elder, reports the work outside the city as prosperous as it is here. He is greatly encouraged with the success of the pastors and of the people. This is his fourth year on the District and we venture to say that there is not a District within the bounds of the Conference that is in better shape than is this. Dr. Parker preaches next Sunday morning at Second Church and in the evening at First Church.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, the efficient superintendent of St. Mark's Hall and the Conference Missionary secretary, purchased a large $10 map of New Orleans and sent it to the Dallas Laymen's Convention. This map was marked so as to show at a glance the several Methodist churches and their respective fields of labor. With this fine map before it, the Laymen's Conference will be able to understand more of our working forces at a glance than they could learn otherwise in an hour's address.

Church News

The Presbyterian of the South, issued at Atlanta, Ga., will publish Dr. DuBois's book, "The Men of Sapiro Ranch," as a serial. This is a nice compliment to the versatile editor of the Epworth Era.

Mr. Luther M. Tesch, field secretary of the World-wide Baraca and Philathia Class Movement, will visit Jackson, Miss., on March 2. All of the organized Sunday school classes in the city will meet at the Second Baptist Church, and Mr. Tesch will address them.

A prominent Southerner, who will not allow his name to be disclosed, has forwarded to the Methodist Training School, at Nashville, a check for $20,000. This is one of the most meritorious and useful institutions in the Church, and we doubt if this generous benefaction could have been more wisely directed.

Following the Laymen's Convention in New Orleans, the Protestant Churches of the city pledged themselves to raise $30,000 for foreign missions during the current year. Most of the denominations agreed to double or treble their contributions of last year, and there was not one which did not promise a substantial increase over its former payment to this cause.

Dr. T. S. Potts, of Memphis, Tenn., has resigned the pastorate of the Central Baptist Church of that city to become General Secretary of the Baptist Tri-State Hospital Association, which is erecting a hospital in Memphis. A wiser selection than that of Dr. Potts could not, in our judgment, have been made. He will carry the enterprise speedily forward to consummation, if any one can do so.

Rev. R. J. Jones is proving himself to be a wide-awake and capable leader on the Jackson (Miss.) District. He has just moved into an $8000 district parsonage, constructed under his superior management, and the chapel of the new mission, lately erected in that city, has largely been carried forward to completion through his energetic efforts. Such men demonstrate conclusively the fact that the presiding eldership is an office affording large possibilities for effective service.

The Orleans-Jefferson Parish Sunday School Association has planned its annual convention for Sunday, Feb. 27, and Monday, Feb. 28, in the Coliseum Place Baptist Church. The sessions will be held Sunday afternoon, and Monday afternoon and night. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock Monday afternoon in the Sunday school rooms by the ladies of the association. This supper is free and all of the workers are urged to attend the afternoon service at 4:30 and remain for the evening service, taking supper in the church building. Those of the workers who cannot come to the afternoon service can come direct from their offices and other places of business to the church and eat supper there.

The New York Christian Advocate observes that next to the Church of England the Wesleyan Methodists are the strongest denominations in Great Britain. It states that for every Roman Catholic voter in England and Wales there are six Methodist voters. The following are some of the Methodist laymen prominent in English politics: Among the Liberals, Lord Wolverhampton, Sir Percy Bunting, Sir Howell Davies, Sir Clarence Smith, and Mr. Runciman; among the Unionists, Sir George Chubb, Sir John Randles, Sir William Stephenson, Sir George Smith, and Mr. E. P. Parkes, M. P.

The annual meeting of the General Board of Education will be held in Nashville, Tenn., March 8-10. In place of its usual Conference on Education, the Board this year by special arrangement will substitute the program of the Religious Education Association, which is to convene in the capital city of Tennessee at the same time. Among the many prominent speakers on that program we note the following: Prof. George A. Coe, of Union Theological Seminary; President W. H. P. Fancee, of Brown University; Prof. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, and President G. B. Stewart, of Auburn Theological Seminary. Among the speakers from our Church are Bishops Hendrix and Atkins, Dr. W. F. Tillett, Dr. H. N. Snyder, Dr. J. H. Kirkland, and Dr. J. D. Hammond.

Bishop McDowell's address at the funeral of Bishop Foss began with these sentences, which ought to put heart into the men all over the land who are giving their lives to the educational work of the Church: "Yesterday, for a half-hour I held in my hands three small, faded, old annual catalogues of a small college in New England. Each issue contained the names of a bare hundred students. But among the names of those students one can read: Gilbert Haven, Edward G. Andrews, Henry W. Warren, Cyrus D. Foss, William X. Nide and Willard F. Mallalieu. We need not repeat familiar history. The recital of these names tells its own impressive story. It tells the story of the value of the Christian college. The argument for the denominational college which these faded old catalogues of Wesleyan present, cannot be answered or overthrown."—New York Christian Advocate.

The Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, contains a statement from Dr. Adna Wright Leonard bearing on the Fairbanks incident, which carries unusual weight because of the fact that he was formerly pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Rome. Among other things, he calls attention to the fact that grandsons and granddaughters of Garibaldi, the Italian Washington, are students in institutions of learning maintained by the Methodist church in Italy. Dr. Leonard affirms that no improper effort is made to proselyte Roman Catholics, but that notwithstanding, many recruits come from that church. He mentions a unique institution, which is maintained by the co-operation of Protestants generally. It is a Priest's Refuge Home, the object of which is to shelter priests and monks who have left the Catholic faith. This institution, he says, is always full to its utmost capacity.

One of the finest Sunday schools in Southern Methodism is that of old McKendree Church, in Nashville, Tenn., of which Mr. E. E. French is the capable superintendent. Its membership at present is 650. The Business Men's Class numbers 176, and is a wonderful organization. "Its motto," says a writer in the Midland Methodist, is, "Do it now," and here is a sample of how they do it: A person mentioned the case of a poor family in extreme want during the cold weather recently. It was learned that this family had no coal, and that there were sick ones in the home. Before night a load of big lump coal was sent to the place where these parties lived. Again, chairs were wanted for a kindergarten in one of the sections of the city where a great many poor people live. The case was presented to the Business Men's Class by a young lady interested in the work. A collection was taken, and the wherewithal raised in less than ten minutes.

WHAT THE METHODISTS HAVE IN ROME AND ITALY.

At this particular time it will be of interest to the Church and the world to know what the equipment of the Methodist Episcopal Church is in Rome and Italy.

Standing on high ground, in one of the best sections of Rome, on a corner of the Via Venti Settenbree, not far from the King's palace, is the central quarters of Methodism in Italy, a building now valued at $225,000, which contains a large audience room for Italian services, an American church, Sunday school room, Epworth League parlors, offices, a book store, a printing plant, and rooms for a Theological School and a Boys' School. In this large building three years ago the great World Sunday School Convention was held, with its delegates from thirty-seven countries. Of the American church, which assembles in this building, the Rev. Dr. Bertrand Tipple, an alumnus of Syracuse University, is pastor. Among other interesting publications that are being produced from the publishing plant in this building is the Evangelical Hymnal recently prepared by a joint commission of the Wesleyan Methodist Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy, the first joint Hymnal to appear in the Italian language. The upper floors of this building are used as class rooms and dormitories for a Boys' School, the Methodist College, of which the Rev. E. B. T. Spencer, formerly in charge of the Department of Latin Language and Literature in Denver University, is principal. Here also the Reader Theological School prepares young men for the work of the Methodist ministry in Italy.

Next to this building in interest is the Crandon Hall of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, situated on the broad Via Veneto. Here two hundred and seventy girls received instruction during the last school year. It has a twelve years' course, from the kindergarten grade to the collegiate. An industrial department has recently been added. It has a faculty of about thirty teachers and an income of several thousand dollars, sufficient to meet current expenses, except the salaries of two missionaries and one assistant. Miss Edith Burt, daughter of Bishop William Burt, is at the head of this institution. Of recent years the school has been outgrowing its old quarters, many pupils being refused admittance for lack of room, and therefore during 1909, the old building was sold at considerable profit and a new property has been bought on which three new buildings are to be erected this year, resulting in a doubling of the capacity of the school. The site of the new Crandon Hall is just outside the Porta Salaria. The ground was formerly a part of the Prince Torlonia estate, known as the Villa Albani. About fourteen hundred young women have come under the influence of this Christian school since its inception. Italians high in authority in the State recognize its paramount position as the foremost school for young women in Italy and are lending their support to its success.

Of another school of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in Rome—the Girls' Home School—Miss Italia Garibaldi, granddaughter of the great Italian patriot, is in charge. Miss Garibaldi is a Methodist and an alumna of the Crandon Institute. The school, of which she is principal, enrolled sixty seven girls in 1909.

The "Isabel Clark Creche," of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, enrolls over one hundred babies, left each day by mothers who go out to work. Kindergarten methods are used. There is religious instruction and a good mid-day meal is given.

Living in Rome is the superintendent of the Mediterranean District of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy, the Rev. N. Walling Clark, D.D., an alumnus of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., who is also president of the Theological School in Rome. His district includes—in addition to Rome—work in Florence and Genoa, as well as in twenty-four smaller places. There are two other districts in the Italy Conference. In the Adriatic District, the Rev. Felice Dardi has the supervision of the work in Milan and Venice, as well as in fourteen other places, including the Italian work in Geneva, Lausanne, Neuchatel, Vevey, and Zurich, in Switzerland. The Rev. Almon W. Greenman, Ph.D., an alumnus of Northwestern University, and of Syracuse University, superintends the work of the Southern District, which includes Naples and fourteen other places of less importance.

In Florence is a Methodist Training School for teachers and evangelists. In Venice is a Boys' Industrial Institute, where about fifty boys are trained in various crafts. At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Baltimore in 1908, a very beautiful carved table made by the boys of this Institute was used by the presiding bishops and at the close of the session was sold for $1,600, the proceeds going to the school at Venice.

In the year 1908, Methodist deaconess' work was opened in Rome, three deaconesses being in charge who have done good work in visiting and nursing the poor, as well as receiving a few patients into the home for treatment. At the time of the earthquake in Southern Italy, two of these deaconesses went to Naples and for several weeks worked day and night for the sufferers. At that time Dr. Clark issued a call for help to the Methodists of America, and the response was prompt, more than $15,000 being sent to Italy through Methodist channels, in addition to Methodist gifts through the Red Cross. Dr. Clark wrote at the time, "As far as our means permit we are also aiding Roman Catholic families in helping to care for the wounded in the hospitals."—The New York Christian Advocate.

REV. J. N. WARE.

The telegram on the morning of Jan. 17, 1910, which informed me of the death of my friend, the Rev. J. N. Ware, came like an unexpected thunder-clap. When he clasped my hand and told me good-by upon my leaving Waynesboro for my new pastoral charge (about three weeks before his death), he was blithe and cheerful, and in better health than in many months. Instead of a telegram announcing his death, I was expecting a letter from him, informing me of his plans, and that he would soon visit me in the parsonage home. We see the living to-day, but to-morrow they pass beyond our sight! Many pass away suddenly without any premonition. His unexpected death doubly impressed me with the uncertainty of life, and that the living, like Guerricus, should hurry home and make immediate preparation for death—even for that journey which Adam and Methuseleh and those who lived nearly a thousand years had to take.

"Through sorrow's night and danger's path,
Amid the deepening gloom,
We, followers of our suffering Lord,
Are marching to the tomb."

Joseph Nicholas Ware, son of Rev. J. B. and M. E. Ware, was born Aug. 6, 1854 in Lincoln County, Ga. He joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1865, when he was eleven years old. He was married to Miss Mary Frances Christopher, Dec. 24, 1874. Ten children came to bless the union, four of whom are still living, viz.: Minnie, Clyde, Claude, and Mrs. Irene M. Alford.

Brother Ware is survived by the following brothers: G. P. Ware, Opelika, Ala.; T. L. Ware, Notasulga, Ala., and W. H. Ware, Edgewood, Tex. Mrs. M. J. Odom, a sister, lives at Harpersville, Miss.

In 1885, at the age of thirty-one, Brother Ware was licensed to preach, and the following year joined the Mississippi Conference which met at Port Gibson. His first pastoral charge was Neshoba Circuit, and his last was Gallman.

He was in the pastorate twenty-three years, and served faithfully the following appointments: Neshoba, one year; Sandersville, two years; Marion, two years; Waynesboro Circuit, three years; Rocky Springs, four years; Camden, two years; Montrose, one year; Providence, four years, and Gallman, two years.

His health became impaired in 1908, and when the Annual Conference met at Yazoo City in the winter of that year, he was placed in the superannuate relation. He moved to Waynesboro, Miss., immediately afterwards, and during the year 1909 lived in the home which had been builded there for any superannuated preacher of the Conference. It was while the writer was pastor at Waynesboro that he saw much of Brother Ware, and learned to love him for his happy, genial spirit, and sterling virtues. Soon after he moved to Waynesboro, he became bed-ridden from concretions formed in the gall-bladder, and it was not until his Waynesboro friends sent him to Mobile, Ala., for an operation that he found any relief. He was a patient sufferer, but came near dying under the operation. He returned from Mobile hopeful of the recovery of his health. He was very anxious to speedily and thoroughly regain his health so that he might again enter active service. He attended the session of the Annual Conference which met last December at Brookhaven, and expressed willingness to take light work, but his brethren thought it expedient for him to rest another year. He yielded to their judgment and returned to the superannuate's home at Waynesboro.

About the tenth of January, he was seized with a severe attack of pneumonia which soon reached both lungs, and Jan. 17, 1909, after a week of intense suffering, his noble spirit passed to the glory land. He was delirious much of the time, but he did not pass away like the wicked who "give no sign." Both in his rational moments and in his delirium, his mind was occupied with things pertaining to the kingdom. Once when perfectly rational, he said: "I have been looking for him, but he has delayed his coming." At a time of delirium, he was heard instructing an inquirer or convincing the doubtful on some point of theology. When his wife apprehended that the end was near she said to him: "Mr. Ware, is Jesus with you?" "Yes," he replied, "he is with me."

Brother Ware did not have the culture or education of some preachers, but he had enough to make himself very useful. He was familiar with the Bible, and loved its pages. He could present divine truth impressively to his hearers. As a preacher, he was scriptural, plain, earnest, and faithful. As a man he was pure-minded and clean. The theme which gave him much delight was the second coming of his Lord. He believed that the times are portentous with signs, even that the Lord will soon return. He preached upon the theme frequently, and took delight in conversing upon the subject socially.

Brother Ware believed greatly in the power of prayer, and often indulged the exercise. Several times he humbly told the writer of victories the Lord gave him in protracted meetings in answer to prayer, and of the Lord's divers visitations to him in his own individual life and personal needs. Some of them were remarkable.

He was a member of the Sunday school at Waynesboro, and sat in the writer's Bible-class. He was never absent except as he was providentially hindered. He came with a studied lesson, and answered the most difficult questions. He was full of energy as a superannuated preacher, and notwithstanding his obesity and bad health, he was very helpful to his pastor. He faithfully attended upon the public means of grace, and was always responsive. Out of his quarterly allowance from the Conference Joint Board of Finance, he contributed regularly to the support of the ministry. He believed in the doctrines of Methodism without the least mental reservation and was happy when preaching truth according to Wesleyan interpretation. There wasn't anything small about the man; weighing nearly 290 pounds in body, his mind and heart were even larger. He was broad-minded, liberal, generous, and charitable, and marveled that any can entertain narrow, bigoted, conceited, exclusive opinions and practices.

The beautiful home life of Brother Ware is also worthy of mention. He was a good husband and father and provided well for home comfort. He enjoyed the confidence of each member of the family circle.

Perhaps it will not be improper at this place to mention "Old Bob," the faithful horse and comrade which survives the kind master, and which carried him for eighteen years of his itinerancy, at least fifty-thousand miles, visiting the people, meeting appointments, and on various missions of mercy. Several times "Old Bob" delivered the preacher when in peril, or carried him out of close dangerous places. While "Old Bob" is left in good hands, he will never again hear his Master's friendly voice, or feel his gentle stroke. The Master proved his righteousness by regarding the life of his beast. The writer rejoices in having known Brother Ware, and in having been associated with him, and will not soon forget his acts of kindness, and words of sympathy and friendship.

As Robert Hall once observed of another, I will not say that I have lost a friend, but rather that I have parted with him. That is properly lost which is past all recovery—which will never be seen again.

Brother Ware has but gone home to his Father's house, and we are merely following him. If we are bowed with sorrow, let us remember that he has entered into rest. He was faithful to his Lord, and in the morning of the resurrection his reward will be the honor of the crowned Christ.

JOHN D. ELLIS

Enterprise, Miss., Feb. 2, 1910.

THE KIND OF PREACHING OUR PEOPLE NEED.

The following paper was read at the recent meeting of the District Stewards of the Winona District, by Mr. P. E. Pegues, of Winona.

First—We would say that we need well prepared, short, concise sermons of twenty-five to thirty-five minutes, thought out from a plain, practical text and expressed in forceful language that every one can understand.

Second—The cardinal points or fundamental principles of our religion—the Commandments—should, in our opinion, be read and commented upon by our ministers oftener, as we fear quite a number of our congregations fail to comprehend the full force of what God expects us to do, and his holy laws are often disregarded, possibly through a failure to fully understand just what they mean.

Third—We believe we cannot be too persistent in our endeavors to get parents more interested in their duties to their children, in teaching them their responsibility to God. The Christian home is the great foundation of the Church, and as the organization is bound to draw its future support from this source, it behooves us to make every effort to keep heads of families interested and active church workers, realizing, as we must, if our children fail to have impressed upon them honest religious principles and ideas during the adolescent stage, the church can mean nothing to them. If we, parents and adult members of the church, are only religious on Sundays, and fail to practice in our homes and daily life the Christian graces, what right have we to expect our children to be religious?

Fourth—If we would have the church a continuous power for good, we must educate our children and young people so they will become true Christian parents, and thus perpetuate and continue to build up the church of the future.

Fifth—We would suggest that the new order of worship be made obligatory or abandoned, as we believe every Methodist Episcopal congregation, South, should use the same form of worship.

Sixth—Avoid long prayers, which are generally repetitions—if not in words, are often so in ideas. We should remember the Pharisee and what the Master said on this subject.

Seventh—Never pray AT your congregations, but always TO God FOR them.

Eighth—Let's try to do away with so much levity in our Sunday school and church worship. We should remember on such occasions that "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him."

Ninth—Don't use slang in your sermons. We know it is expressive, but we fear it has a tendency to weaken rather than strengthen the theme under discussion.

Tenth—These thoughts, selected at random, are not meant as a criticism on our ministry, but in order that if there are weak places in our church organization, they may be repaired and strengthened, so that when Satan assails us at what he might think a vulnerable point, he will find us well fortified and able to vanquish him with Holy Writ, as did our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

It is reported that Dr. Frederic A. Cook, of north pole fame, accompanied by his wife, was in Santiago, Chili, on the 15th inst., and that the Doctor refused to be interviewed. We confess that the last part of the statement makes us somewhat incredulous. It now seems to be almost universally accepted that Cook is a fakir, and that his object in claiming to have reached the pole was to make money by means of the notoriety thus acquired, which he succeeded in doing to a considerable extent. It is expected that Congress will shortly acknowledge Peary's claim of being the true discoverer of the pole by voting him a gold medal, or making him a rear-admiral in the navy.

THE STORY OF DR. MARY AND THE DEAR OLD GRANDMOTHER.

It was raining hard. In her journey through the long gray day Molly Dunn had come to a place which all boys and girls visit now and then, especially on rainy Saturdays. The place is named "I Wonder-What-to-Do-Next."

Molly stood up and looked about her. Grandmother was sitting by the fire. Her knitting was in her lap; she was gazing into the coals.

"She is remembering," Molly whispered to herself. "She is thinking of all the things that used to be long ago. Lots of them are over, and she misses them. And she feels sorry."

Molly waited only a moment. Then she went downstairs.

Presently grandmother heard a loud knock at the door.

"Come in," she said. The door opened and there was Molly, wearing Charley's coat, which came down to her heels; and her father's hat, which almost gave her a crick in her neck. It was so wobbly and hard to balance, and she was carrying a big umbrella. She set the umbrella against the wall and took off her hat—she was glad it was not polite to wear your hat in the house when you are a man.

"Good morning, Ma'am," she said to grandmother. "I am a doctor; not just a plain one, but a special doctor that's very important, and my visits cost a lot of dollars apiece."

By this time Molly and grandmother were shaking hands.

"What is your name, doctor?" inquired grandmother. "M'm," meditated Molly. "My name is Dr. Mary. I can't stay long. There is a great deal of measles and croup and other diseases waiting for me. But your son asked me to stop in, so I obliged him. Please let me see your tongue."

Dr. Mary looked at grandmother's tongue, then she felt her pulse, then she laid the palm of her hand on grandmother's forehead and put the back of her hand against the end of grandmother's nose.

Dr. Mary shook her head.

"You are a very, very sick lady," she said gravely. "I've got just three cures to give you. If they don't cure you I don't know what I'll do."

"Three?" cried grandmother. "It must be a bad case! What is the first?"

"The first," answered Molly, trying to keep her dimples from showing (for who ever heard of a great special doctor that had dimples?), "the first is to kiss me!"

Grandmother was not slow to obey, which is a great point with a patient.

"I feel better already," she said.

"The second," continued Dr. Mary, when she had smoothed her hair back again out of her eyes, "is to take all these different things that I am going to tell you about and stir them up together and put them right over your heart in a plaster, to draw."

Molly got that last expression from Julie, the laundress. She waited to see whether grandmother would appreciate it. Grandmother did.

"Very well, I will," she promised. "Tell me what the things are."

"Why," said Molly, "this is one; Charley told the other boys that he felt pretty shy of grandmothers before you came, but now he liked them; they were all right," he said. And mother said it made a change in a family when an angel came and lived with it—she meant you. Julie and Katy think you are splendid! I heard them tell the butcher there wasn't another old lady in town who could hold a candle to you. That was very slangy, but they meant to be nice. And father is crazy about you. All of us are. Now," ended Dr. Mary, "stir all these up and put them over your heart—the heat will be good for you."

"Oh, very good," said grandmother softly, her eyes shining. Then she tried the first "cure" over again several times without stopping.

"Wait! wait!" said Dr. Mary. "There is one more medicine for you to take."

"I don't need it," said grandmother.

But Dr. Mary frowned at her. Then she laughed and frisked about the room in a way that was very undignified for a famous physician.

"If you knew what it was!" she cried delightedly. "If you just knew what it was, you never would say that! There!"

She snatched something out of her pocket, that is to say, Charley's pocket—and dropped it into grandmother's lap. It was small and oblong, and had many foreign postmarks. It was a letter from grandmother's youngest son, her "baby," who was writing a remarkably learned book in Japan.

"How do you feel now?" asked Molly, when grandmother was turning the first page.

"As if I had never had an ill day in my life," answered grandmother.

And indeed she looked it—Sally Campbell, in February St. Nicholas.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

Emily lay in her little brass bed gazing at the moon light that filled the room. She had been asleep, but now the room was so light from the moon it had awakened her. It shone so brightly it illuminated even the closet door, which was open, so that she could see her dresses hanging tidily on the hooks, and her shoes carefully standing in a row beneath them.

Suddenly she heard a little rustling in the closet, then her pink dimity stretched herself on the hook, yawned daintily, shook out her white lace, and remarked:

"Dear me! how tired I am of hanging here. I quite long to be worn out into the sunshine again."

"Well, I have been worn enough to suit anybody this summer," replied her brown linen Russian blouse, giving a lazy fling to one side. "My, but I am tired when night comes. The only rest I had during vacation was when I went to the wash, and really such scrubblings as I got, and pressing with hot irons, can hardly be called a rest."

"It is very interesting though," remarked the blue plaid gingham. "I do love to be worn to school, and see her bending so thoughtfully over her books, studying. It is a pleasure to stand up with her and have her recite her lessons so well."

"Yes," answered the scarlet cashmere, "but somehow when she wears me she seems so proud she sometimes misses her lessons, and she is inclined to look down upon a poor, quiet little blue Danish cloth beside me."

"I have noticed that," said the pink silk in the corner. "It is really alarming when she wears me to parties. I think she is a disagreeable child. She holds her head so high, and plants her pink slippers down as if no one else was quite as good as she."

"Well," said the brown linen, "I suppose we all see different sides of her character. For my part, I think she is too rough and boisterous most of the time. She goes like a whirlwind everywhere, and shouts and screams until really my nerves are all on edge."

"If you think she is noisy when she goes out with you," called the bloomer suit from the darkest corner, "I say what must I think? I sometimes wonder if I am coming home whole or in rents. Oh, it is dreadful!" and she gave a little shudder.

"Dear me," said Emily under her breath, "I never knew before that clothes noticed the wearer," but the white muslin was speaking, and Emily stopped to listen.

"I am sure," she was saying in a soft, silky little voice, "I do not see any of the things you speak of. She seems a good, quiet, obedient girl. I go with her to church and Sunday school; you know, and she sits as still as a mouse, thinks beautiful thoughts, and answers so prettily when her teacher speaks to her. I noticed one Sunday she gave a rose to a poor, shabby, faded gingham that sits off in one corner of the class, and she speaks kindly to her every Sunday."

"That may be true," replied the bloomer suit, "but I can hardly believe it. Perhaps if she wore you once climbing trees, running races, and tearing around with a great black dog, you would feel differently."

"I shudder to think of it," answered the muslin. "Any one with such a delicate constitution as mine would soon be a hopeless wreck."

"Indeed you would," answered the bloomers. "I am thankful I am made to stand the wear and tear of it all."

"As far as I can see," remarked the plaid gingham, "she seems to average pretty well. She may be a trifle proud when she wears you," she added, turning to the pink silk, "but you know you really are a very fascinating creation."

"No excuse at all," said the pink silk decidedly. "I may be very fascinating, but I assure you that I am not proud at all."

"No, you leave that to her," chuckled the Russian blouse, "and she—"

Just then a little gentle breeze closed the door softly, and Emily heard no more.

The next morning she opened the door and looked at them.

"Dear me," she remarked, "you all look quiet enough this morning. Did I dream it I wonder, or did you really talk about me, and teach me a much needed lesson?"—Emma F. Bush, in S. S. Times.

FREE MORAL AGENCY.

Free moral agency carries with it a tremendous weight of responsibility. Endowed with the power of volition, every human being has in his hands the making of his own destiny. He may align himself with the forces which ennoble and uplift, or with those that blight and destroy. The boy, upon the threshold of life, by the exercise of his will-power, may make of himself a noble, true man, or he may degrade himself until his influence contaminates everything it touches. The girl, as she elects, may flower into the perfection of splendid womanhood and bless the world with a lofty and useful life, or she may plunge herself into depths of degradation that no plummet can ever fathom. Mighty and eternal issues are contingent upon the human will. It has in its custody the future of the immortal soul, the most priceless jewel ever committed to finite keeping. Our choices are what make or mar us. It was because he chose the high and good that John became "the disciple whom Jesus loved;" and it was because he chose the low and mean that Judas degenerated sufficiently to betray his Lord. There is sound philosophy in Emerson's injunction, "Hitch your wagon to a star." And let that star be the brightest that glitters in the firmament of time—the glorious Star of Bethlehem.

PROFANITY.

The extent to which profanity is prevalent is most appalling. One hears it on the street, in the shop and office, on the car, and nearly everywhere else that men meet and mingle. That the noble gift of speech should be prostituted to a use so base and low, is indeed passing strange. It is explicable only on the theory of a widespread, if not universal, human depravity. Only a person who is lacking in a proper apprehension of the greatness and goodness of God could thus lightly handle the hallowed name of him in whose awful presence even the holy angels veil their faces. There is absolutely nothing gained by profanity. It does not make one appear more manly. It adds nothing to the forcefulness of his statements. It is mean and low and vulgar, the dirty outflow of a wicked and vicious heart. Are you addicted to this shameful practice? If so, quit it. Self-interest and self-respect alike demand that you do so. A careless swearer is a corrupter of the youth of the country. The seed which he so recklessly sows will in the years to come bring forth a terrible harvest. Nor can he escape the consequences of this inexcusable vice. Instant with warning are the words spoken to Moses on the heights of Sinai by the great Infinite One himself: "For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." And most remiss in his duty both to his country and his God is the Christian who votes to elect to high office men who are openly and notoriously profane in their language. Such men are wholly unfit to represent a decent constituency.

ABOUT THE ADVOCATE.

We heartily appreciate the activity of many of our friends to extend the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and are pleased to report that our books show some gain over the corresponding months of the preceding year. But the movement to procure a larger subscription list is apparently not as general or active as we should like to see it under existing conditions. In reducing the price of the paper from $2 to $1.50, we have gone contrary to the trend of the times, and done what is not a little hazardous. It costs considerably more to issue a periodical now than at any former time for many years. All of the materials are considerably more expensive, and it will take a sum larger by several hundred dollars to carry on the work of publication this year than last. The Alabama, the New York, and some of the other Christian Advocates have lately advanced the subscription price to offset the increased expenditure now entailed upon them. That we do not desire to do; nor do we think we shall be driven to the adoption of that course.

What we want, and what we ought to have, is 10,000 subscribers. A paying list of that number would place us on a solid financial footing, and enable us in many ways to improve the paper and carry forward its interests. And surely the 10,000 mark is not too high for us to aspire to reach, when we have supporting us a church membership of 130,000. Fifteen hundred new subscribers in each of the patronizing Conferences would give us the desired number. We earnestly request our presiding elders and pastors to join with us in a vigorous campaign to attain to this 10,000 mark. Nor do we ask this for ourselves, but for the good of the Church. Many of our people certainly need indoctrination and increased denominational loyalty. The placing of the Advocate in Methodist homes will help to meet these crying necessities. It is our earnest purpose to make it speak in no uncertain tones for the Church in whose interest it is published and for the cause of Christ. Brethren, will you help us?

REV. K. A. JONES DEAD.

A letter from Rev. G. W. Bachman informs us of the death of Rev. Kenneth A. Jones, which occurred suddenly and unexpectedly at the home of his son, with whom he resided, at Sumner, Miss., on the 15th inst.

Brother Jones was one of the oldest members of the North Mississippi Conference and had been in the itinerancy for fifty-four years. In the course of his long ministry he filled many leading and responsible places, and perhaps no preacher was more widely known throughout central and north Mississippi. His natural gifts were of an uncommon order. Erect in form, handsome in face and feature, and possessed of a genial, brotherly bearing, he enjoyed large popularity, and for many years was recognized as a leader among his brethren. His oratorical powers were far above the average, and in the pulpit he was pleasing and impressive. When a mere lad we heard him deliver the funeral discourse of the Rev. Stephen Johnson, of Carroll County, Miss., and the text he used and many of his sentences have lingered in our mind through all the intervening years.

Brother Jones took a superannuate relation at the last session of his Conference, but felt ill at ease "with the harness off," and announced in a recent issue of the Advocate a desire to assist the brethren in their work, where they thought he could be of service. But the final summons has come to the veteran soldier, and no more on earth will he do battle for his Lord. Let us hope that loftier ministries in wider fields await him. The remains of the deceased were carried to Crawford, Miss., and there laid away to await the Master's coming and resurrection call. To the sorrowing relatives and friends we extend our deepest sympathy, and pray that God may gently lay his loving hand on every bleeding heart.

THE ADVOCATE AND THE WOMAN'S MEMORIAL

We wish to say a word about the discussion of the woman's memorial. We are willing to give to this a reasonable amount of space, dividing it equally between those who favor and those who oppose it, but we will not devote the Advocate chiefly to a written debate of this issue. We have observed that three or four papers from competent sources usually bring out the full strength of a controverted question, and that what follows after that is usually unprofitable repetition. We have informed Miss Mary Helm that we shall be glad to publish a communication from her pen or that of Miss Bennett on the subject; and it is our purpose to allow the ablest advocates of the movement to be heard through our columns, but we will not fill our paper with whole-page communications which have been hastily flung together. There must be a reasonable limit to all public discussion.

PERSONAL.

Rev. George W. Everett, the new pastor at Boyle, Miss., has organized a Junior and Senior Epworth League at that place. We are grateful to him for a club of subscribers.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, of Millsaps College, was in the city Thursday of last week and tarried a bit in the Advocate office. We are always happy to greet this honored leader of Mississippi Methodism.

We make acknowledgment of a club of subscribers from Rev. W. M. Campbell, of Schlater, Miss. It is needless to add that he is succeeding in his pastorate. That has been his unvarying habit ever since his entrance into the itinerancy.

Rev. J. W. Raper falls more and more in love with his people at Byhalia, Miss. During the illness of his wife they have left nothing undone in the way of kindness and assistance. Mrs. Raper is still in a sanitarium at Memphis, but is improving.

Rev. Gustavus A. Morgan, of Glenmora, La., writes: "We have entered upon our second year here with faith that the work will succeed. The people have received us kindly and everything is moving on. We expect to send in a club to the Advocate soon."

Dr. W. H. LaPrade is having his usual success at Meridian, Miss., where he is held in the highest esteem by his worthy flock. As a suggestive expository preacher, he ranks with the best; and in the pastorate he is diligent, and knows how to win the people.

La grippe, now prevailing largely in the city, has not spared the Advocate force. Our esteemed fellow-laborer, Rev. H. Whitehead, has been confined to his room by it for some days. We hope that he will soon come off more than conqueror in his battle with invisible germs.

Mr. J. G. McGowan, of Water Valley, Miss., has recently been holding court in Yalohusha County, in place of Judge Sam C. Cook, who has been ill at his home at Clarksdale. North Mississippi Methodism has no more worthy young layman than Brother McGowan, who is both a good lawyer and a patriotic citizen.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, one of the great leaders of the Salvation Army, delivered an eloquent address at the Rayne Memorial Church, of this city, last Sunday evening. She spoke in behalf of her work among prisoners, and at the close of the service 108 of the audience joined the Louisiana Prison Reform Association.

Rev. E. J. Coker, of the Mississippi Conference, writes: "Our second year on the Encinta charge is opening well. We are planning for our summer revivals, and are hoping for an advance movement along all lines." Our brother is wise in arranging for his meetings early and working to get things in readiness.

Mrs. J. D. Simpson, the wife of the pastor at Ackerman, Miss., in a note to the editor, says: "We are having severe sickness in our family. Mr. Simpson has a severe attack of la grippe or pneumonia. Our son has slow fever. We ask the prayers of the Church." Let this stricken household be remembered at the throne of grace.

In the person of Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian, the Mississippi Conference will have a valuable representative in the General Conference. Brother Brown is not only a man of the highest character, but also of deep spirituality and large religious activity. His wide acquaintance throughout the connection will make him influential at Asheville.

On the occasion of our recent visit to Jackson, Miss., we were pleased to meet our long-time friend, Rev. W. H. Saunders, now stationed at Washington Street, Vicksburg. He was in fine health and spirits, and hopeful of accomplishing much for the Master in his new pastorate. There is no truer man than this transplanted North Mississippian.

We have received from Mr. Henry T. Ivey, of Greenville, Miss., an announcement of the marriage of his daughter, Miss Susan Mosby, to Mr. James Malcolm Robertshaw, which took place at Tampa, Fla., on Feb. 7. We wish the worthy young couple a life of large usefulness and all possible earthly happiness. They will reside at Greenville, Miss.

Rev. Oscar Rainey, who is attending Millsaps College and serving the Thomasville charge, sends us some subscribers and reports that his work is progressing favorably. We have observed that Millsaps men have a habit of getting on well wherever they go. Not in a single instance have we known one to fail to give a good account of himself in the pastorate.

A letter from Mrs. M. E. Thames, of Pickens, Miss., informs us that her husband, the Rev. S. M. Thames, has been ill ever since his return from the Laymen's Convention at Jackson, but is now convalescing. We sincerely trust he will soon be quite himself again. No man in Mississippi has wrought more faithfully for the Church than this honored veteran of the itinerancy.

Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder, writing under date of the 15th inst., says: "The Baton Rouge District is moving on smoothly. All the preachers are in place, have the harness on, and are at work." We do not doubt that with tollers so energetic and a leader who has the interests of the Church on his heart, substantial progress will be made in that part of the field.

Rev. R. I. Allen has "an inviting and hopeful field" at Shelby, Miss. The people are thoughtful and attentive, and have shown the pastor and his family many kindnesses. We know that flock, and have no hesitancy in assuring Brother Allen that the "lines have fallen to him in pleasant places." We are grateful for the list of thirteen subscribers enclosed in his letter.

Rev. H. T. Carley, of the Carrollton Avenue Church, of this city, has lately been wrestling with a gripe. He looked in on us at our sanctum Monday and appeared pale and somewhat thinner than usual, but doubtless will be at himself again in a few days. Dr. J. T. Sawyer relieved him of his pulpit work on Sunday, the 13th inst., and preached a strong and helpful sermon.

The following brethren have done appreciated work in the way of circulating the Advocate within the past few days: Rev. O. S. Lewis, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Rev. Olin Ray, Ebenezer Circuit, north Mississippi; Rev. W. L. Stormont, Black Hawk, Miss.; Rev. Thos. L. Porter, Taylor, Miss.; Rev. J. M. Alford, Bogalusa, La., and Rev. R. A. Ellis, Yazoo City, Miss.

Bishop E. E. Hoss will deliver the Avera lectures at Trinity College, N. C., on March 1, 2 and 3. He will speak on the three following themes: "The Personality of Christ," "The Method of Christ," and "The Church of Christ." It gives us great satisfaction to publish this announcement. We have long wished that Bishop Hoss would make public more of the products of his pen.

Rev. R. O. Brown, of Amory, Miss., has had "a hearty reception and finds his work pleasant." He is busy, and thinks the prospect promising. It goes without saying, that the people are pleased with the services which he is rendering them. Brother Brown attests his loyalty to his Conference organ by forwarding ten names to go on our subscription list, accompanied by a check.

Mrs. Suttle Lingle, of Shreveport, La., complains of the absence of the Epworth League lesson from the columns of the Advocate. We are happy to assure her that its disappearance will be only temporary. The editor is a strong believer in the Epworth League, and desires to make the paper with which he is connected especially helpful to the young people of the Church. We count them a most important part of our constituency.

We regret to learn from the press dispatches of the continued illness of Judge Newman Cayce, of Columbus, Miss., whose condition is said to be such as to give his many friends grave concern. Judge Cayce has long been prominent both in professional and church circles, and is at the present time one of the trustees of Vanderbilt University. We sincerely hope that the malady with which he is afflicted may soon respond to treatment.

Rev. J. R. Countiss writes: "I am delighted with Aberdeen. The people have shown me every possible courtesy and kindness, and are expressive of their appreciation. Brother Felts is doing a great work on this District." Her many friends throughout north Mississippi will be pleased to hear that Mrs. Countiss is greatly improved in health, is now gaining in weight rapidly, and has every promise of a speedy and complete recovery.

In a letter written on the 16th inst., Mr. S. B. Martin, of Lafayette Springs, Miss., informs us that Rev. J. R. Robertson, in charge of the Toccoola circuit, has not been able to preach since last October. Brother Robertson, at that time, had been in a hospital at Memphis for ten or twelve days undergoing treatment. We sincerely trust he may have a speedy restoration to health and his loved employ.

Rev. J. B. Randolph is delighted with the water and all else at Iuka, Miss. And if the people are not delighted, they ought to be, with a pastor who is both a hustler and a Vanderbilt. Brother Randolph is planning for a campaign in the interest of the Advocate, and we thank him in advance for seeking to enlarge our circulation in that attractive little city, where healing springs never cease to flow.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Baker, La., has been putting in some good work for the Advocate on his rounds, for which we heartily thank him. We once heard our good friend, Rev. W. S. Shipman, of North Mississippi, say that "a preacher is sent to a charge to represent all the interests of Methodism." This definition of a pastor's duty seems to have its illustration in Brother Sweeney's commendable activity.

Writing of his meeting at Clarksdale, Miss., Rev. J. T. Lewis states: "Brother Arch Holder has been with us since the first Sunday in February. His work is exceedingly acceptable. Much good has been done in our church and some on the outside have been helped. His sermons are plain, pointed, and ringing with earnestness. To hear him is to be convinced that he is in the pulpit because he believes that there is a heaven, a hell, and that God can and will save all who trust in him."

From the Mansfield (La.) Journal we clip the following: "Opening services of the new Presbyterian Church were held Sunday at 11 o'clock in the presence of a large congregation. Rev. C. L. Norse, of New Orleans, who had been engaged to preach the sermon, was providentially hindered from coming, and the appointment was filled by Rev. A. W. Turner, of the Methodist Church, whose effort was a masterly and effective one, in keeping with his well-known ability and power of oratory, his theme being, 'God's Immutability.' At the close of the service, Mr. Turner made an earnest appeal in behalf of the church debt, and succeeded in raising more than $1000."

In sending in his announcements for his second round, Rev. B. P. Jaco gives the following resume of the work in the Corinth District: "I am about round the first time, and we continue to grow in finances, methods, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, church building, literature, and nearly everything else." The greatest advance of any of our years in finances is this one. Think of it! Corinth District has assessed this year, for salaries, $19,000. The following are some of the assessments for the support of pastors: Corinth $1800, New Albany $1500, Boonville Station $1350, Guntown $1200, Iuka $1000, Ripley and Blue Mountain $1000, Kossuth $720, Myrtle $650, etc. We hope some of our friends who think all of the churches are making progress except ours will compare these figures with the statistics of the Corinth District four or five years ago.

Rev. W. T. Griffin sends us the following interesting information from Gulfport: "At the conclusion of the Sabbath school services at the Twenty-ninth Avenue Methodist Church yesterday (the 16th), Judge T. M. Evans, the superintendent, announced that he had been informed that there were many children who were restrained by the lack of proper wearing apparel from attending Sunday school. That such poverty-stricken children should not be denied the light of the gospel, Judge Evans stated that he would arrange for a class of such children at a place other than a church. Finding a vacant room at 24 1-2 Twenty-fifth Avenue, Judge Evans announced that Sunday school will be conducted there every Sabbath afternoon. At the first meeting twenty-nine pupils were enrolled, only five of whom had been attending elsewhere." Such work cannot be too highly commended. We need more of it in many places.

The Laymen's Convention is bearing fruit in the capital city of Mississippi. A canvass in the interest of foreign missions had been going on among the churches of that municipality for some days, and last Sunday afternoon a great gathering assembled in the First Baptist Church to hear what had been accomplished. The reports of the amounts pledged were as follows: "Methodists, $3400, $1400 more than in 1909; Presbyterians, $2638, $782 in excess of 1909; Baptists, $2400, an increase of $813; Episcopalians, $2100, $897 ahead of last year; Christians, $83, the same as before. The total last year was $6720, and it was the hope of the lay workers to increase that amount to $10,000 for 1910." They were pleased to find that amount has already been exceeded, with the canvass of the Christian Church uncompleted. Hurrah for Jackson! And may the other towns in the Magnolia State fall into line.

TO NORTH MISSISSIPPI PASTORS.

I wish to notify the presiding elders and preachers of North Mississippi Conference that the first quarterly payment to our men on the Mission charges is almost due, and that there is scarcely half enough money in the treasury to meet this payment. You will please send at once to Bro. S. J. High, of Tupelo, Miss., what money you have on hand, and if you have not as yet taken your collections for missions, will you not please do so at once, and thus enable us to meet the needs of those worthy men on our mission fields? I trust that you will.

I also want to say to those preachers on the mission charges that I have blanks for their application, but have not sent blanks to all of them because I did not know how to address all. I have been waiting for the minutes to secure their addresses. In the meantime, if they will but drop me a card I will send them blank applications.

J. A. HALL.

President of Conference Board of Mission.
Winona, Miss., Feb. 14.

A MESSAGE TO PASTORS.

Dear Brethren: At the last meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, held in Savannah, Ga., a resolution was passed, requesting the pastors throughout our Church to preach a sermon on tithing, or Christian stewardship, on the fourth Sunday of February. We sincerely trust that you may find it convenient to comply with this request. If it is not practical to preach it on this date, we shall appreciate it if you will do so on some convenient time near thereto. If you have more than one church in your charge, we shall be glad to have you present the subject to each congregation.

We believe that, in this age of great money-making and material prosperity, our people should be brought more and more to a realization:

First—Of their relation to God as his stewards.
Second—That their own souls' good requires liberal giving.

Third—That the support of the gospel is an essential part of divine service.

Fourth—That there should be system and method in one's financial support of the Church, as there should be in secular business.

Fifth—That Christians should not feel content to make their offering to the Lord less than required of the Jews.

These and many others are the reasons we come to you in this special effort.

We realize the very great influence of the pulpit in arousing the consciences of men on any subject, and we feel sure if the 6,000 pastors throughout our Church will present to the people the great responsibility of their stewardship it will result in arousing them to a greater liberality, and develop a more systematic method of giving.

Praying our Father's richest blessings, we are most sincerely,

MRS. J. W. PERRY.

After a lingering illness of several months' duration, C. D. McCURUMEN, one of the most prominent citizens of Baldwin, Miss., died at his home Saturday morning February 5, 1910. He was born at Smithville, Miss., May 18, 1846. He joined the Confederate Army when he was about fifteen years of age, being a member of Roddy's Brigade, where he served with distinction and was made sergeant major of the brigade. He was a splendid soldier and came out of the war with a splendid record. During the raid of Tusculumbia, Ala., he performed an act of courage and bravery for which he was promoted to first lieutenant. He was paroled May 18, 1865, the day he was nineteen years old. After the war he moved to Fulton, Miss., and was elected Circuit Clerk of Itawamba County, Miss. He held this office for several terms, after which he was appointed U. S. Deputy Marshal under J. M. Liddell during the Cleveland administration, an office which he filled with perfect satisfaction. Later he acquired quite a valuable tract of land in Bigbee Bottom, west of here, and moved with his family to Baldwin, where he has since lived. He was a man of many noble traits of character. Loyal to his friends, considerate of the weaknesses of humanity, a kind and loving husband and father, always on the side of Christianity and morality, he leaves behind him a memory most dear to those who knew him best. He leaves a wife, one son and a host of friends who mourn his departure. The funeral services were held at the residence, conducted by O. L. Savage, pastor of the Methodist Church here, of which the deceased was a member, after which the remains were borne by eight Confederate Veterans, followed by a large crowd of friends to the Masonic Cemetery for interment. We trust that our loss is his eternal gain.—Baldwyn Journal

Mrs. LENA PACE was born March 11, 1869, and died in her forty-first year at the residence of her husband, J. H. Pace, at Pace, Miss. Blushing youth, with hopes and ambitions; ripening womanhood with vivid dreams of success; sober maturity, with sorrows and disappointments—such is the history of life. In youth we see only the bloom of hope—the virtues alone, for the evil lies slumbering peacefully, waiting for its time. In early life the bloom of success covers the character with a halo of virtue; but in maturity, when the disappointments come in place of the pictured success, then it is that character stands forth in its true light. The good and the evil then stand shoulder to shoulder, butting for control. Viewing in this light the life of Mrs. Pace, we catch a vision of service which should sound the depths of appreciation and inspire new resolve for nobler deeds. True to the best instincts of her nature; true to the best precepts taught her in childhood; true to the duties and obligations of daily life, she lived the simple, noble life of a sincere, self-sacrificing Christian; a loving wife, devoted mother and sympathizing friend. Content to fill her station, she did her best, did it gladly and did it well. Always ready with a helpful hand; popular, yet not courting favor; ever found working in the interest of her family, her friends and virtue's cause, it is small wonder that the memory of our departed sister lives in the hearts of her associates. As a friend, admirer and pastor (for she lived and died a consistent, active member of the Methodist Church), allow me to place one more flower to her memory. It is such lives as these that remove all doubts from our minds and move us to lift our hearts to heaven in one harmonious strain. "Thank God for the Christian home and the Christian mother, as the heart of the home." She leaves to mourn their loss a bereaved husband, three young sons, a baby daughter, aged father and mother and several sisters, and a host of friends.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

To the Preachers of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: Having been appointed leader of this district in the Church Extension work by the president of our Board, Rev. T. W. Lewis, I have ordered to be sent each of you from Louisville, Ky., the large wall charts, or maps, to be hung in prominent places on the walls of your churches. There are two that go together: one showing the localities where our work has been done, and the other showing the amounts expended from various sources. I got the number of churches from last year's Minutes, and have ordered the number of charts to correspond with the number of churches in each charge.

The object of this is to teach our people as to what we are doing in this work, and especially in the rural parts where they have but little opportunity of informing themselves.

I urge that these be hung up as before directed, and that the pastors call especial attention of congregations to them, explaining to them the work, and insisting on donations to the loan fund, for which there is such an urgent need.

Lastly, let us all see that our full assessments are paid for Church Extension, as well as for other Church claims.

D. W. BABB.

Verona, Miss.

Plant Cotton One Seed at a Time—Equally Spaced—"Thick" or "Thin"

WITHOUT preparation of the seed, plant a bushel or more, or a peck or less to the acre—one to five inches apart, as you set it. Save half the time, work and expense of chopping, as each plant stands alone and continues to grow, even if chopping is delayed. No bunching, no clumping, no skips. Produce 5 bales of cotton on same land that now yields 3, because of no skips. Planter easily and accurately adjusted to any depth. Speed covers adjustable to throw just the amount of dirt you desire over seed. Press-wheel follows and packs dirt firmly—aiding germination. The is the cotton-grower's dream realized. Positive force-feed means absolute regularity and accuracy of drop, and positively does not crack or crush seed. Plants corn with unequalled regularity; also Peas, Sorghum, Millet, Cane, etc.

Obituaries.

At midnight, Jan. 20, 1910, ALICE INEZ MONZINGO left her home near Ruston, to live with the Father in the home of many dwellings. She was the youngest child of E. E. and Eliza A. Monzingo and was born March 7, 1903. She lived on earth only seven short years, but, brief as was her life, it was not lived in vain. To the home she brought joy, and in passing over to the other home heaven has become even more attractive. May the memory of this pure, sweet life, and the grace of God cheer and comfort the hearts of all the loved ones!

A. FRIEND.

Our church at Hathorn, Miss., is mourning over the death of Brother W. J. BRANTON. He was a member of the Board of Stewards, and superintendent of our Sunday school, and a leader and moving spirit in all phases of church work in general. After intense suffering for two weeks, he died at his home near Hathorn, Wednesday, Jan. 12, 1910. The funeral took place at the Society Hill Church, Friday, Jan. 14. And as his pastor was seriously ill at the time of his death, the Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Columbia, Miss., conducted the funeral service. He was loved by all who knew him, but best by his good wife and two sons and seven daughters. Our sympathies are with them, for while they cannot call father back, they can go where he is. He is now shining in the presence of the King. A great crowd of people were present at the funeral to pay tribute to the memory of this good man. He was also a member of the Masonic Lodge at Oakvale.

HILARY WESTBROOK.

Mrs. FLORENCE LANE PRESTON, an excellent Christian woman well-loved by all who knew her, passed away from earth to glory after a long illness. She was confined to her bed the most of the time for twelve months or more. In fact she had been in bad health for four or five years. Sister Preston was not a woman to complain but was always inquiring about the health of others. She was born on Dec. 22, 1860, and died Feb. 3, 1910, being forty years, one month, and twelve days old. She was the mother of eleven children, four of whom preceded her to the spirit world. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn their loss. She joined the Methodist Church when quite young and lived a consistent life until God called her to himself. I was told this morning that she had made it a rule since the day of her marriage to read the Bible through once each year. How many of us can say as much? The funeral service was conducted by the writer. Her friends and loved ones mourn not as those who have no hope, but we feel sure she has gone to her reward in heaven. That God may abundantly bless the lonely home, is the prayer of her pastor.

J. H. FOREMAN.

Mrs. JANIE McDONALD passed to the higher life at the ripe old age of eighty years. She was born in Alabama, but came to Louisiana in early life. She was converted when fourteen years of age and united with the Methodist Protestant Church. She was the widow of W. B. McDonald and the mother of fourteen children. She inherited from her ancestry, the McCrelght family, a sturdy and pious strain. A large portion of her life was spent in the M. E. Church, South. Her house for many years was always the preacher's home. She lived a pure and noble life in the beauty of holiness. The sorrows and sufferings of life she bore with heroic fortitude and gentle patience. Faithfulness and loyalty characterized her in all the many relations of a long life. Like the Master, she went about doing good. She reared twelve children to manhood and womanhood. She was an elect woman and one of the most devout Christians whom I have ever known. Her religion was a source of comfort and strength to her through the final months of suffering. She was translated from the home of her son, in Jonesboro, La., to the house of many mansions. E. WILSON.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. L. P. Leverett on Thursday morning, Jan. 27, 1910, and took his companion, MRS. NEVADA ELLZEY LEVERETT, home to rest, after an illness of ten days with pneumonia. Sister Leverett was born Nov. 27, 1884; she identified herself with the Methodist Church at Hathorn, Miss., while Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson was pastor on this circuit, six years ago. She soon moved her church letter to Oakvale, Miss. She and Brother Leverett were joined together in holy matrimony July 18, 1907. She was a light to the home and a consistent Christian; and she lived a beautiful, consecrated life until Jesus saw that her work was ended on earth and called her to her reward beyond this vale of tears. She was a devoted wife and her home life was happy and well-nigh ideal. She has outstripped her husband in the race and now is awaiting the time when they shall be reunited in the land of pure delight, never to part again. She has gone to be with her brother who crossed the river a few years ago. She was loved by all who knew her, but best by her devoted husband and parents. No more can we hear her sweet voice on earth, but in the sweet by and by we will strike hands with her on the beautiful shore. She leaves a father, devoted mother and two affectionate brothers and four sisters and her husband and babe to mourn her loss. Our sympathies are with them, for while they cannot call Nevada back, they may go where she is. She was laid away in the cemetery at Society Hill Church on Friday, Jan. 28. The writer conducted the funeral service, with a host of relatives and friends to mourn her departure. Her pastor, Memorial Resolutions of W. F. M. Auxiliary, of Booneville, Miss.

Whereas our Heavenly Father has said to one of our circle, our well-beloved Sister, H. R. Tucker, "It is enough, come up higher," therefore, be it Resolved:

First—That in the passing away of our sister, we have lost a wise leader, a consecrated Christian worker, one whose joy it was to do and to suffer the Master's will.

Second—That we shall miss her wherever we are gathered, those who are striving for the coming of his kingdom on earth, from her seat in church where her presence was a support, and an inspiration to her pastor; from her place as a teacher in our Sunday school; from our social life, where hers was ever a welcome presence; but most of all from our W. F. M. meetings, we shall miss her earnest prayers, her wise counsel and efficient labor.

Third—That though we shall miss from the earthly walks the slight black-robed figure who exhibited so much of cheerful courage, we will strive the more earnestly to follow her along the shining way that leads above, where now she walks in white.

Fourth—Through the mist of our tears we look above whence cometh our help, and by faith, we say he doeth all things well—even to the taking away of his most faithful workers.

Fifth—That her life of earnest endeavor in the cause of missions shall in the future be to us a great incentive to larger work, so that we may make this Auxiliary in which she labored and prayed for sixteen years a fitting memorial to her.

Sixth—That we extend loving sympathy to her children in this dark hour of bereavement, and may they find comfort in his promises that never fail.

Seventh—That these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of our society, and copies furnished to each one of her children.

LIFE'S COMPENSATIONS.

The passing of years is like the coming of dawn—slow, silent, inevitable. The most eager cannot hasten the quiet, irresistible movement, and the most reluctant cannot forbid. Some gifts the years bring which we would fain decline—age, sorrow, disappointment. Some treasures they take which we would keep forever—youth, beauty, innocence. But there are more precious treasures which time cannot supply and the years cannot remove—friendship, patience, faith, and love.—Herbert L. Willott.

Sick Headache

"I have been a frequent sufferer from sick headache for years, yet never would use headache tablets. My son persuaded me to use Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills during one of these attacks, and to my surprise it gave me speedy relief."

MRS. LOUISE LEWELLYN,

When the disturbance which causes headache affects the nerves at the base of the brain, which connect with the large nerves that run to the stomach, heart and lungs, it frequently causes headache with vomiting—sick headache.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

soothe the irritated brain nerves and the cause of pain is removed. The first package will benefit; if not, your druggist will return your money.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

LESSON FOR FEB. 27, 1910.

FALSE AND TRUE DISCIPLESHIP.

Matt. vii. 13-29.

Golden Text: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21.

This most remarkable sermon of our Lord's is now nearing the close, and the final instruction is most valuable of all, for it embraces all. The lesson of the two gates and the two ways was not a new one to his hearers, for they had often been taught it in principle in their own Scripture as contained in Deuteronomy xxx. The responsibility of choosing rested upon them, and rests upon us. The effort to enter in at the straight gate is made by receiving and acting upon all that has been taught in the preceding discourse. An effort is required; Luke says we must "strive to enter," and that is because it is so easy to enter the wide gate, for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth." (Gen. viii. 21.) The two gates and the two ways differ according to the requirements: few go in at the narrow gate and many go in at the wide gate. We do not approach and enter the narrow gate alone, for our Savior is there with us, and is our guide. Neither do we approach and enter the wide gate alone, for we are warned to beware of those that are there to deceive us. They are spoken of as wolves in sheep's clothing; that is, they have a pleasing appearance; they are affable and sociable, and do not seem harmful. However, they are dangerous companions. They cannot always deceive, for after awhile they will disclose their true nature. The first bud of a thorn might be taken for the shoot of the grape, and a thistle bulb might appear as a young fig, but a few weeks of growth will develop their true nature. No tree was ever planted but for some good purpose; no man was ever born whose designed destination was the wide gate and the broad way.

The two gates are open, and he who enters and proceeds on either way is bearing fruit as he travels. "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." A clear and unerring chart has been provided, describing each of the two ways and their final end; that chart is the Word of God. "Therefore, thou art inexcusable, O man." Then, is it to be considered hard, that because the tree bore not good fruit it shall be "hewn down and cast into the fire"? It is a life-long lesson that virtue is its own reward, and that the way of the transgressor is hard. There will come a time when the traveler in the broad way will pause, and, in alarm, will look back over the road traversed; no comfort comes in that; then he considers that he has some claim on "the Helper of the helpless," and begins to cry, "Lord, Lord; but, verily, he will not be answered. He will try to justify himself by recalling his early training, his moral standing; but he cannot enter the kingdom, for entrance there is only by doing the will of the Father in heaven. Men will seek to justify themselves by every means except that provided of God, and by which we have peace with him. They will tell you that they have wronged no one, and have lived by the golden rule; they want to be saved without the help of the Savior. They show the effect of being condemned already for unbelief; they feel the condemnation and do not know what causes them to feel it. The truth is, their own hearts condemn them, and when they speak of the good they do, or the evil they do not, they are trying more to comfort themselves than to convince you. They have every opportunity to be set right; gospel sermons can be heard; religious literature is distributed among them; God's Word is in almost every home; yet there is a great work to do among them here in our own enlightened country.

In summing up the precepts set forth, the Lord likens those who hear to two builders—building two houses; two foundations: two results in resisting the wind and storm. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Unless the builder of home or character has his feet planted on this foundation, he is not safe. A man may be an affectionate husband, an indulgent father, standing high among his fellows; but unless he is a praying Christian he is in danger of yielding to the storm of temptation, having his home and character destroyed because the foundation was not laid on "The Rock." The very structure of life needs this firm foundation; life is full of disappointments, and man needs help at every step. Unless he were upheld by a strong faith in God, he might put forth his hand to take away his own life, trying to find shelter from adversity. A man's good character is not secure unless the Spirit abides in his heart; no man is safe unless he builds on "The Rock."

But the other builder, he who often hears the Word of the gospel and gives no heed thereto, is building on the sand. The structure which he erects has no certain stability. If things go well with him, he says he is "lucky; bad luck, as he terms it, is just outside the door, and when it enters, what is the source of his comfort? He has no comfort; despair follows. No inward monitor bids him bear up and be brave; it seems to him that the whole world is against him; his house is not able to stand against such storms, it falls, and great is the fall, because it was built upon the sand.

Thus the great Preacher closes his sermon, and the people wondered at his sagacious words, for he spoke as one having a right to speak, as the bearer of his own message, and not as the scribes. So, then, let us "hear and do" his Word, that when we say "Lord, Lord," we may enter the kingdom, having done the will of the Father in believing and serving him whom he hath sent.

Greatest of All for Man and Beast.

Mr. M. M. Garig, Denham Springs, La., says: "During the last sixteen years we have used ROYALINE OIL extensively, for almost every purpose, internally and externally, on man and beast. It has never failed us, and I do not hesitate to pronounce it the greatest of all the pain medicines and antiseptics known to me; and I have tried nearly every one on the market." Price 25c. bottle. Sold by druggists or the Royaline Medicine Co., New Orleans, La.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

THE WINONA DISTRICT PREACHERS' MEETING.

The Winona District Preachers' Meeting, which met in Greenwood Jan. 27-28, was a pleasant and profitable one. The people seemed glad to throw open their doors to the preachers. The Delta people are whole-hearted, never doing things by halves. Greenwood Methodism is of a high type, and is prospering under its efficient pastor, Rev. H. S. Spraggins. Nearly all of the preachers were in attendance and were in good spirits. Not a discouraging note was heard from any point. There was never a brotherhood like the ministry, and this meeting together and discussing and planning for the common work to which they have freely given their all draws more tightly the bonds of fellowship.

All entered into the discussions of such topics as were of vital importance to the Church. One of the most interesting discussions was led by the laymen on the topic: "The Kind of Preaching Our People Need." It was emphatically brought out that the people are still hungering for the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity and the eternal verities of the gospel to be preached to them; also in the ministry they want no compromise with sin in any form, and that they are ready to say amen to any attack on sin and plea for godliness. These papers read by the laymen were so much to the point and of such general interest to us preachers that it was requested that they be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

At the evening hour on Thursday, Rev. J. A. Hall, President of the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference and Winona's most successful and popular pastor, preached a missionary sermon that was a strong and stirring plea for the Church to rise up with renewed zeal and do larger things in the great cause of missions, the paramount duty of the Church to-day.

We are glad and fortunate to have in our district Dr. J. W. Boswell, the Advocate's former editor, who gave us a splendid address on "How to Organize a Church for Efficient Service."

Among our visitors from other districts were: Rev. J. H. Mitchell, Rev. J. C. Park, Rev. Luther Nabors, and Mr. W. L. Clifton, President of Gretna College.

In our discussion of various topics, the circulation of the Advocate was not forgotten, and the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That every preacher of the district obligate himself to secure ten or more subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that when these subscriptions shall have been secured, it be reported to the presiding elder.

During the meeting a session of the Board of Stewards was held, and I never saw assessments more easily made or more cheerfully received. The outlook for a prosperous year is very encouraging. "All finances in full, and a thousand souls for Christ in the Winona District in the year 1910," is the slogan of our stirring presiding elder, to which let both preachers and people of every charge say, Amen!

Tidings from the Field

Vimville, Miss.:

We have been cordially received, and have had a fine "pounding" by the Pleasant Hill members. Our needs are being well looked after. We have resolved one Sunday school into a missionary society, and organized one Epworth League. Everything is moving along nicely. Both the pastor and people are cheerful and hopeful. We are expecting to make this the best year of our life. Pray for us.—H. J. Maddox.

Buena Vista, Miss.:

As some of the readers of the Advocate know, I was returned by Bishop Hoss to the Buena Vista charge for my second year. My people have received me kindly, and we have the promise of another year of successful work. Our Board of Trustees are improving and beautifying the parsonage, and our Woman's Home Mission Societies are putting new furniture in it. There has been almost a constant expression of love and appreciation since Conference, and many good things to eat have been given us. Our Leagues are doing a fine work. One had a Thanksgiving Day service, and the other a Christmas service, each sending a nice collection to the Orphans' Home. In fact, we have some of the finest young people in all the world. All in all, we are serving a fine flock, doing our best to preach the pure gospel, and trying to be contented and happy. May God bless both the editor and readers of the Advocate.—O. P. Armour.

Taylor, Miss.:

The last Conference saw fit to send me to the Water Valley Circuit. I found a good, kind, and considerate people. Everything considered, I think I have made a good beginning. This is my first year in the itinerancy, but as I observe and read, I have reached certain conclusions: First, there is a scarcity of good, wholesome literature in the homes of our people. Our people read, but what do they read? I am sorry to say that many of them read pretty much everything except good religious literature. Some of them take as many as a half dozen papers, but when you want them to take the Advocate, they begin by saying it is too high, when the truth is, it is worth as much as all of the others put together. Until we, as Methodists, begin to supply our homes with the right kind of literature (such as is furnished by our own beloved Church), we can never hope to be intelligent Christians, or expect our children to be what they should. It is certainly unwise for our people to take so many secular and almost no religious periodicals. The former feed the head; the latter feed the heart. Second, I find the family altar no longer the rule, but the exception among our people. It will be a sad day for our Methodism when we no longer have praying homes. Prayerless Christians (?) make prayerless homes; prayerless homes make prayerless churches; prayerless churches make a prayerless nation. A prayerless nation—then what? Read the history of the nations for an answer. Oh, that our people would awake to the importance of religion in the home. We can never hope for a widespread revival of "old-time religion" until our people begin to pray in their homes, and train their children up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Thos. L. Porter.

What you want is an Edison Phonograph

Do not be misled. The only kind of sound-reproducing machine that is perfect is the one that Edison invented and the one that Edison makes.

It is the one with the smooth and perfect sapphire point that doesn't require changing with each record and that doesn't scratch—two points alone that should influence your decision.

Only in the Edison do you find the music-reproducing idea at its best.

Don't take our word for it. Compare the Edison Phonograph with all other instruments side by side on the same music, if possible, and then you will know better than we can tell you.

Edison Phonographs are sold everywhere in the United States at the same price, $12.50 to $200. Standard Records, 35c. Amberol Records (play twice as long), 50c. Grand Opera Records, 75c and $1.00.

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and hear the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us.

Pascal says, "The highest act of reason is to recognize that there are things beyond its range."

Governments, religion, property, books, are nothing but the scaffolding to build man. Earth holds up to her maker no fruit like the finished man.
—Humboldt.

Holiness comes not by accident; nor is it ever thrust upon any one. God gives the Holy Spirit only to those who "ask" him; he fills with righteousness only those who "hunger" for it. The pathway to purity can only be climbed by penitence, faith, and persistent meditation and prayer.

The world hangs its laurels upon the brow of the man who succeeds regardless of his methods. But the truth is, it is better to fall fighting for the right than to win championing the wrong. He who "stoops to conquer" may temporarily triumph, but he must fall at last. The even-handed justice of the final judgment will measure out to each his proper reward.

One who does not believe in an existence beyond the tomb and in his accountability to God is not to be trusted. The obliteration of a future life undermines the very foundation of moral obligation. No court of justice will allow an atheist to sit on a jury, because it recognizes the fact that the only adequate constraint to right action is in his case lacking. Society has no greater enemy than the man who preaches the doctrine that death ends all.

Church loyalty is highly commendable. It is a flashy sort of a Methodist who worships elsewhere when services are being conducted at his own church. Your pastor needs your presence in the pew for support and inspiration. We have the noblest doctrines and most evangelical ministry of any denomination on earth, and there is no excuse for our people running hither and thither to hear preaching. The thing to do is to attend and talk up your own church, and both you and the congregation will be better off.

Culture is desirable, but it should be sought only as means to an end. That which measures the value of anything is its utility—what it contributes to the betterment of humanity. An education which does not increase one's capacity for serviceable work is not worth acquiring. College training is not designed to bring exemption from arduous toil, but to increase one's efficiency in doing what needs to be done in the world. Particularly is this true with reference to the ministry. The preacher of large attainments ought to be a better pastor, a more effective evangelist, and a more fruitful laborer than others whose acquirements are more meager. If the effect of his learning is to lead him away from the work of winning souls and building them up in Christ to engage in speculation and intellectual display, better had he never matriculated at a college or university.

THE DALLAS CONFERENCE.

The echoes which have reached us of the Laymen's Conference at Dallas all indicate that it was in every respect an extraordinary gathering. The first meeting of the laymen of Southern Methodism at Chattanooga, two years ago was a remarkable and memorable assemblage, but this second Biennial Conference seems not only to have equalled it, but to have gone vastly beyond it. From far and near the delegates and visitors came until the attendance swelled into the thousands, and the Texas metropolis was filled to overflowing with the enthusiastic followers of Wesley. The representatives were from every worthy walk of life and the personnel of the body was most superior. Professional men and farmers, doctors and lawyers, bankers and manual laborers, mingled in the great throng. Honored Bishops of the Church, missionaries fresh from the front with good tidings to tell, pastors in the home land with hearts happy to see the dawn of this new day, were on hand to participate in the exercises and enjoy the feast of good things provided for the occasion.

The sessions were presided over by Mr. J. R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn., whose superior is not found in Southern Methodism, and who is esteemed by all denominations for his high character and good works. The program was one of exceptional merit, and the interest in the proceedings was well sustained from the first hour to the last. Bishop Atkins delivered a striking address on "The Right Use of Money," Bishop Hendrix thrilled the great audience with a masterly discussion of "The Migrating Nations," and Prince Yun and Drs. Parker and Reid eloquently delineated the urgent need and inspiring opportunities for missionary work in the Orient. Voices were heard from practically all our mission fields, and everywhere the outlook was represented as being full of hope and promise. From no quarter came a discouraging note; the spirit of confident optimism was in the air. Five of our Bishops were present in addition to the two already mentioned, Bishops Wilson, Key, and Hoss were in attendance. The two former preached on Sunday, delivering characteristic sermons. The latter was able to tarry but for a single day, but when called upon to speak, responded in brief remarks which soon set the echoes of applause to ringing.

Satisfactory plans for continuing the laymen's campaign for the next two years were perfected, and $25,000 was subscribed for that purpose. We were pleased to see that a goodly part of this sum was contributed by Mississippians, who, as usual, gave a good account of themselves in all the proceedings of the occasion. The unanimous verdict is that the Conference was fully up to expectations, and that its influence will be appreciably felt to the utmost boundaries of the Church. It really begins to look as if the world might be evangelized within the next half-century, and that in this work America is destined to play the leading part. Why should she not? Her resources are immensely superior to those of any other nation. History furnishes no parallel to her abounding and fast accumulating wealth. She is richer than England, with all her vast array of colonies and wide extent of commerce—richer than Rome was when her Caesars were upon the throne and the area of her territory was greatest—richer than Greece was when Alexander was despoiling the surrounding States to adorn her capital, and wept because there were not other countries to conquer—richer than Babylon when she was at the height of her glory and her hanging gardens were the wonder of the world. Indeed, our enormous wealth is today the greatest menace to our present welfare and the republic's future safety. As Bishop Candler has said, "The yellow peril is not the Mongolian threatening our western coast, but the millions of gold piled up in our banks and vaults." If the American people would only devote their surplus means to this noble task of world evangelization, they would escape the corrupting influence of money which has been the undoing of so many of the peoples of the past, and win in this glorious crusade prouder victories than were ever won in the arts of diplomacy or on the bloody fields of war. May the Holy Spirit open their eyes to see the supreme opportunities of the hour, and move upon their hearts to manfully meet this inspiring challenge of the twentieth century. And as the forces of redemption respond and press triumphantly forward, may the banners of Southern Methodism ever be found waving at the front.

ALL SINS NOT OUTWARD.

The sins of outward conduct are terrible, but they are not by any means the only vices. Society seems to think so, but society is wrong. Covetousness is as bad as drunkenness. It is as culpable to have an envious spirit as it is to swear. Worldly pride is as offensive in the sight of God as lying. There is as much turpitude in unbelief as in outbreking lust. A life of refined selfishness with God left out is no better than a life of open profligacy. The elder brother with his loveless spirit was scarcely less Christlike than the prodigal wasting his substance in riotous living. The realm of the visible is not the only realm in which sin reigns. It holds high carnival in the world within as well as in the world without. Its dwelling place, its throne, its citadel, is the human heart. To reform the outer life is not to destroy it. Only a divine purification extending to the deepest depths of the soul can bring deliverance from it and make one clean and holy.

We hear a great deal about the sacrifices of the Christian life; but its gains even in the present world are vastly greater than its losses. It enriches more than it impoverishes. It may not twine the wreath of earthly glory for the brow, but it brings a heavenly peace into the soul. It may not pile up gold in a bank, but it dowers one with a character priceless beyond rubies. It brings the sweet consciousness of sins forgiven, the joy of blessed fellowship with the risen Lord, and the inspiring prospect of a crown that fadeth not away. How poor compared to such possessions are the unsatisfying and perishable treasures for which the irreligious toil and strive.

"THE NUDE IN ART."

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

In the issue of the Advocate of Feb. 10, there appeared the following paragraph, which I quote in full for the sake of emphasis, and also that it may be read again:

"We have scant respect for nude art. There is a tremendous power for good or evil in suggestion. A noble sentiment expressed in painting or in sculpture may be a perpetual source of blessing and inspiration. On the other hand, a picture or statue which suggests the impure may kindle in man's bosom the unholy fire of lust and start him in paths which lead to the deepest degradation. We do not doubt that the scale of human destiny has often been turned by an appeal to the passions made by a scene exhibited upon canvas or in marble. They who would keep clean must seek to shut out evil thoughts. It is a most significant fact that in the exhumed city of Pompeii, where it is known that licentiousness flourished openly and without restraint, art in all of its forms was thoroughly sensuous and debased. Parents cannot be too careful in selecting pictures for the walls of their homes. And many of the prurient calendars sent out nowadays should be excluded, as one would quarantine against a contagious pestilence."

These words I regard as timely; they say just what I have often wished I could say in many homes into which I have gone, and express my thoughts as I have entered many public places where people must necessarily gather, and old and young are compelled, unless they shut their eyes, to gaze upon nude pictures, or pictures partly so, wrapped in draperies which reveal rather than conceal.

Some papers advertise nude pictures, "three for 25 cents, life size, just the thing for your den," and thus appeal to the lascivious thoughts of young men. I often go into places where young men are at work, such as the offices of the railroad stations, and see these pictures on the walls.

Worse still, I see these suggestive pictures in the homes of the refined and cultured—Christian homes—where children must see them from childhood to manhood and have them hourly influencing their lives.

Young ladies receive comic post-cards from young men and place them in their album collections—suggestive cards that ought to bring a blush to the cheek of any young lady; but they laugh over them.

"Parents cannot be too careful in selecting pictures for the walls of their homes. And many of the prurient calendars sent out nowadays should be excluded." (Words in black letters mine.) I trust that all fathers and mothers, on reading these words, will inspect the walls of their homes, calendars and all, and remove all questionable pictures.

"The scale of human destiny has often been turned." These words are illustrated in the story of the mother whose boy had gone as a sailor. The mother, in her distraction, asked every visitor in her home why her boy went to sea. No one could tell her, but one day an artist came, and, on being asked why her boy went to sea, pointed to a picture on the wall, and said: "That is why your boy went to sea." It was a picture of a vessel sailing across the sea.

Boys and girls are going to sea in more senses than one, influenced by calendars, pictures, and paintings on the walls of Christian homes.

REMOVE THE RESTRAINTS.

By Rev. L. M. Broyles.

To the editorial of Feb. 10 on "Woman's Rights Memorial," I heartily demur. To some of its expressions I except, and to the sentiment which it embodies, as a whole, I object. Undoubtedly, the editor is courageous in the stand he takes; but, is he wise? This last I doubt. He declares this movement for equal privileges with the laity "out of harmony with apostolic and primitive precedent." This is true, but what if it is true? Is a precedent to last always? Are rules and creeds—and even whole systems—peculiar and applicable to a particular age, to bind and govern through all after ages, even though a new spirit, new needs, and a widely different type of life obtain in those after ages? To answer aye is to be guilty of a stupid conservatism, a fatuous reactionism. Principles themselves are elastic, and mere precedents are subject to abrogation altogether, as the new time may demand. I believe that the progress of the Church in the future is to be secured by appealing to the forces regnant in that future rather than by everlastingly harking back to apostolic times for precedents and usages. "They of that time, we of this"—with all respect for both the old time and new. If primitive precedents have served out their day of usefulness, let them go, and let us welcome those necessary changes which the present and future may demand.

The editor further says: "It (the movement) promises no good to the Church and no benefit to the women of Southern Methodism." There, he is mistaken. It does promise good, and the earnest desire of the fair petitioners is that it will materialize into largest benefit, both for themselves and the Church they so heartily love. Fact is, the movement was not born out of worldly ambition and lust for power, but out of a faith and love and loyalty that would find expression in larger usefulness to the Church of Christ.

Again the editor: "This movement does not voice the sentiment of a greater part of the womanhood of the Church." This is mere guessing. They ought to be the better judges. The framers of the memorial came from all sections of our territory, and came as the chosen representatives of the working women of our Methodism. I, for one, believe that this memorial represents the sentiment of an overwhelming majority, and not that of an inconsequential minority. If the women of our Church do not know their own minds, certainly any preacher or layman is grossly presumptuous in thinking himself wise in that particular. And so again: "The tendency is manifestly in the wrong direction." A stream of tendency, the Darwinians would say. This is a matter of opinion. We must prejudice any and all experimentations of the future by similar experimentations in the past. The tendency in reference to woman in the past has been upward, and in every case has eventuated in progress; with more light and greater freedom, she will score yet higher successes in the future. I am not afraid of what Margaret Deland calls "the untrammelled woman;" nor do I believe that our Church is afraid. And lastly: "The General Conference should stamp the seal of its disapproval upon it (the memorial) so quickly and so emphatically that it will never again be brought forward." Speak it soft, Brother Editor. Your remark is a little fierce. Quickly? Does he really think so? I think not; but prayerfully and deliberately. I would have the General Conference to look upon this memorial as the presentation of the greatest opportunity which has come to our Church within the last half century. I would have that high parliament break the last fetter that binds, and thus bring to the temple of woman's usefulness the finishing crown-dome which has been in process of making through the whole Christian era.

It seems to me that our evasions and oppositions in reference to woman's rights spring out of a misapprehension of our life and humanity. Life is an integer, a completed circle. There are no spheres and hemispheres of duty and service. Humanity is one. There are no fractional parts; there is no line of cleavage. Man and woman are a unit. Therefore, in the world's work, the mere accident, or difference, of sex, is not to be considered. In achieving the great mission of Christianity, willingness to do and ability to perform—these, and only these—must be the determining factors. I recently heard a minister speak of the great Master as the sexless Christ. The sexful Christ would have been nearer the truth; for in his person woman had her place equal to that of man. Yonder in Gethsemane, and at the cross, woman's voice was heard and woman's sacrifice was made with equal fidelity and fullness of that of man. And now, in the advancing kingdom of that Christ, shall we not grant her all the rights and representation which were hers in his divine person? Justice can render but one answer.

You are mistaken, Mr. Editor, in thinking that this question will arouse but little enthusiasm. I believe that the ministers and laymen of our Church will speak in no uncertain tones before the finale, and that our women will come "a hundred thousand strong." Turn on the light. Give time and space for fermentation. The result, I am sure, will be a favorable consideration of this memorial. Thus our great Church will grant to our women a tardy justice. Slacken the rein, that this harness-horse of Methodism may pull the harder and travel the faster.

"THE WOMAN'S RIGHTS MEMORIAL."

By Mrs. Hattie Theus Singleton.

Since my signature is attached to the memorial asking the General Conference to grant to women the rights that laymen have in our church, I feel that I may, with propriety, speak my mind on the subject. In the first place, I object to the title, "woman's rights," as it has been applied to this memorial. One invariably thinks of a violent, vociferating "suffragette" when this term is used, and I am sure we who signed this memorial are good, plain, every-day women, the kind who are doing the homely duties in our church.

We are not asking to be made local preachers, itinerant preachers, or bishops, but only that we be granted a legal voice in shaping and developing the work of the church of which we are such a large part. Hundreds of women are already doing the work of stewards, though without a legal right to do so. Women, though members of the church, are ineligible for the office of trustee, while men of other churches and of no church can act in this capacity. Again, women can act as presidents of Epworth Leagues, and are often superintendents of Sunday schools, doing all the work of these offices, but they cannot represent their work in the Quarterly Conference, though a man doing the same work is, by virtue of his office, a member of that body. In last week's issue of the Advocate, a sister, writing from Blue Mountain, Miss., says: "This writer was appointed secretary-treasurer of the building committee, trustee of the property, and steward in the church at its very inception." Many of the women supporting this movement think that the course of the Church in allowing women to discharge the duties of these various offices, in violation of church law, is an example of lawlessness, which must be of the most demoralizing character. All we ask is that the General Conference make legal what the women are already doing in many places.

The statistics regarding the cost of administration, relatively, of the men's and women's boards are very interesting. The three men's boards of our Church expended during the last year the sum of $731,004.30. The cost of administration was $63,748.92. The two women's boards expended during the same year $403,759.49. The cost of administration was $15,017.62. Does not the study of these statistics remove any doubt as to the ability of the women of our Church in administering affairs? Does it seem fair that when their affairs are up for consideration, they are denied any voice or representation on the Conference floor, but must depend on lobbying for it on the outside?

An instance of unfair legislation may be found in the action of the General Conference of 1906. In spite of the fact that the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions owns property valued at more than a half-million dollars and has expended since organization nearly three million, the General Conference restricted it from any expenditure of (their own) funds exceeding $5000 for purchasing property, erecting buildings, or removing their plants without the consent of the General Boards, in which they have no membership.

We are not asking for generosity and chivalry, but for justice. Women constitute more than half of the membership of each church, paying their pro rata of all the general collections, in addition to what they do for their boards. Our forefathers fought because they believed taxation without representation to be unjust, and, as Miss Helm says, "their blood flows in our veins."

Personally, I very much dislike this talk about the uncrowned queens of hearts and homes doing the tasks "fit for angels." It seems to me that we need a Cervantes to satire for us this idea of chivalry gone to seed, and these Don Quixotes splintering their spears against windmills.

Mr. Meek's objections are: that such action would be "out of harmony with apostolic and primitive precedent," and that he does not like the tendency of it. If I remember correctly, these were the identical objections to the deaconess movement when that question was up for discussion, and has not time proved the wisdom of the General Conference that gave the Woman's Board of Home Missions the right to set apart deaconesses?

It seems to me, a mere woman, as I read the New Testament, that woman enjoyed many more privileges under the ministry of Christ and in the Apostolic Church than many of our brethren of later times will allow, and that this movement under discussion is simply a coming back to primitive Christianity.

We judge, from one of the Master's statements, that in heaven all sex lines will disappear, and St. Paul, whatever argument there may be about his meaning in other passages about women, is certainly clear enough when he says: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

My father was at one time sheriff of Marion County, Miss. He was perhaps the most conscientious Christian man that ever served as sheriff in that county. He would not suffer anything whatever to interfere with his duty to his God or his church. On one occasion a man went for him in haste to attend to some matters pertaining to his office. Father was starting to church, and told the man that he would attend to the matter as soon as he returned from church. The man got angry and threatened him with the law. Father told the man that he would tender his resignation as sheriff rather than let anything interfere with his duty to his God and church.

I was born and reared on a farm in Marion County. When about six years of age my parents started me to school. The name of my first teacher was James Taylor. He was a Christian of the purest type, an honest, conscientious man. On the playground he was one of the boys—in the schoolroom he was Professor Taylor. His pupils loved, honored and respected him. He kept perfect order in his school; he was kind, gentle and patient, yet he did not fail to use the rod when necessary. Patrons and pupils loved him. It would have been well for me if I could have been kept in school with such a man for eight or ten years.

After I was eight years old I went to school but little, seldom more than two or three months at a time. At the age of seven I was put to work on the farm (not the county farm, however). At ten, I was taught to plow. I went to school but little after that. The last school I attended, I learned a little about grammar, arithmetic and geography. I was in some respects a dull boy. It was hard for me to understand the tables in Smith's Arithmetic—especially division and subtraction. Smith's Grammar was the only grammar I ever studied. My father saw that I had a talent for vocal music, and sent me to a singing school.

I well remember the names of some of my father's good neighbors. He had no bad neighbors. Among these were James Warner, father's class leader at one time; Stephen A. Reagan, a local preacher; Dr. Cowart, a good Baptist brother; Luke Conerly, a local preacher and a good, quiet man, and many others. Then there was Vincent Wilson, the cobbler. Before his conversion he was a drunkard, but afterwards he was all for Christ. He was an Englishman, stolen from his parents in London when a boy, and brought to this country. It was fortunate for him that he fell in with Uncle Luke Conerly. So many times, when I was a little boy, I have heard him sing and shout. A part of one of his favorite songs ran thus:

The richest man I ever saw was the one who begged the most.
He begged the Father, Son, and he begged the Holy Ghost.

And to begging I will go.

Yes, to begging I will go, I'll go, I'll go.

And to begging I will go.

He proved faithful to the last, and died some years ago in Covington, La. I fully expect to meet these good people when I get home.

Being brought up in a truly religious home, surrounded by such good people, it is not strange that I was religious from my childhood. I joined the Church when I was ten years of age—joined on probation—and have never yet been received formally into the Church. Am I a member? "How was that?" you say. Well, my father had me baptized in childhood; so, at the expiration of six months after I gave my hand for membership, my name was entered along with those in full fellowship. Yes, I am a Methodist in full connection.

Let me end this chapter with a poem, the author of which I do not know:

"I felt impressions in my youth
To seek immediately for truth.
Tried every sect—among the rest,
I went to hear the Methodist.
I shunned their ways and rules at first
With care, suspicion and mistrust;
I found their doctrines were the best,
And then I loved the Methodist."

"Dread guilt around my heart entwined,
And all my sins rushed through my mind—
My heinous crimes and wickedness
Were shown me by the Methodist.
But when I saw my dreadful case,
I sought the healing streams of grace—
My Savior then my heart released,
And I became a Methodist."

"Some prophesied they'd come to naught,
And in few years would be forgot;
But still their numbers do increase,
And God doth bless the Methodist.
Yes, bless the Lord, I do expect
There are Christians now of every sect
Who do their righteous ways respect—
There are millions of the Methodist."

"I love God's people everywhere,
Who do my Savior's image bear;
But, candidly, I do confess
That I prefer the Methodist.
Our conflicts here'll not always last;
But when the storm is fully past,
Then we shall enter into rest
With millions of the Methodist."

Glory to God for the people called Methodist!

THAT WASHINGTON CITY CHURCH.

By Rev. John L. Weber, D.D.

As a connectional church, it is highly important for us to seize every strategic point in our territory, and to plant our church there so strongly as to command attention. Is there any point in our territory that means more to us in large possibilities of influence than our national capital? Adequately established in Washington, with imposing material expression of the greatness of our church, and with a ministry of prophetic vision in command of the temple made with hands, would it be saying too much to claim that the influences going out from that center of advantage would stimulate not only our entire Church in the United States, but would, through influences, possible from no other place, reach our distant mission fields?

Our church in Washington City occupies a unique position. It must not be allowed to become a purely local church. For the sake of the entire Church, we must have a great representative church building there that will be as our cathedral church. It must properly represent us to the world that looks to Washington for an expression of the life of the American people. It must so represent us to the large number of our own people, who are constantly visiting the capital city, that they will feel a large and stimulating self-respect. It would be unreasonable to expect the local congregation to meet the demands of a connectional situation. Our people at Washington have taken care of themselves and can continue to do so; but in order to save the critical situations for the whole Church, there must be combined effort. Southern Methodism in Washington can be depended upon to do its part; and as soon as the Church understands the full significance of the movement, there will be response from the entire Church that will show to our timid ones that we have not lost the power of vision.

Other churches appreciate the situation in Washington, and are planning and doing big things to secure for themselves impressive denominational buildings; but they are appealing to their churches all over the country. Wise planning and hearty co-operation are the secrets of the success of our sister churches. We have been doing some wise planning now for a long time; isn't it time to get to work on the hearty co-operation? The genesis of this movement is to be discovered in General Conference action as far back as 1858, but our General Conference at Birmingham, in 1906, revived it, endorsed it, and set forces to work that mean to meet the need and satisfy its demands by erecting a house worthy of our cause.

Of course, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, can do anything she wants to do, and more than that, she wants to do whatever is shown her to be the right thing to do. It is now being shown by General Conference action, by the leadership of our Bishops, by the special committee and a special representative, and by the comments of our Church press, that it is the right thing for the Church to take hold of this Washington City project and carry it on to assured success. With such leadership can there be any doubt of success. It will not be difficult to show to our laymen of means that as a Church we have an opportunity that, rightly used, will mean much to us. It is equally true that, if we allow the opportunity to slip by unimproved, that will also mean much to us; but that much will be on the debit of the account. We ought to build. We are able to build. Now, will we build? Let there come a mighty response from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and from all parts of our Church: "Yes, by God's help, we will!"

The committee in charge of the enterprise is one to inspire confidence. Bishops Candler and Hoss, with Dr. W. F. McMurry, have never been associated with failures. They are prudent men, but also men of large faith and of much energy. When they give the command to advance there will be a movement forward. This committee has shown its keen appreciation of the situation by calling that Texas brother, George S. Sexton, to take active charge of the campaign. That means that something is doing—not going to be done. His appointment simply serves notice on the Church that we are to have our much-needed building in Washington.

Let the ear of the Church be turned toward the Capital City on March 18. Something will be heard that will cause a rise in the self respect and denominational pride of every Southern Methodist.

The main building of South Mississippi College at Hattiesburg was destroyed by fire on Feb. 23. The loss was $30,000 and the insurance $15,000. It is said that President Thames will at once take steps to rebuild.

It is reported that there are 40,000 more Indians in the United States than there were twenty years ago. From this it would appear that after all the red race may not become extinct, as poets and orators have long predicted.

There are said to be thirty-nine parish boys' agricultural clubs in Louisiana, with a membership of 5,300. More than $500 has been raised for seed and premiums. Such organizations promise great good to the South, where improved methods of farming are much needed.

The Commercial Cable Company of New York has announced that it will proceed at once to lay an additional transatlantic cable. This will be the sixth line for that company between Europe and America, and will greatly facilitate communication between the old world and the new.

The law of Alabama requires Temperance Day to be observed by the public schools of that State. This was done with appropriate songs and recitations on Feb. 18. This impresses us as a wholesome piece of legislation, well worthy of imitation by the other commonwealths of the Union.

After a deadlock of six weeks, the Hon. LeRoy Percy, of Greenville, was on the 22nd ult. chosen by the Mississippi Legislature to succeed the late Hon. A. J. McLanrin in the United States Senate. Mr. Percy is a native Mississippian; is forty-nine years of age, and one of the foremost lawyers of his State.

The Agricultural Department, Washington, estimates that there are in the world, 1,500,000,000 domestic animals. The sheep are said to number 580,000,000; horses, 95,000,000; goats, 100,000,000; hogs, 150,000,000. The United States is said to have 50,000,000 head of swine; 57,000,000 head of sheep; 25,000,000 head of horses; and 70,000,000 head of cattle.

The surgeons of the Illinois Central, Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, and Indianapolis Southern Railroad Companies met in annual convention at the Grunewald Hotel in this city on the 23rd ult., with a record-breaking attendance. Among the newly-elected officers we notice the name of Dr. Luther Sexton, who was chosen first vice-president, and who in every way is worthy of the high honor thus bestowed. The next convention will be held in Memphis, Tenn.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat states that two river greyhounds will soon be constructed for a company in that city and launched upon the Mississippi. They will be made of steel, will be 550 feet long and sixty feet wide, and will carry 5,000 tons on a six-foot draft. These crafts will correspond to the through-freights on the railroads, and will only carry freight consigned to the larger cities. It is expected that they will be able to make the trip from St. Louis to New Orleans in five days.

Writing of conditions in the Orient, Mr. Frank G. Carpenter says: "The booming cities of the world are now on this side of the Pacific. The awakening of Asia is bringing in capital from Europe and the United States, and the whole continent seems to have sprung into life. Yokohama has doubled since I last saw it. Tokio is now bigger than Chicago, Osaka will rank with Philadelphia, and Shanghai is ahead of Boston or St. Louis. Hong Kong, away down here at the southern end of China, has now a population of 400,000, and it promises to be one of the greatest cities of the world. It belongs to the British. It had only 2,000 fishermen in it when they took hold of it seventy years ago. It is now one of the great ports of the world, and the people here claim it has more tonnage than Liverpool or London."

The Mississippi State Conference of the Daughters of the American Revolution was held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall of the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, on the 22nd ult., with Mrs. A. A. Kincannon presiding. After an invocation by Dr. W. D. Heddlston, a beautiful and eloquent address of welcome was made by Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, who is a sister of Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, and has much of that brilliancy of utterance which has won for her brother national distinction. Mrs. E. F. Noel, the accomplished wife of the Governor of Mississippi, made a felicitous response, after which Dr. Hume, speaking for the University, warmly welcomed all visitors. Then followed the principal address of the evening by Prof. A. L. Bondurant, who chose as his theme "The Accomplishments of Self-Denial." The business sessions of the association were held at the annex of the Presbyterian Church on the 23rd, and the occasion was brought to a close by a reception given by Chancellor and Mrs. Kincannon.

THE LAYMEN OF CARROLLTON, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: Last week I sent to you the action of the Methodist men in their denominational rally at Jackson. Pursuant to the suggestion of that meeting, the churches at Carrollton had a general rally Sunday evening. Statistics were read showing that the four churches of our town gave last year to foreign missions five hundred and fifty dollars. The meeting took formal action aligning the community with this great men's movement, and asked the town to add two hundred and fifty dollars to the amount of their last year's contribution, requesting the churches to have denominational rallies Wednesday evening, and each church to assume a definite proportion of the increase suggested.

The Methodists complied, and after a fine discussion by our pastor, Rev. W. M. Langley, the report was made that eighteen men had guaranteed one hundred and fifty dollars of the proposed increase. Reports from the other churches have not reached me at the time of this writing.

I verily believe that the meeting at Jackson marks an epoch in the history of our State, as do the similar meetings for the nation. Exulting in that great occasion, and rejoicing to be a part of it, I yet felt a sense of loss and depression.

My thought constantly went out to our great friend, and our irreparable loss. How his majestic presence would have towered in that great throng! How his marvelous voice would have filled and thrilled that vast audience of Mississippians, whom he loved so well, as he pleaded the cause of our Lord, whom he loved with a consuming devotion that burnt out his great heart while his sun was yet in its zenith!

"Great friend, past, present, and to be:
Loved deeper, darker understood:
Behold, I dream a dream of good
And mingle all the world with thee."

ECHOES OF THE SHREVEPORT CONVENTION.

The attendance, as a whole, upon the Convention was not gratifying, though the Methodist ministers in this section were well represented. The presiding elder of the Shreveport District, Rev. T. J. Warlick, was present at all the sessions, as also were a goodly number of his preachers. Nine of the pastors of the Ruston District were on hand, with several of their laymen. Haynesville was the best represented charge outside of Shreveport, having in attendance in addition to the pastor, Rev. W. G. Harbin, Mr. R. P. Dawson, and Mr. J. R. Beville.

The speakers, all, I think, fully met public expectation, and the audiences which heard them were large. Mr. P. H. Silver, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of New York, spoke impressively on "Missions—A Man's Work." Dr. John A. Rice, of New Orleans, delivered an address on "The Reflex Influence of Missions," which was optimistic and far-reaching in thought. The remarks of Hon. T. H. Yun were very entertaining and instructive, and his audience felt, too brief, and the deliverance of Rev. W. R. Hotchkiss, of Lambeth, British East Africa, was thrilling and indescribable. He held his audience spell-bound from start to finish, and it was the general verdict that truly "the best wine was kept back to the last."

At the close of the meeting denominational rallies were held. The Methodists assembled at the First M. E. Church, South, where an interesting service was conducted at which God was present in Pentecostal power. All of the denominations resolved to raise together $5,000 for foreign missions. The Methodists readily assumed half of that amount, the Baptists assumed $1,500 and the Presbyterians, $1,200. The resolutions were read by Dr. W. W. Pinson, and were substantially the same as those sent the Advocate from the Jackson (Miss.) convention

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The time for our League Conference is rapidly approaching. The program is now about complete and will be sent in a few days. We have, as before, held to our policy of using home talent principally. We will have Dr. H. M. DuBose and probably Mr. H. L. Disheroon, of Memphis. We hope to have one or more missionaries with us. The program will be full and we think no one can spend two days in the Conference without being much helped.

Now, as to our pledge for the Hiroshima Girls' School. We are coming slow on this. Mr. Walter Boswell, of Kosciusko, Miss., our fourth vice president, is working faithfully, but the Leagues are slow responding. It will be a shame on our Leagues if we do not raise this $1000 this year. This pledge is now more than a year old; the Mission Board has gone forward in the school work on our promise, and now we must not fail them. We give herewith a full list of contributors to this fund to the present.

Amounts paid by Leagues before Conference, June, 1909, and reported, are as follows: Winona, Senior and Junior, $40; Columbus, First Church, $25.15; Kosciusko, Senior, $25; Booneville, Senior and Junior, $60; West Point, $30; Amory, $50; Nettleton, $25; Grenada College, $5; Houston, Senior, Boys, and Y. L. L., $21.50; New Albany, $10; Water Valley, Jr., $5; Myrtle, $5; West, $5; Ripley, Juniors and Sunday School, $10; Coldwater, $5. Individuals: Rev. T. W. Lewis, $25; Mr. L. Lake, $10; Dr. A. S. Yarbrough, $10; Dr. Johnson, Greenwood, $5; Miss Harner, Okolona, $5; Mr. T. H. Bingham, $10; Mrs. T. H. Campbell, $5; Miss Bessie Critz, $1. Total, $458.67.

Following are amounts subscribed by Leagues at New Albany Conf., and paid since: Kosciusko, Senior, pledged $50, paid $8.50; Winona, pledged $25; Booneville, pledged $75, paid $50; Columbus, First Church, pledged $50, paid $50; West Point, pledged $25; New Albany, pledged $10, paid $10; Eupora (W. H. Moninger) pledged $10, paid $10; Corinth, South Side, paid $2.17.

The following have pledged: Louisville League, $26; Amory, $25; Pontotoc, $25; Okolona, Senior, $15; Iuka, $10; Senatobia, $25; Sallis, $15; Grenada College, $25; Houlika, $20; Myrtle, $5; Okolona, Junior, $10; Houston, $25; C. M. Bennett, $10; Shipman Boys, $25; Miss Bessie Herron, $5; W. L. Thomas, $5. Total amount pledged, $505. Total paid, $130.67.

If there is any mistake in the above statement, we will thank anyone to call attention to it. There are several leagues that have not yet subscribed to this special. We urge that every League subscribe some amount at once sending name and subscription, or better, cash, to Mr. Walter Boswell, Kosciusko, Miss., who will receipt for same. There may be Sunday schools and individuals that would like to have some part in helping the Kindergarten Department of the Hiroshima Girls' School in Japan, that is so sorely in need of funds at this time.

We recommend that leagues and churches and Sunday schools remember this worthy cause on Easter, either at morning or evening service. We hope to have $1000 in hand by Easter. J. H. HOLDER, Secretary League Board.

Church News

The Deaconess Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold a National Convention at Milwaukee May 19-22. The only speaker yet announced for the occasion is Bishop McIntyre, but an extended program is in process of preparation.

The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, of New York City, having failed to secure the services of Rev. J. H. Jowett, Birmingham, England, called Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of the Westminster Congregational Church, London, who also has declined. This congregation is said to pay the largest salary of any in the United States.

Last year the Protestant churches of Montgomery, Ala., paid to foreign missions $6,120. Inspired by the Laymen's Convention recently held there, they have pledged for 1910, $13,519. Of this amount, the Methodists subscribed $4,015. Everywhere the followers of Wesley are showing up in the forefront of this forward movement for the world's evangelization.

Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will deliver the Cole lectures at Vanderbilt University in April. The number of lectures will be six, and the subject will be "In the School of Christ." The Bishop is one of the most vigorous men intellectually in American Methodism, and doubtless his series of studies will be of exceptional merit.

Wofford College, will build a memorial hall in honor of Dr. James H. Carlisle, who for so long was the distinguished head of that institution. One generous Christian woman has contributed $5000 to the enterprise. This is a fitting tribute to South Carolina's foremost layman, who shed luster not only on that historic commonwealth, but also upon the entire South.

The Legislature of Maryland will be asked to change the name of the Woman's College of Baltimore to Goucher College, in honor of its founders, Dr. John Franklin Goucher and his deceased wife, Mary Cecelia Goucher. We regret to note that this widely known institution is burdened with debt, and that its revenues are not sufficient to meet its annual expenditures.

The noted Baptist minister, Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, died in Richmond, Va., on the 24th ult. His age was 73, and he had been in failing health for some years. In his palmy days Dr. Hawthorne was an orator of national reputation. His best work was probably done at Atlanta, where his superior pulpit ability attracted much attention. He was a Confederate soldier, and led thirty-one members of his Mobile congregation (where he was then stationed) into the Southern army.

Great is Birmingham Methodism. It embraces twenty-four pastoral charges, with a membership of 10,228, and with houses of worship valued at $436,433, and parsonages valued at $78,500. The gross gain in membership last year was 2100, and the net gain 900. The amount paid for foreign missions was $7,979, and for the support of pastors $29,152, an average salary of $1213. Still there are those who tell us that with the time limit in force Methodism cannot do anything in the cities.

The Paulist Fathers celebrated their Golden Jubilee in New York City in the first part of February. This order was established in 1558, by five seceders from the Protestant Episcopal Church, and is said to have been a result of the Oxford movement, which carried Newman, Manning, and other Anglicans into the Romish Church. The most active of its charter members was Father Hecker, who through the financial assistance of his brother, erected the present headquarters of the Paulists in New York City, and established the Catholic World, the most influential Roman Catholic monthly in the United States. Besides the New York headquarters, the order now has houses in Chicago, San Francisco, Winchester, Tenn., and Austin, Texas. Those belonging to it are perhaps the most active Romish propagandists in America. It is said to be their aim to make 30,000 converts a year.

Mr. Luther M. Tesch, field secretary of the Baraca class movement, spoke to a large audience, made up of representatives of all the Protestant Sunday schools of New Orleans, at the Coliseum Baptist Church, on the afternoon of Sunday, the 20th ult. The word, "Baraca," is taken from the Bible, and means blessed or happy. From the Times-Democrat's report of the distinguished speaker's address we take the following: "Then Mr. Tesch told of the organization of the Baraca movement by Marshall H. Hudson, at Syracuse, N. Y., in 1890.

Now thousands are connected with the work. Mr. Hudson saw a number of boys playing in the street on Sunday, and invited them into the church yard, where lumber was piled up, the church being under repairs. They said they got tired of Sunday school, as it was not interesting, and he agreed with them, and organized a class in the yard with six boys. Next Sunday he had eighteen, and the movement grew. In 1905 the International Sunday School Convention, at Toronto, sent for Mr. Hudson, his movement having spread rapidly in the meantime, and the adult Bible class department was organized, and it has grown throughout all the denominations all over the world. There have been 8349 classes organized in five years, and the movement has put 240,912 young men and women to studying God's Word. The motto is 'We Do Things.' The ladies have taken the title of Philathea, and their work is about the same as the work of the young men."

WOMAN'S CITY MISSION BOARD.

Reported for the Advocate.

At this meeting of the Board was the annual election of officers. The Board showed its approval of the past administration by unanimously re-electing all of the officers: President, Mrs. W. W. Carre; First Vice President, Mrs. D. C. Worrell; Second Vice President, Mrs. H. H. Ahrens; Recording Secretary, Mrs. A. A. Bartels; Treasurer, Mrs. E. E. Wood; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. J. B. Parker. Although Mrs. W. W. Carre asked to be relieved from the onerous duties of president, the Board refused to allow her resignation. She has faithfully and efficiently served in the capacity of president for eighteen years. We venture to say that there is not another woman's city mission board in all our church that has done more, and is doing more for the salvation of the lost than this Board is doing. Reports were read from the auxiliaries of Rayne Memorial, Louisiana Avenue, Carrollton, Parker Memorial, First and Second Churches and Mary Werlein.

The Board unanimously indorsed the memorial from the Woman's Board at Savannah, asking for equal rights of the male laity. Mrs. Carre announced that already one of the delegates from the Louisiana Conference to the General Conference was pledged to vote for this measure.

Mrs. Lily Meekin, the city missionary, gave her report, showing scores of destitute homes visited, the sick ministered to, and much temporal and spiritual relief given. She has been assisted in her visiting by Miss Mabel Whitehead.

Miss Ragland, the head resident deaconess of St. Mark's reported much relief work done. Four children had been placed in the orphanage and two patients carried to the hospital. The sewing class now has a regular attendance of more than forty every week. The cooking class is growing. The night classes in English are helpful to those who cannot speak the English language. Miss Duncan, nurse deaconess, reported the clinic work growing under the direction of Dr. Ada Kihlinger, and a vote of thanks was extended to the doctor for her efficient services.

W. F. M. S.

Reported for the Advocate.

It would be hard to learn just how many women in our Conference are in favor of equal rights for laymen and laywomen, because if you were to write and ask them, sending a stamp for reply, you would fail to get it. Personally, we have not had time to sound ourselves on the subject and see where we are at, but we do wish most earnestly that our women would line up to the privileges they already have. When we learn to do that, perhaps the brethren will grant us more.

Alexandria began the new year with four new members, and five new subscribers to Our Homes. Miss Minnie Martin, appointed at the last Board meeting to work among the mill town people of Alexandria District, is also working as pastors' assistant at First Church.

Shidell Auxiliary, one of the youngest in the State, secured two new members at their very first meeting after organization.

Noel's Chapel, Shreveport, has discovered and put into practice perpetual motion; they are never idle. Miss Belle Pennington writes: "We have assumed the responsibility of clothing an orphan; sent a box of linen to the Ruston Orphanage; donated food and clothing to the needy; visited the sick and strangers and sent flowers as messengers of love and hope to the convalescent." Wonder what First Church, in the same city, is doing? Miss Pennington knows how to report, and we thank her for clippings from the columns of her home paper.

Miss Ellen M. Stone, who was captured by the Turks a few years ago and ransomed by Uncle Sam, will be in Louisiana two weeks, beginning with March 3. Any auxiliary, Home or Foreign, wishing to secure her for one or more lectures, may do so by communicating with me. Her Sunday evening collections go to foreign missions. She will tell us of her experiences: "Old and New Turkey," "Temperance in the Balkans," and of our opportunities to help those people. Everybody will want to hear Miss Stone.

NEW ORLEANS UNION EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Reported for the Advocate.

One of the most interesting and successful meetings of the Union League was held at St. Mark's Hall on Tuesday night, Feb. 22. In the absence of the president, Mr. Arthur C. Day, the chair was occupied by the vice president, Dr. T. P. Bell. The devotional service was led by Mr. T. L. McKnight. Reports were read from the League Chapters of Carrollton, Epworth, First Church, Felicity, Louisiana Avenue, Mary Werlein, Parker Memorial and Second Church. There were no reports from the senior Leagues of Algiers and Rayne Memorial. After the business session a fine social was given under the direction of Mrs. Bessie Wager Roy, the third vice president. Some fine orchestra music was given by Mrs. Roy, Miss Wager, Mr. Roy, Mr. Wager and Miss Louise Muller. Mrs. A. Inman Townsley gave a reading. The program was one that was appreciated by all and one that was a compliment to Mrs. Roy, and to her department. Dainty and delicious refreshments were served by the workers of St. Mark's Hall. The next meeting of the Union will be held at the Carrollton Church on Tuesday, March 8, at 7:45 p.m.

NEW ORLEANS LAYMEN.

The Laymen of New Orleans Methodism met in the social hall of First Methodist Church Tuesday night, Feb. 22, to carry out the plan suggested by the great Missionary Conference recently held in the city. Dr. Brown, Follow-up secretary of the National Laymen's Movement, was present and gave direction to the discussion, and to the methods adopted for making a thorough canvass of the entire membership of the city. There was not only unanimity, but enthusiasm in the adoption of the resolution to raise one dollar for each of the 2730 members, not including what may be given through the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. The amount given last year was only $893, or 32 cents per member. Each congregation reported plans already under way for active co-operation, and the results seem assured. Following the business, the young ladies of First Church served delicious refreshments.

BISHOP CHARLES BETTS GALLOWAY.

(A memoir read by the Rev. W. B. Murrah, D.D., LL.D., at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, and published at the request of that body.)

The memory of a great man is an abiding inspiration; the memory of a good man is a never-ceasing benediction; the memory of a great and good man is a priceless legacy.

Our memorials should enshrine noble virtues, for, after all, the men who enrich the world are the men who show us how to live. Let selfishness and vain-glory be forgotten; let the self-sacrifice of love, and unwavering loyalty to duty live in memory forever.

When the spirit of Bishop Charles B. Galloway left his home on earth and passed through the gates to his home in heaven, a solemn hush settled down over the city of Jackson, where he had lived so long and was so ardently loved. Customary activities were suspended, and the mourners, literally, went about the streets.

When the tidings of his death went abroad, messengers from all sections of our land came to the stricken family, showing how widespread was the sorrow that prevailed.

Though we are now removed by more than six months from the day when he went away, not to come back any more, the lapse of time intensifies rather than softens our sense of irreparable loss.

It is pre-eminently fitting, therefore, that we should pause in the midst of our Conference proceedings to give expression to our appreciation of his exalted worth, and record our estimate of his illustrious character.

He was bound to us by ties peculiar and tender. The place of his nativity, and the field of his first pastoral activities, are in the territory embraced in our bounds, and when the North Mississippi Conference was organized in the year 1870, his name appeared in the list of those who were then received into full connection. He was, in an unusual sense, our Bishop, because he was so truly our brother and friend.

Charles Betts Galloway was born in the town of Kosciusko, Miss., on the 1st day of September, 1849. He spent the days of childhood and early youth amid the influences of a cultivated home. All of the advantages which the schools in the vicinity of his home afforded he eagerly improved, and was prepared to enter the University of Mississippi at the early age of 15.

While a student at this institution, he was radically converted, and ever afterward rejoiced in the assurance of conscious salvation. With his conversion there came the conviction, strong and imperative, that it was his duty to preach the gospel. There is no evidence that he sought to stifle the voice that called him to this high mission. It is doubtful whether, even in thought, he considered any sacrifice he had to make. He counted it all joy to give himself, without reservation, to the proclamation of the gospel of Christ.

Graduated by the University to the degree of bachelor of arts before he was 19 years of age, he entered at once upon his life-work. He was licensed to preach in the year 1868, and then by regular gradations he passed through the successive stages and experiences of an itinerant Methodist preacher, and was called to the office of bishop in 1886, in the 37th year of his life—the youngest man ever elevated to that high office in the M. E. Church, South. A great preacher, a mold of thought in one of the most eventful half centuries in the history of civilization; a bold, intrepid and judicious leader in the marvelous temperance reform of his times; a conspicuous friend and trusted guide of the negroes of the South in all worthy endeavor; a wise, resourceful Bishop, and a noble Christian patriot, world wide in his sympathies—these are the titles of Charles B. Galloway to public distinction and recognition.

His distinctive pastoral service extends over a period of fourteen years from 1868 to 1882. Four years were devoted to journalism as the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and twenty-three years to the office and work of a bishop in the Church of God. It would require the compass of a large volume to recount the heroic labors of these forty-one years. Measured by the calendar, his life seems short; measured by achievements, it was long.

When we would delineate the features which marked the character of some choice spirit, we often impose restraint upon ourselves lest we appear to employ the language of exaggeration. But when we think of the qualities which characterize our noble, gifted friend, we are not embarrassed by any fear of this kind. What would appear fulsome and extravagant when applied to others seems moderate and inadequate when applied to him.

If we think of the flaming messenger of the cross, memory recalls the majestic form, the graceful bearing and imposing mien; the flashing eye, the matchless voice, the mighty thought, the pleading pathos, and the burning eloquence of the incomparable orator.

If we turn to contemplate the Christian citizen, there comes before us the brave defender of the right, and the uncompromising foe of the wrong—faithful to every obligation, private and public—the chivalrous patriot with a high and delicate sense of honor which esteemed a stain upon his country as a personal disgrace.

If we recall the husband and father, "diligent to frame and fashion himself and his family according to the doctrine of Christ," we are reminded of the household where love reigned supreme, and the sweet influences of domestic affection made the ideal home.

The life history of Bishop Galloway reveals many imitable qualities, and, for that reason, his character is singularly rich in helpful, inspiring lessons. His development was normal—rapid, it is true, so rapid, indeed, as almost to startle and bewilder, but always along natural lines. He had a great soul because he fed on the bread of life. He had a broad, fertile and masterful mind because he nourished it by earnest study and wide reading. He had a strong, vigorous body, because he abstained in early youth from the habits and dissipations which undermine and destroy the physical being. So well organized in the harmonious blending in right relation of the faculties and powers of being, he was, in a marked degree, free from eccentricities. His poise and self-mastery enabled him to preserve an attitude toward others which secured freedom from contentions and rivalries, and made everybody glad to see him promoted.

He made friends everywhere he was known, and among all classes; and disarmed or won over enemies, if he had any, with wonderful facility. This, in part, was accounted for by a broad humanity—a natural and cultivated interest in life as life, and in men as men. It was pre-eminently true of him that he rejoiced with them that rejoiced and wept with them that wept.

Bishop Galloway was fortunate in the time and circumstances of his birth: A child before our great Civil War, and thus in sympathy with the kindest views regarding slavery and ante-bellum conditions generally; a boy during the war and the pre-reconstruction period, and thus impressed with the war sentiment and romantic devotion to the lost cause; a man during reconstruction and subsequent trying conditions in the South—being thus able to unite the Southerner's kindness to the negro as an individual, with the really patriotic and benevolent view of the broad-minded statesman in his interest in the negro as a race.

Of no one could it be said with more of truth, that he led men because he loved man; and that he was rarely gifted as a judge of men by reason of his sympathy with men.

His belief in men made him an optimist of the most pronounced type, and he never wavered in the conviction that right would triumph over wrong.

One of the very striking things about Bishop Galloway's personality was his sense of humor, but when it found expression it was always kindly, clean, and wholesome. This was one of the elements which made him so charming socially. A most entertaining conversationalist, he was never the hero of his narratives. He never recounted his own exploits.

He was one of the happiest of men, and it was his chief delight to make others happy.

The explanation of Bishop Galloway's illustrious career is to be found largely in the fact that he had ever before him a lofty aim. In the best sense he aspired after high attainments that the sphere of his usefulness might be broadened. He coveted earnestly the best gifts. He had an exalted conception of the dignity of human nature; and nothing short of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus could fill the measure of his soul. He saw in the work of Christ absolute perfection. Here was atonement for sin. Here was God reconciling the world unto himself by the death of his Son. Here were heaven and earth brought into communication and divine influences and agencies literally subject to his command. And as he contemplated the vast resources of the kingdom of heaven, he realized the boundless possibilities of humanity in Jesus Christ.

In seeking to realize in himself this high ideal as a minister of Christ he exhibited, in his extraordinary career, the unusual combination of conservatism and aggressiveness.

He held on to old truths with singular tenacity. The fundamental principles of Christianity were so firmly fixed in his convictions that he did not regard them as open to debate. He had the most profound respect for genuine scholarship, and did not fear the most searching investigation. When he talked with those who enjoyed his confidence, of his views respecting modern research and biblical criticism, it was always with the result that he would express his abiding faith in the things he had believed from the beginning. He was a great reader; understood the trend of modern thought; exercised the broadest mental hospitality, and after surveying the whole field he would exclaim, with a jubilant note, "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure."

Conservative though he was to a degree so marked, he was as aggressive as a radical. He believed in change, when change meant improvement. He was impatient of anything like stagnation.

Bishop Galloway was very pronounced in his views respecting a preacher's relation to public affairs. He did not believe that a minister of the Gospel of Christ should have anything to do with partisan politics; but that he should have much to do with policies as they affected the well being of society. He was ready at all times to throw the force of his personality into movements looking to the promotion of moral reforms. His fidelity to duty in public or private station was one of his most conspicuous traits. He counted no privation too great if duty demanded the sacrifice; he would face any peril rather than desert his post.

While the thought that our matchless leader will not appear again in our midst to cheer and inspire overwhelms us with grief, may we not say that for him, possibly, he was fortunate in the time of his death? He was saved from all conscious suffering; had not wholly lost his power—escaped the disappointment and mortification of lingering disease, and years of decadence—a condition peculiarly trying to the successful orator.

And then he was at home. His loving wife and noble son were by his side, while life-long friends stood about his bed.

The knightly herald of truth, after travelling over continents, across seas, around the world, came home to lie down and rest.

Calmly, serenely, peacefully, he went to sleep; and just as the dawn of a new day was flooding the earth with light, he opened his eyes in heaven. We will not speak of him as dead; we will not think of him as dead, for we know that they who believe in Jesus Christ as he did shall never die.

REV. K. A. JONES.

Rev. K. A. Jones, of the North Mississippi Conference, died at the home of his son, Captain Harvey Jones, in the town of Sumner, Miss., on the morning of Wednesday, Feb. 16, 1910. He had been quite sick, but seemed improving, and was contemplating a visit to his son, Dr. Ransom Jones, at Sessums. His passing away was sudden and unexpected. Brother Jones took a superannuate relation at the last session of our Conference at Okolona, having been in the active ministry some fifty-three or fifty-four years. He was a man of most genial and companionable spirit; of fine personal appearance, and an able preacher of the gospel. His body was conveyed to Crawford, Miss., where he had served as pastor some years ago. Appropriate funeral services were conducted in the Methodist Church by Rev. T. H. Dorsey, assisted by the pastor, Rev. R. M. Evans, the writer, and Rev. N. G. Augustus. He was buried near the resting-place of his beloved wife and a daughter, Mrs. Celia Jones, Waller. All of his children (save one son in Arkansas), four sons and two daughters, were present at the funeral service. In deep sorrow we record the sad passing from us of our dear friend and brother. An appropriate memoir, we hope, will be furnished for the columns of the Advocate.

SHINE JUST WHERE YOU ARE.

Don't waste your time in longing
For bright, impossible things;
Don't sit supinely yearning
For the swiftness of angel wings.
Don't spurn to be a rushlight,
Because you are not a star;
But brighten some bit of darkness
By shining just where you are.
There is need of the tiniest candle,
As well as the garish sun;
The humblest deed is ennobled
When it is worthily done;
You may never be called to brighten
The darkened regions afar;
So fill for the day your mission
By shining just where you are.

—John Hay.

HELPING THE HORSE.

It was cold wintry weather and the street had become coated with ice. This made it very hard pulling for the horses, especially up the hill near where Robbie lived.

"Papa," said Robbie, when his father came home that evening, "I helped a horse pull a load of coal up the hill to-day."

"How did you do that?" inquired his father.

"Why, it was just this way," answered Robbie. "The hill was covered with ice and the horse was slipping all around, but I went and got some ashes and sprinkled them under the horse's feet, and all the way to the top of the hill. The driver thanked me, too, and said that I had helped to pull that load of coal up the hill."

"Well, I think you did, myself," was the reply, "and I'm very glad my little boy is ready to help in a case like that. Keep that up as long as you live, Robbie, for it's a noble thing to help poor dumb animals.—Apples of Gold."

LONG-LIVED ANIMALS.

The maximum length of life of some of the best known animals is as follows: The horse lives to a maximum of 35 years, and the donkey a like period; the dog does not exceed 25 years, the rabbit from 8 to 10, the goose 30, the duck, hen and turkey a dozen years.

Among the animals having the best established reputations for longevity are: the crow, which lives 100 years; the parrot and the elephant, which attain an age of 150 years. Carp, on the other hand, appear to have usurped their reputation, which was based on ill-understood facts from Chantilly and Fontainebleau. They rarely become centenarians. The tortoise appears to be the animal that lives the longest, and the record of longevity is surely held by one weighing 250 kilograms, which was presented in 1904 to the London Zoological Gardens by Walter de Rothschild, and which is said to have been born in 1750.—Selected.

A SENSE OF HONOR.

There were three boys in the Lincoln High School, willing, gay, eager, to work the golden days of vacation away—three to whom the offered opportunity seemed the stepping-stone to the success in life upon which their hearts were set. To the other scholars the notice had not appealed at all. Indeed, it was scarcely inviting. "Wanted—During vacation, boy for lawyer's office. Must possess sense of honor. Small compensation." To be sure, the principal, as he read the notice out, had enlarged upon the meaning of the terse words. "It would mean a great deal," he explained, to the boy whose ambition lies in that direction. To be associated with Stanley Granger would insure success. And, though I am permitted to say little, I have no doubt that from this small beginning, great things may result."

Shortly before the end of the term, the three boys who had signified their intention of responding to the great lawyer's eccentric message, were told that he would see them, separately, upon a certain day.

One by one the principal called them into the hall. Jimmie Bushnell was first. After a short time he returned, flushed and distressed. Dennis Cook went forth next. He, too, came back, sullen, unsuccessful. And then with a queer, choked feeling John Hartford heard the principal call his name.

It meant a great deal to him—more than to both the others together. Even the "small compensation" was something to him, more than any one guessed. He walked through the long room, feeling sure that certain failure lay before him. How could he expect success where two of the brightest scholars had failed? And his mother would be disappointed; that was the hardest thought of all.

In the cool, wide hall, the principal waited, a white envelope in his hand. He fingered it as he stood, silent, watching the boy's face.

"John," he said, after that moment of searching scrutiny, "Mr. Granger will see you in my office. He will ask you some questions which I have prepared. The questions and answers are here. I hope and think you may succeed where the others failed," and he passed the envelope to him.

There was a long hall to cross, then two flights of stairs to descend. As John walked along, slowly and thoughtfully, he realized how little chance he stood, and of what moment to him the small failure would be. And then the principal's words recurred to him—"the questions and answers are here." "And answers! And answers!" His feet kept time to the two words.

He tapped at the office door. There was no answer. He opened the door and went in. He sat down on the chair before the desk and laid the envelope on it—unsealed. It seemed to him that he had always known it was; that he had always been sitting there, before the principal's desk, with the letter upon which so much depended, open before him. The temptation was strong upon him. Already his brown hand reached for the clue the little envelope held, but a memory came to him of the lawyer's notice, and then another memory, older, unforgotten, sacred. Somewhere in his brains the words were tucked away, five-year-old words, spoken by lips that would speak no more.

"But I hope my boy will have a sense of honor—in little things and in great. Common honesty is one thing, but honor in little things is another and a rarer one—the sense of honor that would not allow one to read the letter of another, or listen, or do anything small or mean."

The grave voice of his father seemed to say the words over again, clearly and distinctly. John's heart lightened as he heard. What a price he had been tempted to pay for success! Like most things, it can be purchased too high.

"So," said a voice behind him.

He started and turning looked into the lawyer's eyes with his own clear ones.

"Ah-h!" said Stanley Granger. "Now we'll have those questions and answers," and he drew the sheet of paper from the little envelope and smiled at the boy over his glasses.

"No. 1. Have I a sense of honor?" Answer: "No. I could not be trusted, for I have read a letter not intended for myself."

Stanley Granger laughed, and tore the paper across. "We'll dispense with the rest, my boy, though I read the wholesome advice they contained to the others. Neither of them could look me in the eye when I came in. Now, John—I believe your name is John? Yes? Well, I suppose I seem eccentric to you in the test I have made. And yet, it is not so. The boy who will make law his life-work does so with immense possibilities for good or ill. Perhaps that can be said of most things, and yet, it seems to me particularly so of the law. So strongly do I feel on the subject, that I would not reach a finger out to help one in this pursuit, were the sense of honor missing."

"I don't know whether I have it, sir," stammered John. "I wanted to look."

"Tut!" answered the other; "any one would have wanted to look. The question is, as to whether you would or would not. Now this vacation work may seem a little thing—"

"Oh, no," interrupted John.

"Well, large or small, no matter. After high school you had hoped for college, had you not?"

"I had wished to go," answered John.

"Without much hope?"

"Without much hope," echoed John.

"If we get on together as well as I expect, I think I can see my way clear to help you in this. And afterwards, if you like, you shall study law with me. When I was about your age, some one gave me just the chance I am giving you. As I could, I have passed that helping hand along—sometimes with, sometimes without, success; but I think in this case, I shall not be disappointed."

He reached out his hand, and John put his own in it, looking what he did not say into Stanley Granger's eyes: "Oh, sir!" he faltered, and then under his breath, "Oh, father!" But the great lawyer did not hear the last words; nor would he have understood.—Ida Alexander.

Editorial.

IN REPLY TO BROTHER BROYLES.

Elsewhere in this issue we publish a communication from the Rev. L. M. Broyles, in which he seeks to controvert our recent editorial on "The Woman's Rights Memorial." As a general rule, we think it is unwise for an editor to enter into discussion with his contributors, but the article referred to is so direct in its criticisms and so startling in some of its statements that we think we are justified in departing from our customary practice and commenting upon it.

Brother Broyles begins his discussion by frankly admitting that the woman's memorial asks for what is contrary to "apostolic and primitive precedent." But this fact gives him little trouble. He imperiously brushes it aside as if the teaching and example of the apostles were matters of trivial consequence. Read what he says: "But what if it is true? Are precedents to last always? Are rules and creeds—and even whole systems—peculiar and applicable to a particular age, to bind and govern through all after ages? I believe that the progress of the Church in the future is to be secured by appealing to the forces regnant in that future rather than by everlastingly harking back to apostolic times for precedents and usages. They of that time, we of this."

This is a most extraordinary statement to emanate from the pen of a Methodist preacher. Will Brother Broyles enumerate some of the valuable teachings and practices of the modern Church which have no connection with the past? The very gospel that he proclaims fell from the lips of the Galilean more than 1,900 years ago. The practice of preaching goes back of the Christian era and is almost as old as the history of man. Sacred song has been observed as a part of public worship practically ever since the race left its Edenic home, and, for aught we know, it may have antedated the fall. The stamp of centuries is upon the prayer meeting, upon secret prayer, and the sacraments. Even the Sunday school is merely an expedient to supply the deficiency of proper religious instruction in the homes of this boasted modern day; and the Laymen's Movement is simply an effort to get the men of the twentieth century to bestir themselves in Christian activities as did those of the first century.

Pray tell us in what respect the Church of this age is superior to that of the apostolic period? It is not superior to it in faith; it is not more plentifully endowed with power; it is not possessed of a wider vision, for they sought to give "the gospel to every creature;" it is not larger in its philanthropy, for "they sold their possessions and had all things in common;" it is not more missionary in spirit, for the apostle Paul and his coadjutors were the greatest missionaries of all time, and what they wrought with their meagre resources put our achievements to shame; it is not producing more majestic men, for where on the planet can be found a pope, or cardinal, or bishop, or preacher equal to Paul, or Peter, or Saint John?

Brother Broyles thinks that the people of this time should be allowed to construct their own creeds. We have seen some of the suggested modern creeds. We have seen them with the whole gospel of John left out, with the resurrection of Christ repudiated, with our Lord shorn of his divinity and the miraculous eliminated from his life, and with the human body left to sleep forever in the tomb, with no promise of a coming resurrection. No, no; we want no new teaching. Truth in all realms is unchangeable and eternal. There are some things that are forever settled. The mathematician can never eliminate from mathematical science the multiplication table, the binomial theorem and other principles which lie at its foundation. The law of gravity and that of the conservation of forces will be true as long as the world shall last. And so in religion what was true in the beginning, is true now, and will never cease to be true. The gospel of Christ is full and complete, as he spoke it. It is "the faith once delivered unto the saints." No man can add to it—it needs no human embellishment. The future work of Christianity is not to discover something new that will startle and enlighten the nations, but to tell "the old, old story" to the millions of mankind and influence them to accept it and live its principles until it shall uplift the race and wreath the world in the light of millennial glory.

We do not contend that the apostles gave minute directions as to every detail of church government, or prescribed in every instance specific methods of work which may not be varied. That they did not do. But they did give instruction as to what is essential and fundamental in the Christian Church, and the things which they have thus enjoined upon the disciples of Christ, we have no right to abrogate. Concerning nothing was Paul more positive, explicit and authoritative than in the general position which he assigned woman in the Church and family, and he certainly is not lacking in "presumption" who thinks he has a sufficiency of inspiration to revoke the teaching of the greatest of the apostles on this subject.

Brother Broyles ventures to inform us that "this movement was not born out of worldly ambition and lust for power." Who has charged that it was? Not we; for the realm of motive is one we seldom dare to enter. Our good brother seems to be at home in that realm, and we thank him for the information.

He represents us as saying: "This movement does not represent the larger part of the womanhood of the Church." We made no such dogmatic statement. We said, "Nor do we believe it voices the sentiment of the larger part of the womanhood of the Church." It appears to be a minority measure. He thinks we are "presumptuous" to express such an opinion since the Woman's Home Mission Board has taken action. Does he not know that the women themselves are divided in opinion as to the strength of this movement? In this issue of the Advocate is a statement from a leading Louisiana worker who says she does not know how the women of this State stand on the subject. In the Southern Christian Advocate of last week, Mrs. James W. Kilgo states that she thinks a large majority of the women of South Carolina do not favor it, and Mrs. J. W. Perry, the second vice-president of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, has written an able communication in which she expresses the view that the memorial does not reflect the sentiment of the womanhood of the Church. Brother Broyles speaks of the "framers of this memorial as coming from all sections." Will he kindly tell us how many were present, how many voted, by what majority the measure was adopted, and to what extent these representatives had conferred with the women at home before they took action? Since he assumes to speak with authority, we ask him to give us facts instead of glittering generalities.

He finds fault with our statement that the General Conference should stamp its disapproval quickly upon the movement. Perhaps we should not have used that word. We did not mean that the women should not be given a respectful hearing, but that we consider the measure so palpably unwise that there should be no difficulty in reaching a prompt conclusion concerning it.

Again, the writer tells us that he is not afraid of the "untrammeled" woman. We do not know what he means by that expression; but if he means the mannish woman, the astride woman, the stump-orator woman, the suffragette woman, he is welcome to his choice. For our part, we prefer the Southern woman, dignified, reserved, and modest, with no desire to intrude into unwomanly spheres. They were the crowning glory of the Old South, and are still Dixie's brightest ornament. We trust that they will never be different, and that our men will never lose that chivalry toward them which Hall Caine, the great writer, has affirmed to be unequalled anywhere on the globe. This courteous bearing may be sneered at by those unhappily afflicted with the bacilli of pestiferous modernism, but, in our judgment, it is infinitely preferable to the indifference and rudeness exhibited toward woman by the men of other climes. But still again, Brother Broyles observes: "Man and woman are a unit. Therefore, in the world's work the mere accident or difference of sex is not to be considered." Strange words, these. Does he mean to say that in the division of duties between man and woman, their fitness, their aptitudes, are not to be taken into consideration? Does he mean to say that women should shoulder rifles and go out to fight their country's battles as the men do? or that men should don dresses and sew with needles as the ladies do? We hope that Brother Broyles will write again and amplify this point. His meaning is not quite clear to us.

Finally, he insists that "in the advancing kingdom of Christ woman shall be granted all the rights and representation which were hers in the divine person." Has she not these already? Does not the atonement in all its fullness avail for her? Has she not the right to forgiveness, the right of service, the right to the divine fellowship of the Holy Spirit, and the right to the heavenly home? If there is aught else that belongs of right to her, why did not the Savior indicate it when he was upon earth? In choosing the twelve apostles, why did he not make one a woman? In sending out the seventy, why did he not choose some women to go? Why did he commit the government of his kingdom into the hands of men?

VERMILION REMAINS DRY.

Despite the loud boastings of the "antis," Vermilion Parish remains in the prohibition column. We congratulate our temperance friends on this splendid victory. Petitions are being circulated about Kentwood and elsewhere asking for an opportunity to vote out the dramshop. Rev. J. I. Smylie, of Mansfield, has been elected superintendent of the Anti-saloon League of the State, and the prohibition forces of Louisiana generally are becoming more active. Let the good work go on until this proud commonwealth shall march abreast of her sister Southern States in carrying forward the cause of temperance reform.

GALLOWAY MEMORIAL LOAN FUND.

We desire to call special attention to the announcement concerning the observance of "Church Extension Loan Fund Day" in Mississippi by the presidents of the two Conference Boards in that State. It is fixed for the second Sunday in April, or as near thereto as practicable. This movement is entered upon with the authority and sanction of the General Board of Church Extension, which is urgently in need of means to meet the pressing demands made upon it, and it is of exceptional interest, in view of the fact that the money thus raised is to constitute a perpetual Loan Fund in honor of Bishop Galloway. It will be administered by the General Board, but will be available to meet the needs of our own territory first. Certainly, this cause should appeal strongly to our preachers and people in Mississippi. It furnishes an opportunity to render substantial service to the Methodism of the commonwealth, and at the same time honor her greatest and most illustrious son. Other Bishops have had such funds raised and named for them as testimonials of appreciation, and it should be counted a privilege to thus attest our love for him who lived and wrought so heroically among us, and whose fame is wider than the English-speaking world. Let every presiding elder take the matter up with his preachers at once; let every pastor begin immediately to arrange for the observance of the day, and let every congregation and Sunday school contribute to this worthy cause. This movement can be, and ought to be, made a great success.

CIRCULATE THE ADVOCATE.

Have you spoken to your people lately about the Conference organ? If not, will you not kindly do so? We do not mean simply to refer to it from the pulpit; that is well; but will you not in your pastoral visitation call attention to it, and commend it, if you feel that you can conscientiously? Our reliance is chiefly upon the pastors, and the measure of our success in circulating the Advocate will be determined principally by the extent to which they seek to help us. We desire to say to the constituency of the paper that we do not believe there is a periodical anywhere that has a more faithful publisher. His heart is in the work, and he spares no effort to serve us well. He richly deserves the hearty and active support of all the Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana. Shall we not give it to him? Let us all unite and try to make the month of March a "record-breaker" in the number of subscriptions secured. The General Conference will soon be on hand, and the people will want to know what the great law-making body of Methodism is doing. The editor is a delegate, and, in addition to giving a synopsis of the proceedings, the Advocate will furnish weekly first-hand notes, fresh from the seat of the great assembly. Let us at once begin to forge forward toward the 10,000 mark. Who will be the first to help us?

PERSONAL.

Rev. and Mrs. T. H. Dorsey, of West Point, Miss., entertained the Epworth Leaguers of that city at the parsonage on Monday evening, the 21st ult.

The W. C. T. U. of Meridian, Miss., recently celebrated the anniversary of the death of Miss Frances E. Willard with appropriate exercises at the home of Mrs. J. E. Watts.

Under the capable leadership of Dr. J. G. Snelling, the Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, is reported to be making marked progress. The membership is rapidly increasing, and plans are on foot for the erection of a costly and beautiful house of worship.

The Arcadia, La., congregation, led by their faithful pastor, Rev. R. O. Weir, have gone to work to rebuild the church recently destroyed by fire at that place. It is expected that the structure will be ready for use by June.

We have heard from several sources that Dr. J. A. Rice's address at the Shreveport meeting was a stirring message, which elicited much approval. He is a man of scholarship and force, whose platform utterances invariably command attention.

Rev. Hilary Westbrook, of Oakville, Miss., writes: "Our work is moving along nicely. Our presiding elder, the Rev. W. B. Jones, was with us on Feb. 19 and 20, and preached two able sermons, which were highly appreciated. The pastor and his people are hopeful of a good year."

From Osyka, Miss., has come a communication from Rev. Lloyd Decell, inclosing a check and the names of several subscribers to the Advocate. Among other things, he says: "I am delighted with this, my first work. May the Lord bless our young friend and make his labors fruitful."

Mrs. Janie H. Wiggil, Junior Epworth League Superintendent of the North Mississippi Conference, calls our attention to the fact that in printing her notice to the Leaguers last week we failed to give her address. It is Shannon, Miss., where she may be reached by those having occasion to write her.

We are gratified to be informed that Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, who has been ill and in the Alexandria sanitarium for quite a while, is much improved, and will leave on March 2d to rest and travel until his health is recovered sufficiently for him to resume his work. His friends are requested to pray for him.

Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, of Waynesville, Miss., has forwarded a fine list of subscribers, for which we heartily thank him. At the close of his letter he states: "Our work is progressing finely, and we shall be able to make a gratifying report to our Quarterly Conference, which is to convene this week."

Rev. H. R. Singleton is accomplishing substantial results in his pastorate at Alexandria, La. All departments of the church are working energetically, and a debt of $7000. has been wiped out. As an attestation of their appreciation of the quality of service which they are receiving, the stewards have increased the pastor's salary to $2000.

The preachers of the Alexandria (La.) District are having a meeting this week at Colfax. We thank the presiding elder, Rev. Paul M. Brown, for a courteous invitation to be present, which we should have been delighted to accept but for an unpleasant indisposition, due to a touch of la grippe. We wish the brethren a pleasant and profitable session.

Rev. C. W. Bailey, of Courtland, Miss., sounds an optimistic note from his field of labor. Though sleets and snows have abounded and congregations have been small, he has met all of his appointments, and has been especially active in promoting the cause of matrimony. He is expectant of a larger general activity with the opening of spring.

Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn., on the occasion of the late Laymen's Convention at Shreveport, publicly complimented the pastor's report of the work being done in the interest of the Laymen's Movement in the Haynesville charge. The preacher in charge there is the Rev. W. T. Woodward, and the lay leader is Rev. W. G. Harbin, L. P.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Como, Miss., passed through the city last week en route home from the Laymen's Conference at Dallas. While here he mailed us a card expressing his regret at not seeing us. We assure him that that feeling of regret is doubly reciprocated. We should have been happy to shake the hand of this trusted and long-time friend.

Rev. John L. Sutton, of this city, has informed us that we were in error last week in speaking of Mrs. Ballington Booth as a leader in the Salvation Army. She has great respect for that arm of service, but the work which lies upon her heart and to which she is giving all her strength and energy is that of prison reform. We are glad to make this correction.

That faithful pastor, Rev. J. W. Booth, who is in the habit of succeeding in what he undertakes, expects to dedicate his church at DeRidder, La., on March 27th. He has kindly invited the editor to preach on that occasion, which he has consented to do, Providence permitting. We shall be pleased to see something of the Creole State outside of New Orleans, and to meet this "strayed-off" Mississippi pian and his worthy flock.

We regret to be informed that Rev. S. D. Howard, of Eunice, La., has serious sickness in his home. His son, George, has been down with an attack of malaria and pneumonia for more than two weeks, and on the 22d ult. was still dangerously ill. Brother Howard has been unable to meet his appointments for two Sundays, and is thoroughly worn out from nursing and the loss of sleep. He asks the prayers of the readers of the Advocate for his stricken son.

A very interesting program was given at the Old Ladies' Home, in Jackson, Miss., on Thursday evening, Feb. 24th, when the portraits of two liberal benefactors of the institution were unveiled. One was that of Mr. Sam Livingston, who donated the lot on which the home is built, and the other was that of the late Mrs. R. W. Millsaps, who contributed largely of her means to the Home and encouraged the enterprise at all times by her sympathy and interest.

Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, of Starkville, Miss., recently favored us with a copy of "The Starkville Advocate," a neat little monthly which he is publishing in the interest of his congregation. The names adorning its columns were nearly all quite familiar and awakened in our mind a flood of happy memories. After the perusal of his paper, we felt not a little like bantering Brother Brogan to swap jobs with him. Truly, he serves a choice and charming people.

Rev. W. D. McCullough, of Leland, Miss., reports encouragingly of the outlook in that field. Unable to obtain possession of the parsonage purchased, on account of its having been previously rented, his flock have leased for him a comfortable domicile in which he is now located. The Home Mission Society has supplied him with needed furniture, the stewards have increased the assessment for the pastor, and the people have given him a generous "pounding."

That genial gentleman and efficient laborer, Rev. W. S. Shipman, of Cleveland, Miss., is bringing things to pass in his charge. He has organized a Junior Epworth League with 40 members; has set his Sunday school to booming and made 93 pastoral visits. We regret to hear that Mrs. Shipman's health is not robust, but notwithstanding, she seems to be keeping step with her industrious husband, having made 75 visits in the interest of the work. We sincerely hope that she will soon become stronger.

Information has reached us that the Hon. Charles Scott, of Rosedale, and his associate, Mr. E. H. Woods, have offered Mr. Robert N. Somerville, of Greenville, Miss., a full partnership in the large and lucrative law practice of that well known firm. Mr. Somerville has signified his acceptance and will have charge of the office at Cleveland, Miss. He is a young man of fine character and attainments, having been graduated from the University of Mississippi, and having studied law at Washington, D. C., while serving as the private secretary of Congressman B. G. Humphreys. We predict for our gifted young friend a growing and brilliant legal career.

In this issue of the Advocate appears a beautiful tribute to Bishop Galloway from the gifted pen of Dr. W. B. Murrah, who writes nearly as well as he speaks. Dr. Murrah was perhaps closer to Methodism's fallen leader than any other minister in the Church. They labored side by side for the upbuilding of Millsaps College, and each loved and thoroughly trusted the other. We have never heard a more eloquent and masterful discussion of a great character than that which Dr. Murrah delivered in a number of places in Mississippi, in appreciation of his translated friend soon after he went from us. We sincerely wish that great address could be reproduced, published and preserved.

We acknowledge the reception of copies of the journals of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences. They are neatly printed, well arranged and in every respect up to their usual high standard. Brothers Watkins and Countiss are masters in the secretarial art, and deserve the thanks of the brethren for the immense amount of gratuitous labor performed in bringing out these annuals, as also do some of their assistants, especially the statistical secretaries. In this connection, it may not be out of place to remark that Dr. Watkins is the present secretary of the General Conference, which position he is fitted in every way not only to fill, but to adorn.

In the death of Mr. B. L. Lee, of Trihette, Miss., which occurred suddenly and unexpectedly at Port Gibson (where he had gone on business) on Feb. 21, Mississippi and Washington County lost a worthy and useful citizen. Though not a member of our Church, for some years he had been attending its services and was a liberal contributor to its support. We knew him, and respected and esteemed him. Genial, kind-hearted and generous, he had many friends, and will be sorely missed. May God comfort the bereaved ones now howled low beneath the weight of sorrow, and may the flowers bloom sweetly, and the winds blow softly where our fallen brother sleeps!

It is not at all our purpose to undertake to answer the communication of Sister H. T. Singleton, which may be read on another page. We are quite willing to let it stand or fall upon its own merit. But there is one weak link in the glittering chain of her argument which she ought to remove or repair. After claiming that there are a number of women who are acting as stewards and filling other offices in the church, she says: "All we ask is that the General Conference make legal what the women are already doing in many places." Unless we misunderstand our sisters, this is not all they ask. On the contrary, they are asking for seats in the Annual Conference and the General Conference, and the rights of laymen would also include the right to connectional position.

ERRATA.

Mr. Editor: In your issue of last week I note that I am chargeable with a grave error (and it is mine alone) in my reference to the immortal Burns as the "Bard of Erin." Some years ago I should have said that it was only a slip of the pen; now, I suppose, it is in order to charge it to the tricky typewriter. Well, if the land of the Lochs will forgive me, I know the country of the shamrock will bring no railing accusation. The accident of birth, it is true, gives Robert to the Scots, but his sympathetic nature makes him the kinsman of every man.

THE DAILY ADVOCATE.

A Daily Advocate will be issued at Asheville, N. C., during the session of the General Conference in May. Dr. J. M. Moore will have charge of the editorial department, assisted by experienced and skillful stenographic reporters. Daily reports of the proceedings will be published, of the speeches as well as the reports from committees, memorials, the fraternal addresses, etc., and many items of interest as they develop from day to day. The General Conference will have before it many subjects of interest to our Methodist Church, including the election of bishops and the other connectional officers. As the Daily Advocate will be the only official organ of the General Conference, the report of its proceedings may be relied upon for correctness. Every effort will be made to make the Daily Advocate bring you the news of what the General Conference is doing. The price for the session will be $1. We are now ready to take your subscription, and shall be glad to begin the work of listing names. It is not too soon to subscribe, so send us one dollar and an order for the Daily.

SMITH & LAMAR, Nashville, Tenn.

FROM THE COLPORTER'S DESK.

It was my pleasure to spend the first Sunday in February in Pickens and to preach once again where more than thirty years ago, I was pastor. Very few of the parishioners of those days are there now. Most of them have crossed over the river, and we hope are enjoying the saints' rest in heaven.

During my stay I was kindly entertained in the pleasant home of Brother E. W. Burton and family, enjoying also the hospitalities of Brother and Sister B. T. Hoover in their good home, and Rev. S. M. Thames and family in the parsonage. O how enjoyable are these occasions of reunion and association with long-time and well-loved friends. May they continue many years in this life and forever in the life to come!

The week following, I attended the great Laymen's Meeting in Jackson, and by previous invitation I was the guest of Brother and Sister J. R. Jones at the district parsonage, where there is always a cordial welcome and generous entertainment for the brethren.

On arrival, I found them yet in the old house which had been sold, but the next day they moved into the new one on Adams Street, which had just been finished and furnished ready for occupancy. It is a magnificent, commodious and well-arranged building, costing $8000, and is doubtless the best preacher's home in Mississippi. The presiding elder and all others who contributed to this creditable work are to be congratulated on its consummation.

I shall ever cherish in memory the honor of having been the first guest entertained in this elegant and comfortable home, and the many courtesies of the presiding elder and family. May grace and peace be multiplied unto them forever.

This was the first outing of the Colporter since the Conferences in December, but he has been kept busy rounding up, filling orders and getting ready for field work when the spring season opens.

The report of our colportage work for last year, as given at the Conference, was as follows:

Book sales in North Mississippi Conference, $1,842.75; in Mississippi Conference, $1,306.94. Total, $3,149.69. Church papers and literature, $334.05.

From one point of view this showing is very gratifying, but from another it is far from being satisfactory. When we seriously consider the existing needs of the people for the Word of God and religious reading matter, we cannot be satisfied with the meager results indicated by the foregoing figures.

Therefore, in the beginning of the new Conference year while concerned for higher salaries, increased assessments and larger collections, let us set ourselves for a large increase in the circulation of our books and papers.

To this end, the Colporter is at the behest of his brethren and fellow-laborers to fill orders or to do personal work, as the ways may open.

I sincerely thank all who have hitherto co-operated in the work, and shall appreciate all patronage and aid that may be given in the future.

The favors shown during the Conferences and since have been very encouraging and it is hoped that the same may abound more and more during the year.

Withal, let us bear in mind that we are in an age of "business on a cash basis." This includes our Publishing House and colportage business with the rest. We are under obligations to meet all demands monthly and are dependent on our customers to enable us thus to do so. This refers to every specific amount, however small the item may be. Five nickles make a quarter; four quarters make a dollar; ten dollars make a glad heart though it may come from many sources and in small amounts. May we not kindly expect prompt, unanimous responses to this modest suggestion?

CHURCH EXTENSION.

To the Presiding Elders, Pastors, and People Called Methodists in Mississippi—

Greeting: At the last Annual Meeting of the General Board of Church Extension, held in the city of Memphis, the following resolution was adopted:

"The second Sunday in April, or as near thereto as practicable, shall be observed as Loan Fund Day."

In view of the pressing and growing demands upon the Board for more funds, we, the Chairmen of the Conference Boards in Mississippi, do most earnestly call upon you to observe the request of the General Board. Our Church is growing rapidly, especially in the West and Southwest, but our funds are so limited we are embarrassed by our prosperity.

The General Board had applications for loans amounting to $290,000, while only $50,000 were available to supply the demands. We have nearly 3000 homeless church families within the bounds of our widely-extended Zion.

Now, we propose a general campaign in Mississippi to raise a "Galloway Memorial Loan Fund" in the two Conferences, to be administered through the General Board office at Louisville for the benefit of Mississippi Methodism. The fund thus raised will be available for our own territory first, and we hope that some Sunday in April will be adopted by every local church in the State as Loan Fund Day. Ask all our people to give. Already $600 has been raised in North Mississippi. No cause was nearer the heart of Bishop Galloway than Church Extension, and nothing could more properly perpetuate his memory than a large Loan Fund to aid in the construction of new church buildings in the State. We bespeak for this cause your hearty endorsement and co-operation.

On Nov. 20, 1909, the Lord saw fit to take from us our dear father, J. A. HELMS. He was sixty years of age, and went to sleep without a struggle. All that was possible was done to revive him, but the Lord knew best, and our loss is his eternal gain. It is so lonely here without him, but we shall all have to pay the same debt some day. May we be as ready for the call as was he! He told us before he went that we would find him at rest in heaven. He bore his illness, uncomplainingly; everything always seemed right. May God help all of his children and loved ones to bear bravely up under this great sorrow, and to meet him on the other shore to part no more.

A daughter. M. E. B.

Mrs. R. L. HENRY, whose maiden name was Harris, died at her home in Marshall County, Miss., on Dec. 20, 1909. She came with her husband to the Wesley neighborhood forty years ago, and in all of those years she was true to every trust reposed in her. She was a faithful member of Wesley Chapel, and the preachers who have served Red Banks Circuit will recall her gracious hospitality which was of the good, old-fashioned kind. Her generous, sympathetic nature endeared her to old and young alike, all of whom have at some time been beneficiaries of her kindness. She was a neighbor of the type that is passing—one to be counted on in sickness or distress in any form. Besides a grief-stricken husband, she leaves two brothers and so many, many friends, who bear in their hearts such tender, loving memories of her.

ONE OF THOSE FRIENDS.

JOSEPHINE ELIZABETH, daughter of Alfred and Winnifred Tempie, was born in Choctaw County, Ala., Aug. 25, 1842. In 1854 she there united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained steadfast in the faith of Christ. In 1856 she was happily married to William David Hawkins, with whom she moved to the vicinity of Montrose, Jasper County, Miss., in 1858. In the fall of the latter year they both joined, with eleven other members in the organization of the Montrose Methodist Church, then known as Price's Chapel. Devoutly true to their Redeemer, they wrought zealously all these years for the cause of the kingdom in their home and neighborhood. Our good sister was ever ready to give, with meekness and fear, a reason of the faith that she possessed, and readily responded to calls for leading in public prayer and exhortation. She leaves a husband, four sons, one daughter, and a host of grandchildren. On Dec. 28, 1909, at the home of her son-in-law, Kelly W. Parks, near Enterprise, Miss., she peacefully passed, from earth. In the cemetery at Montrose her mortal remains are interred. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends.

W. A. BETTS.

MRS. HARRIET E. HOLLIDAY.

At ten o'clock a. m., Tuesday, Jan. 4, this noble woman entered into that "rest which remaineth for the people of God." Her life had been such as to entitle her to the plaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant." She was born near the old town of Holmesville in Pike County, Miss., Oct. 23, 1828; thus she had passed, by one year, beyond the four score limit. Her father was Benjamin Catching and one of four brothers who moved into that section early in the nineteenth century. When she was a mere child he moved to Georgetown in Copiah County, where he reared a large family. Mrs. Holliday (nee Harriet Catching) being one of thirteen children. Her maiden name was Letitia Higginbotham. In 1851 she was married to Thomas L. Holliday of Madison County, Miss., where she lived until the summons, "Come ye blessed of my Father," called her to that other and better world. She was the mother of six children all of whom except two with the husband preceded her to the "Father's house." Though the messenger came to her circle often in a swift and almost tragic way, as one by one the loved ones were taken, yet like Job, she accepted philosophically the coming, and "charged not God foolishly." It was her fortune (and she so accepted it) to bear largely the burdens of others in the care of the orphan. "In that day" they will rise up to call her blessed. Possessed of a strong physique, she did not spare it in the interest of the welfare and comfort of others. Like the "great woman of Shunem," she might have stood before kings but she was content to "dwell among her own people." She was a great reader, and few people were better posted on the current questions of the day. For nearly forty years she had been a weekly reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and few of its subscribers took such pleasure in its coming or received more from its columns. Had she chosen to enter the field, her contributions would easily have found place in the columns of the press, but she was content, yea, she sought what to her was the truest sphere of woman and gave her life to the young of the home and the neighborhood. "Aunt Harriett" will long live in the memory and affections of many. James Whitcomb Riley's beautiful poem "Out to Old Aunt Mary's," approaches somewhat to the welcome on the one hand, and the happiness on the other, of those who enjoyed the home and the pleasures of going out to, and being with grandmother Holliday. When this writer entered that circle more than thirty years ago, and asked for the hand of their eldest, the request was granted on these terms, and these only. "It shall never be fought but mother and son," and so we lived and loved as the years strengthened that bond. After the death of her husband in 1892, she found a most pleasant and thoughtful home with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Eugene Smith, near Canton, where every comfort was added to her declining years. The closing months of her life were full of suffering, yet she bore them with patience until the pity of the Father said, "It is enough, come up higher." She sleeps in peace, two children, Mrs. E. M. Smith and T. C. Holliday, both residing at Canton, Miss., and fifteen grandchildren, mourn her departure.

Second—That the memory and example of this good and generous man is a priceless legacy to his friends and his family.

Third—That the sincere sympathy of this Quarterly Conference and his church is hereby extended to his widow and children in this dark hour of bereavement and that we pray God's richest blessings upon them.

Fourth—That this tribute to the memory of our deceased brother be spread on the minutes of this Quarterly Conference and a copy be furnished to his family.

DOCTOR WILLIAM DAVIS HARELSON.

Dr. William Davis Harelson, eldest son of Renphina Lambuth Davis, and Pleasant Samuel Harelson, died at his home in East Baton Rouge Parish, near Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 9, 1910, after an illness of five months, aged forty years. Left at the age of twelve he became the main support to his widowed mother and five sisters. He remained in the home till his twenty-first birthday, giving all his attention to the ones he loved so dearly. The mother having been married again to Edward Moore Allen, he left the home to make his own career in life. After serving as clerk for a few years, he began the study of medicine, and after his graduation returned to his native parish, where he built up an extensive practice.

In his early twenties he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Antioch in the Baton Rouge District. He was married in 1897 to Miss Henrietta Milton, formerly of Kentucky; to this union four precious children were born, two boys and two girls, who survive him. The doctor built a beautiful home where he spent fourteen years of happy married life, doing all he could to beautify the home with comfortable surroundings. His home was always open to the itinerant preacher. In later years he moved his church membership to the Blackwater Church, Baker Circuit, where he and his family were faithful in attendance, when he could get off from his practice which covered a large territory. He was busy day and night answering calls. It made no difference to him whether poor or well-to-do, he was ready to go and do all he could to relieve suffering humanity. I never knew a man who was more universally loved, his name is a household word, and among the hundreds of homes in which he practiced they will ever cherish the name of Dr. Harelson. In connection with his practice, he served as a member of the Police Jury for a few years, and was a member of the school board, being president at the time of his death. His mind dwelt daily on consolidation and betterment of the schools of his parish, even in his delirium he talked schools and plans for improving them. And as a token of the respect and the esteem held for him, all public schools of the parish closed the day of his funeral.

Five months previous to his death he was bitten on the hand by a spider; an abscess formed, causing considerable pain. When this healed another formed and continued internally and externally until his death. He was carried first to the Baton Rouge Sanitarium, then to New Orleans where a serious operation was performed; he returned to his home that he loved so much hoping to regain his health and strength, but an attack of la grippe in his weakened condition was more than he could stand; so, after three weeks of extreme pain he yielded to that demand of nature which breaks all family ties.

He leaves besides his wife and children, two sisters, and two half-brothers to mourn their loss. He was laid to rest in the Harelson cemetery Jan. 10, in the presence of the largest gathering of friends and loved ones I ever saw at a funeral. The services were conducted by the writer, after which the Masons, of which he was a prominent member took charge. He was also a member of the Woodmen of the World and Elks.

May our kind Heavenly Father, whom we know does all things well and who has called him from this world of sorrow and pain to a better home; help us all so to live that we may be prepared to join those who are on the other shore. May the blessings of God rest upon the bereaved ones, and friends, and also upon the faithful physicians who attended him in his sickness.

I set the time of the District Conference in June at the request of many brethren in the hope of getting one of the young bishops (to be elected), and getting the benefit of any changes that may take place. The seeming conflict in one or two dates is only seeming, as I hope to have some extra workers at that time. The call for early collections is imperative as never before. Look to it, brethren.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him, but any property he has, in a modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

SUCCESS WITH A FLAW.

A tiny flaw sometimes cuts the value of an otherwise thousand dollar diamond down to fifty dollars, or less.

Bodi-Tone

The Bodi-Tone Company

wants you to try a full-sized one dollar box of Bodi-Tone at its risk and expense, so that you will get acquainted with this new scientific medicinal combination, which is going to become the foremost medicine used by the American People. We want you to send us the Bodi-Tone Coupon, giving us your full name and address, and the one dollar box of Bodi-Tone will be sent to you by next post, without a penny for you to pay unless it TONES ALL YOUR BODY.

Bodi-Tone

is just what its name means—A TONE FOR ALL THE BODY and we want you to try it and see what it will do for YOUR body. Bodi-Tone is a little round tablet that is taken three times every day. Each $1.00 box contains seventy-five Bodi-Tones, enough for twenty-five days continuous use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so that you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how easy and simple it is to take, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it helps nature to tone every organ in the body.

Bodi-Tone

is a new remedy, but the ingredients which compose it are as old as the science of medicine itself. Its composition is not secret. Every one of the twelve valuable ingredients which go to make up Bodi-Tone are well known to all doctors of all schools; each one has a well defined, well known and thoroughly established place in the realm of medicine and is prescribed by physicians every day in the year. Among the ingredients which compose Bodi-Tone are Iron, for the Blood, Phosphate to help tone the Nerves, Lithia for the Kidneys, Gentian for the Stomach, Chinese Rhubarb for the Liver, Cascara, which restores tone to the Bowels and Intestines, and Peruvian Bark for the General System. We claim no credit for these ingredients, each of which has its own well-deserved place in the Materia Medica of all the civilized world and are recommended by all modern medical writers and teachers—we simply claim credit for the manner in which they are combined, for the proportions used, for the remedy—Bodi-Tone, which they make and which we want to send you immediately, as soon as you write for it, so you can try it and learn how it acts.

Bodi-Tone

is no new-fangled, secret, mysterious, "discovered by accident," Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Shaker or Quaker remedy. It depends upon no superstition or romantic story to make people believe in its efficacy. It is the scientific prescription of well known and competent doctors and chemists, and is compounded in one of the largest and best known pharmaceutical laboratories in the United States. It was conceived with the purpose, which we announce to all the world, to give the people a pure and safe household and home medicine, one that has medical authority behind it, one that doctors could sanction and approve, one whose composition could be boldly proclaimed and being all this, it is destined to become the foremost proprietary medicine of the century; a genuine pure food and drug medicine.

Bodi-Tone

though a scientific medicinal combination, is prepared from such remedies which the common people as well as the doctors KNOW TO BE GOOD, which they can place confidence in, which they know they can safely use, and most of all, is composed of things which make it a GOOD REMEDY. It is right all through, from the first to the twelfth ingredient, a remedy that knows its work in the body and does it in a way that satisfies the body-owner. It is a pure remedy that all the family, young and old can use. It contains no poisonous drugs, it contains no harmful drugs, it contains nothing that we are ashamed to tell all the world, it contains no ingredient that your own family doctor will not endorse, and say is a good thing. It does not depend on drugging the body. It does not kill pain with opium or morphine. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body with the remedies nature intended to tone the body, or that power would not have been given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now, right from this page, if you are sick, if you need medicinal help, if your body is not in aight, natural and normal tone. That is what Bodi-Tone is for—TO HELP NATURE RESTORE TONE TO THE BODY, to help nature restore normal health, energy, vigor, strength and weight. If there is anything wrong with your Kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the Kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your Stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the Stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your Blood, your Liver, your Bowels or your General System, the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, which are endowed by nature with a special action in these parts, go right to work and keep on working day after day, exerting always a well understood, definite action that produces general results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone, a splendid eliminant, helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the Kidneys, Stomach and Blood, thereby exerting a continual anti-rheumatic effect which makes it hard for rheumatism to obtain or retain a foothold in the system. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any of the various Female Ailments, for its toning properties are especially valuable in such ailments.

Bodi-Tone

is especially urged for all chronic sufferers who have tried honest, reputable physicians at home and elsewhere without getting the relief and permanent benefit desired. If your local doctor is doing you no real good, if you have given him a real and honest chance to do what he can and the medical combinations he has used have failed, then give THIS SCIENTIFIC, MODERN COMBINATION of old-time remedies a chance to show what it can do for you.

A Trial of Bodi-Tone is yours for the asking. You need not send any money—do not send any stamps. The Bodi-Tone Company wants to spend every penny of the trial's cost, wants to send the medicine to you, wants you to give it a trial for a full period of twenty-five days before you pay one single penny. Simply fill out the Bodi-Tone Coupon, mail it to the Bodi-Tone Company, Chicago, and let Bodi-Tone do its work for you.

The defect is not noticeable to the average person. It is only the fatal magnifying glass that will detect it, and yet its presence is a perpetual menace to the commercial value of the stone.

A great many human diamonds which, a little while ago, were thought to be flawless brilliants of the first water, and which dazzled the financial and social world, when the microscope of official scrutiny was turned upon them, were found to contain great ugly flaws.

What a humiliation for those whose names have been household words for a quarter of a century or more to be asked to withdraw from trusteeships or directorships in institutions which perhaps worked for years to secure them on account of their great influence and high reputations.

What is there left worth living for, when a man has lost the finest, the most sacred thing in him, and when he has forfeited the confidence and respect of his fellow-men? Is there any quality which inheres in dollars that can compensate for such a loss? Is there anything which ought to be held more precious than honor, or more sacred than the esteem and confidence of friends and acquaintances? —Success Magazine.

LaGrippe Weakness

"After a spell of La Grippe I was so weak and exhausted I could hardly stand. I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and was soon better in every way."

MRS. F. J. NORTON, Freeville, N. Y.

La Grippe seems to wrench every particle of vitality from its unfortunate victims. That's where the principal danger lies; because it leaves the system in a weakened condition which invites more serious diseases. During convalescence

should be taken to restore nervous energy, and overcome this weakening influence which is the most serious effect of La Grippe.

The first bottle will benefit; if not, your druggist will return your money.

HOME REMEDY

Mrs. Temple Clark suffered for years, before she found relief in that popular, successful woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in Timberville, Miss., writes: "Cardui has been worth more to me than a carload of silver. If it had not been for Cardui, I would have been dead. I love a dollar, but I have never seen one that I do not think as much of, as I do of a bottle of Cardui. I now keep it in my house, as regularly as I do coal oil or coffee, and have done so for years."

"Some years ago I jumped off a horse and had a mishap, and for about four years after that I suffered intense agony. At last I was induced to try Cardui, which cured me, and now I am well and happy."

"I am sure Cardui will cure other sick ladies as it has me."

Cardui is for women. It acts specifically and in a natural manner on the womanly system and has been found to relieve pain and to restore woman's health.

If you are nervous, miserable, or suffering from any form of female trouble, try Cardui. What it has done for other sick ladies it surely can do for you. Sold by all first class druggists, with full directions for use.

LESSON FOR MARCH 6, 1910.

JESUS THE HEALER.

Matt. viii:2-17.

Golden Text: "Himself took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses." Matt. viii:17.

After the Lord had ended his sermon and was come down from the place where he had been speaking, "great multitudes followed him." He had told them that after they had sought and found the kingdom of God, all other blessings would be added. He now began to show them some of the practical results of faith, for there was among those who were listening to his words a man that had the leprosy, a disease so terrible that he who had it was regarded as one dead. There was a lesson in all things that Jesus said or did, and this disease was a type representing sin. Sin is loathsome and will destroy the soul as surely and slowly as leprosy will destroy the body. Leprosy separates a man from all association with his fellows, and just as surely will sin drag the sinner down from all that is good and true. This poor leper knew that Jesus could drive away his disease, for his words were spoken with power, and he knew that no one save the blessed Messiah could tell them such wonderful things; as he was such a teacher he must be a great healer.

The poor wretched man came close to the Lord and bowed in worship, and in this attitude he made his request knowing that Jesus had the power, that he would make him clean. "Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." This prayer was short but none was ever more full of meaning, and the answer was immediate and with just a few words, "I will; he thou clean." The man was clean; whether by the gentle touch of the Master or by the power of his words, he was clean, at once and entirely. Before his cleansing he was an outcast beyond all hope. It is just so with him who has been dragged to the lowest depths of sin, if he appeals to the Savior with the same positive faith as the leper had, he will be justified and made pure, for the Son of Man had then, and has now, power on earth to forgive sin. Gratitude would have bound the cleansed leper to the great physician; he would have followed Jesus, with other loving disciples, all the days of his life, but such was not to be; just then Jesus had shown those present that the man was clean, he had put his hand upon him; but Jesus was not come to oppose the law in the least particular, and to conform to that law the man must be proclaimed clean in a formal manner by the priest. For that reason Jesus told him to tell no man then of his cleansing. We have often wondered why the man did not obey the very first command of his benefactor. He must have thought that there was nothing wanting to make his blessing complete, and in the presence of the One who had such wonderful power and spoke such gracious words, he had no thought for those who had cast him out and separated him from the congregation. So, away he went from the presence of the Lord telling every one that he met "of the great things the Lord had done for him" and how could he help it? So should thankfulness fill the heart of the hardened sinner. Let us leave a place in our prayers to thank God for pardoning our sins.

It is supposed that the leper was an Israelite, but the next that came to Jesus for help was not of the Jews. Here was another wonder, the Messiah recognizing faith in a Gentile. Jesus spoke of it himself as remarkable. It was a centurion, a captain of a company of Roman soldiers that now comes to Jesus beseeching a share in his blessing. Remember a former remark that the centurions of the New Testament were all good men, especially do we call to mind the one who at the cross gave testimony to Jesus. This centurion was a good man, for it was said of him that he so loved the Jews, that he built them a synagogue; he so loved his servant, that was sick of the palsy, that he came to ask Jesus to heal him. Jesus consented and started home with the soldier. Note the confession of unworthiness: "I am not worthy, that thou shouldst come under my roof, so only speak the word and my servant shall be healed. I am a man of authority, my commands are obeyed, and I know that thou canst command all things and receive obedience." Such were the words that came from a heart of faith. It was then that Jesus wondered and said that in all Israel he had not found so great faith. Then Jesus gave the great warning that many shall come from far away, even from among heathen people, and be accepted as disciples, and "The children of the kingdom." Gods chosen people would be thrust aside because of unbelief. "Go thy way," he said to the centurion, "and as thou has believed, so be it done unto thee." His servant was healed at that moment. We need not go far away to find this same warning adapted to just the same conditions. The people of our own land and country have every advantage of knowing the way of salvation. The gospel can be heard at all times; children are taught by loving mothers; and in the Sunday school Jesus is the theme of precept upon precept, the lives of good men daily remind all of the gain of godliness; yet many will not go in the straight gate and the narrow way. Verily shall they of heathen lands, who have learned of salvation through Christ from some lonely missionary, verily shall they go in before a vast multitude who neglected their opportunities in refusing Christ and giving themselves over to worldliness.

Where the Lord went, he always found suffering, and he went about doing good, for this reason great crowds of people followed him. There were times when he longed for rest and quiet. Peter took him to his home, even there he found sorrow; Peter's wife's mother was sick with fever; as soon as they told the Lord, he went to her and simply touched her hand and the fever was gone that instant, and she was so well that she went at once about the work of entertaining the Master. It is our privilege to have Jesus in our homes; he will come in and sup with us and there abide if we so desire. No home is safe from trouble and sorrow unless there is a place there for our Savior. It was now the evening of a busy day with the Lord, but instead of rest, the people began to come to Peter's house and bring their sick and lame and blind, and they were all healed with his word. He was indeed then as he is now, our burden bearer. He became sin for us that we may be made righteous. All this was in olden times, yet to-day our Lord lives and ministers unto us spiritually just as he did to the people then. We have a living Lord; alive forevermore; and able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God through him.

MISSISSIPPIANS IN TEXAS.

Dallas, Feb. 24.

W. S. F. Tatum and wife, of Hattiesburg, Miss., gave a six o'clock dinner this evening to the representatives from Mississippi who are delegates to the second biennial conference of Laymen's Missionary Movement, in one of the private dining rooms of the Oriental Hotel, at which the following were present: Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District; J. B. Ellis, Yazoo City, Miss.; Z. Z. Linton, Fernwood, Miss.; P. H. Enoch, Fernwood, Miss.; Rev. W. H. Lewis, presiding elder Meridian District; Rev. B. W. Lewis, Scooba, Miss.; Rev. Osmond Lewis, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Thad. B. Lampton, Magnolia, Miss.; Algie Oliver, Moscow, Miss.; F. Hopkins, Meridian, Miss.; J. E. B. Blewett, Yazoo City, Miss.

Guests of honor from other States: Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Hendrix, Cooper, Texas; Mrs. O. L. Merrill, Clinton, Okla.

Mr. W. S. Tatum is one of the largest lumber manufacturers of south Mississippi and is an enthusiastic supporter of the missionary movement.

having for several years past supported his own personal missionary representative in the island of Cuba.

The meetings of the Laymen's Conference have been held in the large auditorium at Fair Park and large crowds have been attending all the meetings. At the meeting Tuesday night the congregation was asked for a contribution of $25,000 for the purpose of defraying the expense of the movement for the next three years. The full amount was promptly subscribed, one gentleman from Mississippi donating one thousand each year for three years with a challenge to Texas and other States to do likewise. J. D. Whitcomb, of Texas, accepted the challenge with an annual subscription of twelve hundred for three years. A gentleman from Birmingham, Ala., also accepted the challenge and subscribed three thousand dollars. About one-fifth of the total subscription of twenty-five thousand dollars was subscribed by the lay representatives from Mississippi.—Dispatch to Jackson (Miss.) Daily News.

Tidings from the Field

Stallo, Miss.:

This is a new circuit, with a great deal of work to be done. We are putting lumber on the ground for a church at this place, and hope to build a parsonage this summer. I never labored among better people; they respond cheerfully to all demands made upon them for the sake of the cause. We are made to feel welcome all over the work; and hope, by God's help, to accomplish much for the Master this year.—J. A. McBryde.

Wilson, La.:

This is my second year on the Wilson charge, and, I am glad to say, we have been kindly received, and that the outlook is encouraging for a good year. We have some church enterprise here in Wilson. Materials are being ordered for the purpose of repairing and remodeling our church at a cost of about $1000. Among other helpful and encouraging things was a pounding given the preacher and his family by the people of Wilson on Valentine's evening. May God help us to minister to the people in spiritual things.—E. L. Cargill.

Kosciusko, Miss.:

I am moving on with my work very well. I have missed but two appointments this winter. We have a fine interest in Sunday school work. I have seven Sunday schools on my charge, which have continued all the winter. They are doing a good work. We have two good prayer-meetings, well attended. I had one class-meeting until the cold weather came. I think we will take it up again soon. I wish I had one at each appointment. They are needed. I appoint my class leaders every year, but we do not hold many meetings. Our spiritual condition is very good; there are many consecrated men and women on the charge. I am expecting a good year on all lines. I am trying to put the New Orleans Advocate in every home. We certainly do need to circulate our Conference organ.—W. A. Clark.

Ponchatoula, La.:

After a comfortable stay of four years on St. Helena charge, the time limit, if for no other cause, forced Bishop Candler to move us, and we were sent to Ponchatoula. We arrived at our new home Dec. 29th, and met with quite a hearty reception. A few nights later, while we were sitting quietly by the fire, there was a loud knock at the door. Some of us responded, and on they came, one after another, until I suppose fifty persons had arrived, each with a package, and by the time they had all unloaded it was a welcome feast to our eyes. After they had gone we investigated and found they had solved the provision question for many days to come. We have preached at each of the three places and met with a warm welcome everywhere, which encourages us to do our best to make this a great year for Ponchatoula charge. Mr. Editor, come to see us, and if you will come during strawberry season we will give you all the strawberries you can eat, and let you preach to hoot. I find we have as official board a splendid set of laymen; one that any preacher would appreciate and love to work with.—J. P. Haney.

Smithville, Miss.:

Hear a word from the Smithville charge, North Mississippi Conference. I think I have made a good beginning for my second year in this field, and the outlook for an advance at every point is encouraging. This new charge of four churches—Smithville, Antioch, Greenbriar and Paine Memorial—made a fine record last year by meeting all demands made upon it and sending up a clean balance-sheet to the Annual Conference. And, besides, we built and paid for one beautiful new church. We are planning to build this year a parsonage, which is very much needed, and would add greatly to the desirableness of the charge. This is a fine country, with good and enterprising people, and is developing rapidly. It abounds with overflowing wells of good water, is a health resort, and promises ere long to become one of the most attractive localities in North Mississippi. Two of our honored superannuates, J. B. Stone and K. M. Harrison, live at Amory, which is the commercial hub of all the east side of the Bigbee River. Brother Harrison has been confined to his room for more than two months with rheumatism. I enjoy the Advocate more and more, and am going to make an effort to put it in every Methodist home in my charge.—W. A. Bowlin.

Alexandria, La.:

Since Conference the laymen of this church have gotten together and paid off more than seven thousand dollars of the indebtedness against this church, leaving only a mortgage on the parsonage for $2,800, and subscriptions for this mortgage amount to much more than that. We figure that there are enough gilt-edge subscriptions among them to pay off the entire indebtedness in the next few weeks, so that we can dedicate our building before the General Conference. This happy state of affairs was brought about entirely by the aggressiveness of our Board of Trustees, who went at it in business-like fashion, many of them making real sacrifices in order to give liberally. This Board consists of Messrs. H. H. White, chairman; W. D. Wadley, secretary; C. W. Ward, treasurer, and W. C. Roberts, William Hill, L. B. Baynard, T. W. Holloman, Ed Rand, W. R. O'Neal and G. G. Scallon. The Board of Stewards also joined heartily in the good work, making liberal subscriptions, and joining actively in securing subscriptions from others. The stewards who are not trustees are: Messrs. A. V. Neilson, R. L. Roberts, J. T. Butler, E. M. Henning, G. G. Price, T. L. Owen, D. F. Huddle and Monroe Brasher.

The stewards increased the assessment for the pastor to $2000, and also assumed the collection of the Conference assessments. The pastor is being assisted by a trained worker, Miss Minnie Martin. Mr. Editor, don't you think this is a fine charge?—H. R. Singleton.

NOTICE.

To the Pastors in the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: March will have arrived before this notice appears. In our Conference organ, and the first of April is soon here and the first quarter of the year is gone and our Conference Claimants are expecting one-fourth of their allowance from the Conference Claimants' Fund.

Some of our claimants are really in distress, and they all need, and ought to have, their money; but unless the money is collected and sent to our treasurer they can't get it, hence I appeal to you to make special effort if need be, to collect at least fifty per cent. of your assessment for this sacred fund by April 1st, and forward the amount to our treasurer, Mr. S. A. Tomlinson, Gulfport, Miss.

Editorial.

Man is never so near the cross as when he is in his highest mood of love.—Joseph Parker.

Life should be an ascent, but many make it a descent. They stand upon a higher plane in the beginning than ever afterwards.

The only religion worth having is one which brings peace into the heart, sweetens the disposition, and ennobles the life. Unless it makes man upright and unselfish here, it will not save him in the hereafter. If it does not uplift one in time, it cannot be trusted to do so in eternity.

We frankly confess that it somewhat irritates us to hear church-members inveigh against foreign missions. Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." But these disciples say that instead of going, we should stay at home. How any one who professes allegiance to the man of Galilee can thus array himself against the execution of his great command, we have never been able to see.

God's benevolence knows no limit. It is as wide as the universe and as unceasing in its outflow as the flight of time. It enriches all worlds and pours its blessings upon the head of every living thing. He clothes the lilies, feeds the sparrows, and gives to every creature its meat in due season. And only when he has a like spirit is man what God would have him be. The extent to which he loves, is the extent of his resemblance to his Lord.

The proper measure of a man is not what he achieves, but what he aims at. God looks upon the heart and puts emphasis upon the purpose, the intention. If one lives and strives for self, whether he wears a crown or wields a spade, he is mean and unworthy. But if his aspiration be to bless others and brighten the world, and he faithfully labors to that end, he belongs to the true nobility of earth, even though success may not attend his efforts and life-long obscurity may envelop him. "Not failure, but low aim is crime."

Ours is a church for the masses. It has among its members many people of means and culture, but it affects no aristocracy of wealth or learning. Its doors are wide open to the lowliest. It urges its ministers to seek the best equipment, but has never been guilty of the crime of withholding the gospel from those who are perishing for the want of it. Because educated men could not be found to preach it, John Wesley urged his helpers to "read the most useful books, and to give to study 'at least five hours in twenty-four,' but, at the time, he said, 'If you can do but one—either follow your studies, or instruct the ignorant—let your studies alone; I would throw by all the libraries in the world rather than be guilty of the perdition of one soul.' Methodism is too much in earnest to hush the story of redeeming love because it cannot be told everywhere in polished periods.

A GOSPEL OF HOPE.

The world is cruel and relentless in its judgments except as they are modified by the influence of Christianity. The doctrine of forgiveness is not in its creed, and if one lapses into what society regards as evil, it ever holds it in memory against him. If a person has stolen once, though he may reform and become honest, it points at him the finger of accusation and is ever ready to whisper, "He was a thief." If a man was once a drunkard, though he may conquer his appetite and rise to positions of honor and usefulness, it will not allow the story of his shame to be forgotten, but seems to take delight in reciting it on the occasions of his proudest triumphs. The fallen woman may seek to rise from her degradation and struggle back into the way of purity, but it hounds her with the history of her past and will permit no escape from the stigma of other days.

In marked contrast with this, the gospel of Christ opens wide the door of hope to all the fallen. Not to the "righteous," not to the "whole," does its tenderest message come, but to those who are stricken with evil and are morally too weak to throw off their shackles. It has faith in the possibilities of depraved and wicked humanity, and sounds out, loud and clear, the glorious invitation: "Come now, and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Nor is this cleansing, this inward purification, all. But God also promises to blot out the transgressions of the evil-doer and remember them against him no more. Not that the divine mind can ever really forget, but the Heavenly Father will put them out of sight, will cease to think of them, will not be influenced by them in his bearing toward the reclaimed—they shall nevermore be mentioned.

The true test of a religion is its lifting power—what it can do for the abandoned, the outcasts, the moral wrecks of the race. And measured by this standard how infinitely superior is the Christian religion to all of the other faiths of mankind and all the philanthropic and humanitarian societies of earth. As a recovering and transforming agency, nothing like it has ever touched the world in all its long and varied history. Out of weak and vacillating Peter it made a man of oak and rock, whom nothing could shake. Contact with the risen Christ changed Saul, the pursuing persecutor, into Paul, the most majestic of the apostles. The same transfiguring power delivered Mary Magdalene from the domination of evil spirits, and made her the faithful disciple whose deeds of love and devotion shine illustrious upon the pages of Holy Writ. It touched the swearing tinker of Bedford, and he became a saint and seer; it lifted John B. Gough from the gutter to the platform and set him to speaking against the liquor traffic in tones that thrilled the world.

Nor, as we have before had occasion to observe, has there been the slightest abatement of this power through the passing centuries. It is manifesting itself throughout all Christendom to-day, and while it is operating, no sinner need despair. Jesus can save to "the uttermost," and there is hope for the weakest and most depraved if they will but look to him and trust him. Many glorious opportunities may be gone, but the present ever furnishes an open door to peace and safety and salvation.

Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep.
I lend my arm to all who say, 'I can!'
No shame-faced outcast ever sank so deep,
But yet might rise and be again a man.

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell;
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven."

JUSTICE BETTER THAN CHARITY.

As Ruskin has observed in his "Crown of Wild Olive," it is easier to be charitable in the sense of almsgiving than it is to deal justly in the transactions of life. Many will give readily to the needy who will not act fairly with those with whom they have business relations. By questionable methods they enrich themselves, and then make a great display in the distribution of their benevolences. And, verily, they have their reward. The world applauds, and too often the Church joins in the concert of praise.

But no philanthropy can atone for lack of uprightness in conduct. It is nobler to deal honestly with the workman in the payment of wages, and in transactions over the counter than to build libraries for him or pension him in his old age with money which has been improperly extorted from his pocket. The unequal distribution of wealth has been the problem of the centuries. The owners of mines and factories become multi-millionaires, while the laborers, who in a large measure create the wealth which they appropriate, live in penury and want. Let the captains of industry, if they really wish to do good and desire the love of humanity, be just to their employes by giving them a larger share of their joint earnings. And this should be given from week to week, or month to month, while the fortune is being made, and not when the employer, stricken with old age, can no longer enjoy his hoarded millions. Nor should it be bestowed as charity, but as that which of right belongs to the toiler. Thus given, it would tend to maintain his self-respect and independence, and enable him to have more of the comforts of life and furnish his children larger opportunities.

There is too much homage and adulation of the rich in our day. They are too much extolled for their contributions of money wrongly wrung from the people. Justice should come before generosity. The path of rectitude, though it may never lead out of poverty's obscure vale, is more honorable than the crooked way which brings one to the mountain top of success and wreathes his brow with the laurels of a purchased fame. And such will be the Master's irreversible verdict "on the last great day."

SOME EXCERPTS OF THE LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE.

By Roland H. Stoker.

With an out-of-town attendance of 3,000 persons and with every condition auspicious the second Biennial Conference of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held in the large auditorium at the Fair Park, Dallas, February 13-22.

Every preparation had been made for the conference, and all went well. Features were addresses by five Bishops of the Church and the raising of $25,000 for the support of the Laymen's movement for the next three years. Actual figures show, it was stated, that for every $1 expended in the movement at least $10 is obtained for missions. One man, who would not give his name for publication, called President John R. Pepper aside and gave him a diamond ring to be used in the cause. "Take this," he said, "it represents several Korean churches in value."

President Pepper Reports.

President John R. Pepper made his annual report as follows:

We record with profound gratitude to God that the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has thus far made good in its undertaking to arouse the large army of men in its ranks to an adequate sense of obligation to evangelize the world in this generation.

Public enthusiasm has settled down to a steady march toward the great goal of involving every man in the Church as a genuine bread-winner, as it were, for God, and as an evangelist for his brother man.

Gains to date and cheering signs for the future may be summed up as follows:

1. A deepening sense of personal responsibility on the part of laymen.
2. Much better business methods have been introduced into very many Churches.
3. Great activity in the circulation of literature touching all phases of the services, and especially that of missions at home and abroad.
4. A large visitation of churches and many services held by laymen and hundreds of offerings taken, for we hold as our twin motto: "A service in every Church and a weekly offering by every member in Southern Methodism."
5. The every-member campaign has found favorable response with fine results during the last year. It is the ideal plan.

Specials for Missions.

6. Many specials for missions have been undertaken in sundry directions. Missionaries are now being supported by many individuals, equipment for missions furnished and other interest of a substantial kind shown by our men as never before.
7. Scores of pastors have been relieved of financial burdens by their leaders and committees of laymen in individual Churches.
8. A growing desire is shown by official members of Churches to make the assessments the very minimum of amounts raised and to go beyond it.
9. In a number of cases abandoned circuit Churches have been revived and made self-sustaining.
10. Some records show that $2 per member for missions has been reached and in some cases much overtopped.

11. The actual amount of money raised for missions during the last two years as a direct result of the laymen's movement cannot yet be tabulated, but the aggregate is large and that which has gone into regular channels, as inspired by the movement, is much larger.

Helpful Conferences.

12. Numbers of helpful lay conferences have been held in stations and on circuits, which have been attended by many thousands of laymen with inspiring results.

13. Christian liberality has very substantially increased in some localities. One prominent conference shows the largest gains in its history since the inauguration of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

14. A great body of Southern Methodist physicians has become deeply interested in the medical mission work of that Church and are contributing of their means to promote this important part of its service.

Some Suggestions.

Under the head of recommendations we would suggest:

1. The national laymen's campaign in about seventy-five cities of the country is having hearty sympathy and support by the men of our Church and we earnestly urge a continuance of the same at every point possible.

2. The key to the highest success of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is in the hands of the individual Church leader and his missionary committee. A general quickening of the missionary spirit is very manifest, wherever the Church has taken hold of the movement with anything like real earnestness. May we not, therefore, ask, with all seriousness, that our presiding elders and pastors everywhere in our connection help us to establish the work in every Church, and where a leader or committee is not now elected that such be done at once and put the work on trial for a demonstration of its usefulness and genuine helpfulness to the pastor and Church.

3. In view of the fact that the Laymen's Missionary Movement has risen since our last General Conference, we recommend that some suitable memorial be sent that lawmaking body, suggesting that a proper recognition be made of this branch of work in the Church and wisely correlated so that its efficiency may be best conserved and augmented. Respectfully submitted.

J. R. PEPPER, President.

Subscribed $25,000.

Twenty-five thousand dollars was subscribed for the support of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in the Church for the next three years. One man gave a diamond ring valued at $400. "This," he said, "is the value of four Korean Churches. Take it." He would not allow the use of his name in connection with the gift. Among the principal gifts in the collection were the following: John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., $1,500; Gen. George Carr, North Carolina, Mr. Enoch, Mississippi, $3,000; J. D. Whitcomb, Texas, $1,200.

Bishops Present.

Only two active Bishops of the Church—Bishops Morrison and Candler—were absent from the city.

The Bishops were called upon for remarks, and briefly responded.

Bishop Hoss speaks.

Bishop E. E. Hoss said:

"There was a noted French physician who was a great democrat. His ancestors were all aristocrats. A friend asked him how it happened he, the son of aristocrats, was a democrat. The physician said he had dissected a great many aristocrats, but he had found nothing in them that was different from what he found in common people.

"I repudiate the old, medieval idea, which set the ministry apart, with peculiar privileges not enjoyed by the laymen. I have repudiated the doctrine that a minister is under obligations to be any better than any one else.

"I am not trying to lower the standard of ministers at all. I want to put the standard higher and higher all the time—to a height from which, looking down, it will seem abysmal. I want to see the day when all our pulpits will be filled with ministers with hearts burning like a world on fire. (Amen!) I don't want to lower the standard of ministers, but to raise that of laymen.

"There isn't any sliding scale of morals in Christianity. (Applause.) Every man, minister and layman, is under obligation to be just as good as can be. Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, told the boys that the highest way is the best way. I say, with all the emphasis and reiteration I can give it, that the highest way is the only way. (Applause.)

"I hope we have seen the dawning of a new day, a day when every man will think it is not only his duty, but his privilege to do something for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ, and we shall lose sight of our duty in the glory of our privilege. I have sometimes thought that I would like to have been in that little body of men who at Lundy Lane organized the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. But I would rather be here to-day. Great days are behind us, greater days are here and the greatest days are coming."

Bishop Wilson Talks.

Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, of Baltimore, Md., Senior Bishop, said: "If I could put my arms round you I would hug each one of you to-day. It is gratifying to see so many men of our Church in conference to meet the great missionary needs of Southern Methodism. When the missionary work was first placed on my shoulders, as the Secretary of your Mission Board, think what might have been accomplished had I had behind me a force like this. By now, had that force been available in the day of our splendid early opportunity, we would be running sawmills and factories and putting the proceeds to the enlightenment of the degraded and diseased of the heathen nations.

"It was told when the office was given me that the task was well nigh hopeless, but I could not regard and do not regard as hopeless any task for Jesus Christ. I did not regard the missionary task as hopeless, and I told them that I was going to make something of it or break the Church up. I thought that a Church which couldn't sustain a missionary movement was not worth keeping.

"But I am drawing near the Valley of the shadow, and I cannot hope to see the consummation of the work which we are now prosecuting. I see, though, the signs which indicate to me the impending success of all your efforts. Remember, in your calculations, that your increases are not keeping up with the increase of population, and make plans accordingly. The great result of your work will be seen in the presence of Him on the throne and the Master shall come and say, with magnificent expression radiating throughout the regions of heaven, 'Behold, I, and the children God hath given me.'"

Address by Bishop Key.

Bishop Key, of Sherman, Texas, said: "I will tell you a story. In the absence of their parents, four children discovered their house to be on fire. They extinguished the fire, and relating the occurrence afterward Tom told how he had pumped the water, Mary told how she and Bud had carried it in buckets to the fire and poured it on. And the parents inquired of the fourth child, 'What did you do?' The child said, 'I clapped my hands and said amen.' Consider me as clapping my hands and saying amen to what is said." (Applause.)

Bishop Hendrix is Heard.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of Kansas City, Mo., said: "Two converts to Christianity were on a steamer. They did not know one another, but one remarked, 'Hallelujah,' and the other promptly said, 'Amen.'"

The Bishop further, but very briefly, dwelt on this story in its application.

Bishop Atkins' Talk.

Bishop James Atkins, of Waynesville, N. C., said: "We have no hope of converting this entire adult generation. Whatever we may purpose in this generation, our work will be for the next generation. We will convert thousands in this generation, and the number will increase in geometrical progression the next generation. The work in which we are engaged is for those to be born, as well as for those who live, and let us pray unceasingly for the future as for the present."

Experiences in Africa.

W. R. Hotchkiss, of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, spoke with reference to his experiences in Africa, where, he said, when he went there fourteen years ago, over the very territory over which Roosevelt now travels in railroad sleepers, progress was made by swimming rivers and wading through swamps, with prowling savages and beasts attacking and disease threatening. There was no written language, and he and fellow-missionaries had to pick the language from the teeth of the natives, he said. He described the degradation of the natives; how he found eleven men and women and seventeen goats sleeping in a close room. The natives went absolutely naked, he said, and ideas of love, affection and virtue were fairly throttled.

"Don't despise the black man," he cried. "Don't despise him because he is down, because everything that lifts you above that savage is the result of foreign missionary work. At the very moment Jesus Christ was standing there in Galilee and preaching to men and when he was telling them to go unto all the earth, preaching the gospel unto the uttermost parts, your ancestors and mine were savages in the forests of Britain and Gaul."

Dr. Lambuth Addresses 4000.

Sunday night, before 4,000 people in the Fair Park Auditorium, "The Adequacy of the Gospel to Meet the World's Needs," was discussed by Dr. W. R. Lambuth, of Nashville, Tenn., Chief Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. Lambuth, from a fund of knowledge gained at first hand from work and travels in many foreign countries, ably presented the two phases of this theme: the inadequacy of non-Christian religions and the adequacy of the Christian religion to meet the material and spiritual needs of mankind.

Methodists Everywhere.

Prof. J. T. Henderson, representing the laymen of the Southern Baptist Convention, declared he traveled largely over fifteen States, but that he had never been able to get away from the Methodists. He said he was a regular John the Baptist for the Methodists. He expressed the belief that if he went on the wings of the morning to the uttermost parts of the sea he would find Methodists, and likewise that if he ascended into heaven he would probably find them there. He said he wouldn't care to go any further. He said he was present to hear fraternal greetings and to learn methods from the Methodists. He charged the Methodists to act with dispatch and without waste in their missionary activities. Prof. Henderson was liberally applauded.

Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn., a Missionary Secretary of the Southern Methodist Church, declared he doubted whether Methodists would be found on the uttermost parts of the sea, "as Methodists don't take to water like the Baptists."

Ancient Legislation.

In referring to a committee appointed from the Laymen's Executive Committee and from the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a memorial requesting the General Conference of the Church to increase lay representation in all the conferences, quarterly, district, annual and general, Southern Methodist laymen took what is regarded as the most important action of the biennial conference here.

The memorial was not adopted by the laymen, though unofficially indorsed by them. It was referred to the special committee representing two important committees that it might be presented in its most proper form to the General Conference, which meets in May, at Asheville, N. C.

The laymen refrained from taking any action with reference to the request of women of the Church for equal voting rights with men. This right has been accorded the women for many years in the M. E. Church. The women did not push their campaign at Dallas, other than by the distribution of literature. They say they will make an aggressive campaign before the General Conference.

ANENT CENTENARY COLLEGE.

By Rev. Walter G. Harbin.

"Delightful for situation" applies in all its fullness to the new home of the Centenary College of Louisiana, at Shreveport. On a gentle slope of a hill, which, for this country, is quite a high one, with the fragrant pines crowded thick on every side, and the most healthful water in the State immediately accessible, the situation affords about the best that nature could offer. The building itself is a handsome brick structure, heated by steam, and lighted throughout with natural gas. The rooms are so arranged that each has a double window—twin windows the carpenters call them—and these windows are each unusually large. It is the best lighted, best ventilated college building I ever saw, and I have seen several, though by no means all that exist.

It was the good fortune of the writer to spend a week under the roof of Centenary, conducting the annual revival meetings held under the auspices of the College Y. M. C. A. When I arrived I was very dubious about the outcome of the meeting. Dr. Weber, after a heroic struggle with a complication of most painful and serious ailments, had been compelled to give up the unequal struggle. But this was not until the college had been left practically without a head for several weeks. It is not the easiest thing in the world to pick up a college president just when you need one. Dr. Hill had just taken charge and had been on the ground hardly long enough to have any sort of grip on the situation.

I was delightfully surprised at the outcome. The meeting was a delightful success. One of the best results was the organization of a Students' Volunteer Association, headed by Brothers Henderson and Jameson, themselves volunteers. Several of the strongest young men in the institution have taken the matter of going to the mission fields under advisement, and are seriously asking for light.

I would ask those who read this, and are so disposed, to pray that God might call several men from Centenary to Korea. I heard Mr. Yun, in the Laymen's convention at Shreveport, state that Korea could be evangelized in ten years. Centenary ought to make some living contributions to this heroic achievement in the great field of missions. I was about to say Homeric achievement, but I will amend my thought, and say apostolic.

While there was some slight disorganization incident to the unsettled condition of affairs due to the illness of Dr. Weber, Centenary showed the result of the preceding thoroughness of organization in the remarkable quickness with which it recovered from the staggering blow, and settled down to good, thorough work under the management of Dr. Hill.

God has many peculiar providences. When Dr. Hill took a supernumerary relation at the last session of our Conference, there were many who could not understand that it was all for good; and yet, thus early, we can see the hand of God in it in the fact that this splendid man was able so soon to respond to the call of need from Centenary. Few men could have gotten so firm a hold upon affairs so promptly. The entire student body has responded with remarkable promptness to his personality, and one finds it impossible to realize the radical change that has transpired within the past few months. For a college to change presidents in the middle of the term, is very much like an army changing commanders in the midst of a battle.

Dr. Hill's chapel talks are manly and strong, and they wonderfully impress the young men for good. But the principal means by which he has so soon won the love of the student body, aside from his fine character, is his deep personal interest in the individual student. The last morning I was at Centenary, as I sat at the breakfast table, Dr. Hill came in. He spoke to several young men, calling them by their first names. A young man, sitting at my table, said: "I don't see how he does that. I have been here since September, and I don't know the first names of all the fellows, but Dr. Hill hasn't been here a month, and he knows every fellow's first name." He knows more than that, too. And the young men are finding out that he does, and as they make the discovery they more and more desire that what he knows about them may be admirable. Centenary has experienced a great misfortune in the loss of Dr. Weber from his place at her head for the rest of this term, but God himself looked after her interests in getting such a man as Dr. Hill ready to take his place.

Time fails me to mention the young men who wrought so nobly in the meeting. First of all, I would say that Dr. Hill left his complicated and difficult tasks, and was present at every night service. Special mention should be made of the work of Brother Griffin, the president of the Y. M. C. A. He is a young man of unusual strength of character, and will do a great work for God in his solid way, some day. Among the young men who are not studying for the ministry, the work of Mr. Honeycutt was especially commendable. Centenary has in her student body a fine class of Christian young men, to whose number the meeting added many.

With a new building, and one or two additions to the faculty, which is very much over-worked at present, Centenary will do great things for Methodism in this generation.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

III.

You may infer from my last that I am a Methodist—warp and filing. Yet I am not a bigoted, self-conceited, hide-bound Methodist. I have but little patience with such. I know that all the good people are not in the Methodist Church; yet I am a Methodist, all the same. I know my good Baptist friends will not think less of me for being plain and outspoken along this line.

There are some like the man I knew in Harrison county, more than fifty years ago, named Batton. He said on one occasion: "I believe the legislature ought to pass a law compelling everybody to join the Baptist Church." A Mr. Bounds, standing near, said in reply: "Pity but a law was passed requiring all fools to be killed. If so, you would go up mighty quick."

I was converted, regenerated, in the year 1855. As intimated in a previous chapter, I have no knowledge of a time when I was not concerned about my eternal interest.

In the years 1854 and 1855 Rev. George Wade, late of the North Mississippi Conference, was pastor of Pear River Circuit, which included all of Pike county and that portion of Lawrence county west of Pearl River. In the early part of 1855 I began to feel more and more concerned about my soul's salvation. A prayer meeting had been organized (just when, I do not know) at old Pine Grove Church, near my father's home, led by Wm. Conerly, Gilbert Grubbs, my father and others. It was a prayer meeting of the right sort. As interest in the prayer meeting increased, interest in the public preaching service increased. All the truly religious people took an interest in prayer meetings, as well as in all other church services. (I may add, by the way, that the same conditions are true to-day.)

On Saturday, the 3d of May, Brother Wade preached a wonderful sermon to a houseful of people. Six joined the Church at the close of the service. Among the number was my brother, Lem. As he gave his hand for membership, a great burden was lifted off my soul. The meeting was continued five days. On Monday, the 5th, about 12:30 p.m., while Rev. A. B. Nicholson, late of the Mississippi Conference, was preaching one of his characteristic revival sermons from the text, "He is altogether lovely," wherein he spoke of Christ's work, miracles, life, crucifixion, burial and resurrection, and during which time he was very happy, I experienced, just before the close of the sermon a great change of heart, and felt very happy. I hardly knew what was the matter with me. When penitents were called, I went forward, kneeled down, but was too happy to pray. I cried, I shouted; I looked around and saw my precious mother, who had been so deeply concerned about her boy, Henry, and she was shouting aloud the praises of God. In an instant I was in her arms. Her prayer was heard. Her boy was saved. I tell you, it was good to be there.

Religion, pure and undefiled, is a good thing. Why everybody is not religious, I do not understand. All Methodists are not religious. Neither are all Baptists and Presbyterians religious. Yet, all who are truly so live together in peace, love and unity, regardless of denominational preference. No truly saved man will deny that.

After my conversion, I was a new man—"new creature in Christ Jesus." I sought no excuse after that to keep away from prayer meeting, and the regular church services. It is just that way with all the truly saved. Some may doubt it, but I know it is so. I walked ten miles on one occasion, fifty years ago, to be at prayer meeting, and got well paid for doing so.

I got a good start in early life, and I have never willfully departed from my God. I have never contemplated turning my back on God and his Church. I learned very soon that I could not mix religion and the sinful pleasures of the world. Hence, I resolved never to go where my Christ would not be a welcome guest. A Christian has no business going where Jesus would not go, nor doing what he would not do. He simply cannot afford it. "Abide in me, and I in you," said Christ. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." (1 Jno. 4:16.) Where there is hatred and malice, envy, etc., there is sin. And there is no room in the soul of a true child of God for sin. All unrighteousness is sin. All true Methodists are Christians. So with all true Baptists, or Presbyterians. Let us "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with our God." Then, it will matter little to what religious denomination we belong.

I had good nursing, for I was simply a child in Christ, and needed to be cared for as such. I asked a young brother who was converted the same time: I was how he was getting along, religiously. "Mighty bad," was his reply. He then said to me: "If I had such parents as you have, I could be religious." We wept and prayed together. He is still living—an old man, with a host of children and grand-children.

It pays to train children for God and the right, in more ways than one. "Good understanding giveth favor; but the way of transgressors is hard." (Prov. 13:15.)

BROTHER ELLIS ON THE STATE OF INFANTS.

Dear Brother Meek: I quote two sentences from the articles of Brother R. A. Ellis which recently appeared in the Advocate. In the issue of Feb. 3, he says: "Our carnal nature was the work of God. It was not and is not sinful; it may become sinful, and has as relates to a full humanity. But each for himself and not because he inherited a tainted moral nature as an effect from his father Adam, who fell shamefully." In the issue of Feb. 17 he says: "I most solemnly aver that depravity is not sin, or that it has any existence apart from the individual transgressor."

To my mind, Brother Ellis' belief, thus stated, is at variance with our Seventh Article of Religion, which declares that "original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (as the Pelagians do vainly talk), but it is the corruption of the nature of every man that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually."

Without purposing to enter into a controversy with Brother Ellis, we venture to say: The fact that infants are born in a state of salvation (justified), "the free gift having come upon all men (infants included) unto justification of life," is so clear in his mind as to obscure the existence of inherent depravity, and makes him forget that the justification of infants no more militates against the doctrine of natural depravity than does the justification of believing adults, and Brother Ellis will not deny that depravity still remains in the justified grown man and woman.

The Mississippi Legislature seems disposed to take a forward step in the right direction in dealing with the matter of legal executions. On March 1 Governor Noel, in his daily message, recommended a change in the present method of executing criminals, and straightway a bill was introduced which provides that all executions be disposed of within the walls of the Penitentiary.

The Treasury Department at Washington has announced that the present per capita circulation of money in the United States is $34.87. This calculation is based on the estimate that on March 1, the total population of the nation was 39,883,000, and that the aggregate amount of money in the country was $3,134,093,250. There is now in circulation nearly $50,000,000 more than there was a year ago.

An omnibus public buildings bill is pending in Congress which carries an appropriation of $75,000 for a home for Vice-Presidents of the United States. A terrific avalanche of snow, a mile in width, bringing with it trees, bowlders, and other kinds of debris, swept suddenly down from the mountains near Wellington, Montana, on March 1. The bodies of eighty-six victims have been recovered, and it is estimated that the list of the dead will certainly reach 100.

The citizens of New Orleans are agitating the question of having a great Pan-American Exposition in this city in the winter of 1915-1916 as a celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal. A committee of twenty-five appointed to consider the question has reported favorably, and it is thought that the next move will be to send a delegation to Washington to bring the proposed project to the attention of the Government. It is calculated that the exposition would cost not less than $17,000,000, of which amount the United States would likely be asked to contribute $5,000,000 and the Central and South American countries $5,000,000. The scheme as yet is in an indefinite condition and what it may eventually in will likely be something wholly a matter of conjecture.

Count M. de Perigay, a French scientist, has been in the Peten District of Guatemala some months looking for traces of Aztec ruins. A special dispatch to the Picayune says that the Count has arrived at Belize, Honduras, with wonderful stories of a buried city he had found in Guatemala. The buried city is said to be about two miles beyond Benque Viejo, the last town on the frontier of British Honduras, and is a considerable distance from any traveled road. Count Perigay is on his way to Guatemala City to confer with President Cabrera, and may in a short time return to commence excavation.

From the Commercial Appeal of the 3rd inst. we clip the following: The Washington County, Miss. Historical Association has been organized with Mrs. Robert Somerville, president; Capt. W. W. Rose. The executive board is composed of Mrs. Gracia Walton, S. M. Spencer, and H. T. Ireys. The objects of the association are to collect and preserve data relating to Washington county and its early settlement, and especially of the pioneer men and women who came and opened up lands in advance of the Civil War and the railroads.

That scholarly and judicious periodical, The Outlook, makes the following pertinent comment upon the Statehood Bill now pending in Congress: "Apparently two new States are about to join the Federal Union without any adequate consideration of their fitness for their responsibilities. According to the twelfth census, New Mexico had ten years ago a population of 135,310, and Arizona had a population of 122,931. It is estimated that by this time New Mexico has increased its population to about 230,000, and Arizona to about 157,000. This means that New Mexico has less than half the population of Baltimore, which is but a single city in one of the smallest of the Eastern States; and that Arizona has a population many thousands less than Rochester, New York, and many more thousands less than Providence, Rhode Island, which is a city in the very smallest of the Eastern States. The fact that these two States will bring four new Senators into the United States Senate, having a combined vote equivalent to the vote of Senators representing sixteen millions of people, is not to be contemplated indifferently."

LET IT STAND.

By Rev. J. W. Campbell.

In the last issue of the Advocate I read a communication from the pen of Rev. J. E. Harrison, of San Antonio, Texas, entitled: "An Appeal on the Order of Worship," and I craved just a little space that I may offer a friendly criticism thereon.

Brother Harrison says: "A large majority, 2 to 1 (of our ministers), desire to restore the order of worship as it was in the discipline of 1892." I submit that this statement is no argument why we should return to the old order, for if it is, then the large majority of Jews who wished to return to the flesh pots of Egypt after they had journeyed from thence were right and Moses did wrong in opposing as he did. So, also, when the apostles and their priests in the time of Christ tried to keep down the "new order" (and by a large majority) and to have been right, and it must have been wrong to return to the old order to oblivion.

Again Brother Harrison says: "All admit that the new order cannot be used generally in our church." In this he is certainly mistaken. I answered his circular sent to me personally, and I, for one, made no such admission.

In using the "new order of worship" I have found it usable in country, and village, and city. I have never found a country congregation so unsophisticated that I could not get them to repeat the Apostles'

Creed, and I have never found a congregation but that could be taught to use the Gloria Patri with the same ease that they could sing the Doxology.

Our present order of worship gives the people a chance to participate in the exercises of the hour, and to our ministers begrudge their congregations that liberty? The use of the Apostle's Creed affords the young people a good chance (if the preacher will use his opportunity) to learn about the fundamental doctrine of our holy religion, and do our ministers desire to deprive them of this? (I never heard of a minister under the old order of worship giving any kindred instruction.) And then, too, if the Apostle's Creed is to be discarded, why not also discard the Apostolic Benediction and let the minister improvise one of his own?

But I do not care to take too much space, therefore I must be brief; however, I wish to direct your attention to one more point. Near the close of Brother Harrison's article he makes two propositions (printed in italics), and then as a last thing asks: "Don't you think these two agreements constitute an adequate settlement of the question?" For my own part I think it would be adding disorder to confusion. And if there be confusion (as some complain) it is not because of the new order of worship but because of the lack of loyalty of some ministers in not using it. I fear that that Brother Harrison's proffered settlement would have the opposite effect than the one intended. We are expected to keep the rules of the church rather than to mend them—let us observe our order of worship and not tinker with it.

Bishop W. A. Candler will preach the Commencement sermon of Rutherford College, North Carolina, in May. The "farholders" will hear a great sermon forcefully delivered.

Bishop W. A. Quayle, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has a new book in process of publication. It is a volume of over four hundred pages, and will be issued by Jennings and Graham. The title is "The Pastor-Preacher."

Senator A. J. Beveridge, of Indiana, addressed 2,000 men on the occasion of the recent meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association at Indianapolis. He is both a statesman and orator, and, like Mr. Fairbanks, who also is of that commonwealth, is a loyal Methodist.

The press dispatches state that the Lowndes County Sunday School Association will meet in the Second Methodist Church at Columbus, Miss., March 25. Rev. W. Fred Long, the State Secretary of the inter-denominational work in Mississippi, will be present and deliver an address. Many delegates are expected to be in attendance.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has begun the creation of a fund for the help or maintenance of its retired missionaries. This is a wise and timely movement, which deserves to succeed. Those who wear themselves out in such service should not be allowed to suffer when unable to work longer.

Mr. J. C. Purnell, of Winona, Miss., in behalf of himself and wife, recently presented the Episcopalians of that town a deed to a $12,000 brick church just completed. Mr. Purnell is a man of large means, with philanthropic inclinations. Not long since he erected for the Confederate Veterans of Montgomery County a beautiful and appropriate monument.

The North Georgia Conference Woman's Home Mission Society is wide-awake and active. Among other enterprises, they have five traveling libraries of fifty volumes each. They are used in mill settlements and country schools. We heartily commend this effort to diffuse wholesome information on the part of our Georgia sisters, and wish that their good example might incite others to do likewise.

Dr. S. A. Steel has recently been conducting revival services at Greensboro, N. C. Referring to his work the North Carolina Christian Advocate says, "Rarely has it been the privilege of this city to enjoy a series of such remarkable sermons. His themes were such as to well-nigh cover the ground of a full presentation of the great doctrines of evangelical Christianity, and his style and manner of delivering them were of such force as to attract large crowds."

We are grateful to Dr. W. F. Tillet, of Vanderbilt University, for a copy of his address on "Theological Seminaries and Teacher Training," which was delivered at the Semi-Centennial of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., last September. The subject is important and timely, and the treatment of it is clear, forceful and scholarly. Dr. Tillet has performed a valuable service to the Church by the issuance of this pamphlet, and we hope that it may have a wide circulation. We also thank the honored Dean for one of the New Year calendars, which he sent out to the Wesley Hall boys, past and present, scattered abroad, now nearly a thousand strong. It is beautiful, appropriate and admirable in every respect.

The Laymen's Conference at Dallas decided not to have another session until three years hence, thus making it a triennial instead of a biennial gathering. The following officers were elected: President, John R. Pepper, Memphis; First Vice-President, C. H. Ireland, North Carolina; Second Vice-President, W. G. M. Thomas, Tennessee; Third Vice-President, D. H. Abernathy, Texas; Treasurer, F. M. Daniel, Arkansas; Secretary, W. B. Stubbs, Georgia, with headquarters at Nashville, Tenn. The Executive Committee is as follows: C. A. Sanford, Texas; J. S. Carr, North Carolina; and T. H. Southgate, Virginia. This committee will determine the place of meeting of the next Conference later.

From the Methodist Handbook, just issued, we glean the following Sunday School statistics for 1908: The Virginia Conference reported the largest number of Sunday school scholars, 73,864; the Northwest Texas came next, 68,910 scholars; the Holston followed with 64,450; and the Western North Carolina stood fourth, 64,217. There were only five conferences in which the church membership was equalled or exceeded by their number of Sunday School pupils. They were the Holston, Los Angeles, Montana, South Brazil Mission, and Western Virginia. The Conference having the smallest number of Sunday School scholars in proportion to church membership was the North Mississippi. If these figures are correct Brother Nebbett and his coadjutors need to get busy in stirring up the brethren. In nothing can North Mississippi afford to bring up the rear.

The program of the Twenty-Fourth Annual Convention of the Louisiana Sunday School Association, which is to meet in this city March 15-17, has been issued. Among the more prominent speakers we note the following: Rev. F. B. Meyer, London, England; Mr. Marion Lawrence, Chicago, Ill.; Mr. E. K. Warren, Three Oaks, Mich.; Mr. W. N. Harishorn, Boston, Mass.; Rev. R. L. Wharrie, Cuba; Mr. W. N. Wiggins, General Secretary of the Texas Sunday School Association; and Rev. W. Fred Long, General Secretary of the Mississippi Sunday School Association. The music will be under the direction of Prof. E. O. Excell. Wednesday, the 16th, will be known as "Mississippi Day," when many prominent workers from that State will take part in the exercises, and Governor Noel is expected to be present. The railroads will give a rate of one fare plus twenty-five cents for the round trip from all points in Mississippi and Louisiana.

A meeting for the Chairmen of the Annual Conference Sunday School Boards of the Church was held in Nashville, Tenn., January 7 and 8. About twenty-five of these leaders were on hand, and the meeting, from the first session to the last, was one of interest and profit. It is the design of the General Sunday School Board to have a similar gathering annually. The following are some of the resolutions adopted:

Resolved, That the Sunday School Editor be and is hereby requested to publish in the Magazine the names and addresses of the Chairmen of our Sunday School Boards.

Resolved, That we respectfully petition the College of Bishops, when they next revise the "Course of Study" for preachers, to include in the first year's course some book which deals specifically with relation of the pastor to the Sunday school.

Resolved, That we memorialize the General Conference to pass a law constituting all members of Conference Boards members of the Annual Conference.

NEW ORLEANS CHURCH NEWS.

The pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church is to be congratulated on the church bulletin he is sending out. It contains a fine cut of the church building and the meetings and services for the month of March. The "pleasant Friday evenings" in the assembly room is meeting a long-felt need in supplying innocent amusement and good, wholesome entertainment and music both for the members of the church and for the unchurched people. The sewing classes are doing a great work in reaching the homes, and in teaching girls how to make their homes happier. On March 20th, a revival meeting will begin with Rev. N. E. Joyner as preacher; Mr. I. N. Nibergal as singer, and Mr. R. F. Harrell as operator of the stereopticon.

On Thursday night, March 3, a very unique and profitable debate was held in the assembly room. The question was: "Resolved, That Home Missions rather than Foreign Missions should be emphasized." Mrs. Lily Meekin, and Hon. W. C. Chevis, editor of the Daily States, represented the affirmative, while Mrs. A. Inman Townsley and Hon. J. A. Woodville represented the negative. Dr. Jno. A. Rice gave a resume in conclusion, ably setting forth the claims of missions.

Rev. Henry T. Carley, the pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Church, has issued a neat little leaflet announcing the subject of his sermons for the month of March. The general theme for the month is: "Making a Life." Brother Carley is considered one of the most effective preachers among our younger pastors.

Rev. H. Whitehead, the pastor of Mary Werlein and McDonoghville, has received thirteen into the church on profession of faith during the past two months. An effective and genuine revival was experienced at Mary Werlein under the guidance of Rev. W. C. Harbin. Brother Whitehead reports interest in his work on the lower coast.

THE CORINTH DISTRICT.

Dear Brother Meek: During the past two years there has been the greatest revival work done within the bounds of the Corinth District in its history. Thousands have been saved and added to the church; pastors' salaries and Conference collections advanced; new houses of worship built, and a number of promising young men called to the ministry. Our district is in the best condition it has ever been in. We are no longer to be regarded as the hard portion of the North Mississippi Conference. We have a densely populated and rapidly developing field. We have as intelligent and consecrated a people as can be found in the State. Among our pastors in the district we have ten of the best preachers in the Conference, with several other promising young preachers, and a number of the best supply local preachers to be found anywhere.

We have one of the most unassuming, modest, yet intelligent and wide-awake presiding elders I ever saw, in the person of Rev. Ben P. Jaco. I state a fact when I say it is largely due to his management, in connection with the work of the godly pastors, that things are in so good a shape. We have a district gospel tent, an idea which was conceived by Brother Jaco and this writer more than two years ago. Under this tent many thousands have been helped, stimulated, and saved, that would not have been otherwise reached. I have not written much myself during the time to the Advocate concerning these great meetings. A few reports were published of the fine meetings conducted by Brother McIntosh; but the results in some ways of all of them were embraced in the reports of presiding elder and pastors on the Annual Conference floor. My own presiding elder, in the reports of presiding elder and pastors on the Aberdeen District, have spoken to me in regard to the present year's work; hence, by the permission of the Editor, I desire to say to the pastors whom it may concern, that I always have more calls for my time during the summer and fall months than I can accept. When the pastors in a district secure my co-operation in their revivals during the spring months, I will be more inclined to give the summer to the circuits within its bounds—provided they will get a district tent. Every district should have a tent and keep it going all the time, not only in the towns, but on the circuits. The larger towns of a district could do no better missionary work than to aid a movement of that kind financially. It would be an intelligent expenditure of money that would do permanent good in bringing weaker charges to the front. I know of a circuit now in the bounds of the Corinth District that not long ago was considered a hard work in point of salary, as it only paid about $400. A good deal of evangelistic work has been done on that charge and it now pays a salary of $1200 and has one of the best preachers in the Conference.

The revival tent work pays in the salvation of multitudes of souls, many of whom do not attend the ordinary revival. Not that there is any power in a tent; but there is a point in getting sinners to attend the services of a meeting, so they will thus be in reach of the gospel. There is no quicker way to evangelize the world than by "beginning at Jerusalem"—the home field.

So far as I am concerned, as a co-worker with the pastors, those who wish may now write me from any district and arrange dates—work to begin in April. First calls, first served. Truly,

W. D. BASS.

EDITORIAL ENDORSED.

My Dear Brother Meek: I want to register my word of approval and appreciation of the recent editorial on "Profanity." I wish the Advocate could echo each week throughout Louisiana and Mississippi its strenuous protest against this pernicious habit until it should become as familiar as Cato's "Delenda est Carthago" in the halls of the Roman senate.

Why will otherwise clean men pollute themselves and their neighbors and their neighbors' children with this inexcusable viciousness? Thunder against it all you can! There can be no more profitable use of your columns.

RIGHT ON THE "WOMAN'S RIGHTS MOVEMENT" YOU ARE.

Let me approve most heartily the position of the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate concerning the introduction of women into the quarterly, district, annual, and general conferences of our Church. He rightly calls it a "woman's rights" movement. It proposes for the Church exactly what the hysterical suffragettes are proposing for the civil government, and it is fraught with quite as much evil.

Most of the good women of the Church do not approve the movement. It is said a petition is being circulated throughout the Church (the machinery of the Home Mission Society being used for the purpose) asking the approaching General Conference to approve the movement. It will secure the apparent approval of many names, doubtless. But if a counter petition were presented in each one of our churches (and it is to be hoped this will be done) it would receive a far greater number of signatures.

What good can come of this movement to put women voters and speakers into our Conferences? Will it benefit the women, the homes, or the children, of the Church? Hardly.

Above all, will it bring into the counsels of the Church greater wisdom, or secure wiser conclusions as to the business of the Church? Who will claim that such can by any possibility be the case?

It will not increase the membership of the Conferences; but it will only put out of them some men and bring into the Conferences some women—in most cases the women who will bring least wisdom and most emotionalism into our Church counsels. Of what use will that be?

Is there not already a danger of making our churches too effeminate? Are not too many men already drifting away from the Church? Will not this movement to put men out of the Conferences and put women into them, increase this dangerous tendency? More and more we must insist that the work of the Church of God is worthy of a strong man's powers. The Church must be made more virile instead of more effeminate. If we are to check the perilous drift of men away from it.

The suggestion that woman is not now represented in the Conferences of the Church is not founded in fact. Her husband, father, brother and son represent her. To have representation on a sexual distinction is a suggestion which itself bodes no good. It accentuates the fact of sex in a hurtful way and to an injurious degree.

If the women were brought into the Conferences of the Church, the discussions in those bodies would be as difficult to conduct as is the present debate with the few women who are advocating this ill-advised movement. If one meets them with strong arguments their feelings are hurt, and if one does not so meet them the Church is hurt. The solemn matters of licensing preachers to preach, examining and passing ministerial character, electing to holy orders, and trying misdoers for bad conduct, not to speak of other things of scarcely less importance, would not be attended to better, but rather worse, if women had membership in the Conferences. The few women who desire to have a hand in such matters are especially unfit for this work which they aspire to do.

In this and all other woman's rights movements a cry is raised that women are subject to some sort of injustice by being excluded from the work of men; but this is the sheerest folly. No matters of justice are involved. It is purely and solely a question of what is good for the Church of God, and of what is the Scriptural place of women in God's Church. The cry of "taxation without representation" is equally irrelevant and unfounded. In civil government the franchise does not rest on the fact of taxation. To insist on such an idea is to demand government on the basis of a joint-stock corporation in which votes are cast according to the money paid in. If such an idea is brought into the Church, then the kingdom of heaven is reduced to a plutocracy in which the payers do the voting. To carry the matter to its logical consequences the number of dollars paid into the treasury should determine the voting power of the payers, a few dollars giving a few votes and many dollars giving many votes.

This agitation is itself hurtful. It has already damaged the Home Mission Society, and it will do that Society more harm, if it is not speedily arrested. Perhaps a change of leaders in that body is what is needed, anyhow.

The Editor of the New Orleans Advocate is correct in his position. Let him hold his ground in spite of tears, railings and such like.

WOMEN WANT NO LAITY RIGHTS.

(From Southern Christian Advocate.)

Dear Brother Nettles: Will you please publish the enclosed article in the Advocate? It is written by the second vice-president of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, and I believe voices the large majority of women in our Conference.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. JAS. W. KILGO

Marion, Dec. 14, 1909.

Why the Women of the Church Do Not Want the Rights of the Laity.

We are not prepared to believe that the action of our Woman's Board of Home Missions in the memorial to the General Conference praying for the rights of the laity to be granted the women expresses the desire of the womanhood of our Church. There are many women, we believe, who are active workers, and who are intelligently studying the problems of religious activities, who have never felt the necessity for such action as is expressed in the memorial.

It is true that in some places our women are doing the work of stewards and Sunday school superintendents (we have never been connected, we are glad to say, with a congregation where there were not enough men interested to fill all these places); but even in places where this is done, if the women ask to assume these duties, it will only add to their responsibilities and in no way have a tendency to quicken the men to a deeper interest. We should rather be interested in legislation that would deepen in the men their sense of responsibility than seek to relieve them of work they should do and responsibilities they should bear, if for no other reason than for their spiritual and moral betterment. The women who have acted in these official relations have done it, we feel sure, with no desire of assuming the larger responsibilities and inviting the criticisms that come to those who are the members of the several Conferences.

The very fact that so many of our women and girls have of their own free will joined the Epworth League under its present management is proof that they are not dissatisfied with their relation to this organization. If they were not pleased to join, they certainly could have remained outside. We doubt if their labors and interest in the organization would be quickened by having the rights of the laity given them.

The women do pay much to the enterprises of the Church; but in most cases the husbands provide the money for their wives, fathers for their daughters; so that the large contributions to our Home Mission and Foreign Missionary Societies are made possible by the interest taken by the men in the work of our members.

The work of the women in these societies is a monument to their loyalty to the Master and zeal for his cause, as well as a proof of the Father's approval of the organizations. The Church has shown by every token that it gladly recognizes and appreciates the efficiency of our labors. It would be hard to convince me that any General Conference could be induced to enact such measures as would in any way hinder the real progress of our work. There might be legislation that some of us would not approve, but the same would be true if the General Conference were composed of women.

It was my pleasure to be present at the last annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions. If there was any feeling in regard to the subordination of that body to the General Board of Missions, it was not expressed in any way. It is hard to believe that the work of that Board has suffered any during this quadrennium as a result of the few slight changes made in their constitution by the last General Conference. If it were so, that body is capable of speaking for itself and would have been the proper one to do so.

It is true the women have not the legal right to vote when questions pertaining to their work are to be acted on, but do they have to remain silent? By no means. There are very few—if any—men composing the various official bodies of our Church who are not willing and glad to talk over the work of the Church with an intelligent, active Christian woman—and who does not welcome her counsel? When was she ever denied a hearing? The women do exert a large influence upon the legislation of the Church. The constant and unvarying consideration and courtesy that has been shown in granting the requests we have made in reference to the work of our own women's societies is proof sufficient that there is no cause for alarm that the manhood of our Church may not still be trusted with legislative affairs. There is no danger of the women "remaining silent." Most of us do not hesitate to let the men know what we want.

There is no need for any feeling of humiliation on the part of the women that they cannot vote. Our influence over the manhood of the Church is vastly greater than the power that would be wielded by the few votes cast by women as the result of granting the request of the Home Mission Board. We must not underestimate our present relation to the Church and its work. God will still bless the consecrated womanhood of our beloved Zion; and her influence as wife, mother, sister, and daughter will be among the mightiest forces in shaping the policies of the Church. Nor need she covet any greater opportunity than is hers by her very influence as wife and mother, sister and daughter as she counsels with father, husband, son, and brother, and studies together with them the great problems we as a Church are to solve. This influence she would not lose by having the rights of the laity—burdens, I should say—imposed on her, but that her influence would be at all increased we have not yet seen proved. She would subject herself to some hard tasks, some severe criticisms which many of our women are not trained patiently to endure; and from all these the men are glad to shield her, and her attitude is her mightiest appeal to all that is manly or noble in them to undertake these duties and bear these burdens.

BRAVE PETER.

Far away across the sea there lived a little boy named Peter. If you could visit the home of Peter, you would find many strange things. The children wear wooden shoes, and the girls are dressed in quaint white caps and aprons. Wherever you looked you would see great windmills lifting their arms to the sky. The country is very low and there is always danger of the sea pouring in and destroying all the houses. To prevent this, the Dutch people have built strong sea walls, all along the ocean. The sea walls must be carefully guarded.

One day a little boy had been sent on an errand. His path lay beside the great wall. As he walked along he heard a sound that made him stand still. It was the sound of trickling water. Peter knew the meaning of that sound. There was a leak in the wall.

No one was in sight, so Peter ran to the spot and put his thumb in the hole. The dripping ceased.

He called aloud for help. No answer came. It was growing dark, and the water was very cold. He called again and again. No answer came. He was very cold and tired and his little hand ached, but he knew that if he removed it the hole would soon become larger and the water rush in.

In the morning they found him, weak and pale, but bravely holding his thumb in its place.

"He is a very brave boy," said they. "He has saved all our homes."—Willis.

A FUNNY CALLER.

There was one dish of apples on the table and another of popcorn, and a panful of chestnuts all ready for roasting, but Neddy didn't seem satisfied. He kept casting longing looks at grandpa. One thing was wanting to fill his cup of joy quite full, and that was a story. "Did you have New Year's Day when you was a little boy, Grandpa?" he asked pretty soon.

How Grandpa Gray did laugh, to be sure! "Why, of course," said he. "I've got sixty years of my own. Neddy, and they were all new ones to begin with."

Neddy looked puzzled for a minute. "Oh, but I didn't mean that," said he. "I meant, did folks have parties and go sleigh-riding and pay visits the way they do now, Grandpa?"

"Well, not quite," grandpa said, with a twinkle. He knew very well what Neddy was aiming at. "There were not so many people to make visits as there are now, Neddy. When your grandma and I first moved to this State, our nearest neighbor was two miles away, right through the woods."

"Oh!" cried Neddy. "And now it's most like a city here."

"So it is," said Grandpa. "But there was nothing except woods where houses and mills and stores are now. We hadn't much chance to pay visits if we wanted to. I remember a New Year's call your grandma and I had once, though, that was funny enough."

"Oh, tell it!" cried Neddy eagerly.

And of course that was just what Grandpa meant to do. He folded his glasses and laid them on the table. "Though there were so few people living near us," he said, "we had plenty of neighbors, such as they were. Very often we could hear the screech of a panther as he went roaming through the woods, and oftener than not the wolves howled at night around the edge of our little clearing."

"Oh, wasn't you scared—and grandpa?" asked Neddy, with big eyes.

"Not much," laughed Grandpa. "Wolves are cowardly animals in daylight, and I took care not to be far away from home after night. But one night—the one I was going to tell you about—we did get a start. It was New Year's Eve, a bright, pretty night, and we sat before the fire, your grandma and I, she knitting a sock, and I reading the news from a paper two months old, and watching the flames dance up the big chimney. All at once we heard the long-drawn howl of the wolves. 'Oh, dear!' said your grandma. She never could get used to hearing it. Nearer and nearer the sound came, and it seemed to come from the throats of twenty wolves. They're in chase of something," said I; "a deer, most likely. 'Poor thing!' said your grandma, pityingly, and with that she got up and unbarred the door to open it. 'Suppose it should be a man?' said she. I knew there wasn't a chance of that, but I didn't say a word, and your grandma set the door wide open, and let the firelight shine out over the snow. She wasn't a minute too soon. There was a rush outside, and in through the door came a panting, frightened deer."

"Oh!" cried Neddy.

"As quick as a flash your grandma slammed the door and put the bar in place, and the wolves might howl themselves hoarse for all the harm they could do. Strangely enough, the deer didn't seem a bit frightened. He stood in the farther corner of the room, with his head down, looking at us curiously out of his big, soft eyes. Pretty soon your grandma went over and patted him, and by and by, when she got him used to the patting, she brought some corn from the grain bin in the loft and fed it to him from her hand. It wasn't much wonder the wolves wanted him for a meal. He was as fat as butter."

"Oh, Grandpa!" cried Neddy. "You didn't—didn't—"

"No," smiled Grandpa. "I didn't, though we needed the meat bad enough; and if I'd come across him in the woods, I suppose I would have shot him quick enough. We kept him all night, and in the morning opened the door and let him go again. And I believe that if your grandma hadn't been a grown-up woman she would have cried to see him bound away. I thought she came pretty near it as it was."

"Why, Grandpa, what for?" asked Neddy, turning an eager face toward the chair where grandma sat knitting something else than a sock for grandpa now.

"What did you cry for, Grandpa?"

"I don't believe I did," laughed grandpa. "If I did, I guess it was because I was lonesome and hadn't any Neddy to cheer me up."

"Oh!" said Neddy. Then he whisked his cricket around to grandpa's side. "Now, you tell me one 'bout another time when you lived in the woods, please, grandpa," he begged.—The Children's Visitor.

BETTY'S PLAYTIME.

"Oh, dear," said Betty, when mamma called her from play. "somebody's always a-wantin' me to do somethin'!" She ran into the house with a frown on her face.

"Betty," said mamma, "if you can't obey cheerfully—"

"But I always have to be doin' somethin'," burst out Betty. "I never can play—"

"You can play this whole day long," said mamma, quietly.

"And not do anything else?" said Betty.

"Not do another thing," said mamma.

"Oh, goody!" cried Betty, and she ran out and got her doll things and began making a dress for Cera May, her new doll.

Grandma came into the room while she was sewing.

"Betty," she said, "will you run up-stairs and get me my spectacles?"

"Yes, ma'am," cried Betty, jumping up in a hurry, for she dearly loved to do things for grandma.

"No, Betty," said mamma, "you keep on with your doll things. I'll get grandma's glasses myself."

Betty returned to her sewing, but somehow it wasn't so interesting as it had been. She threw it down the minute little Benjamin waked from his nap and ran to take him.

"Nursing is too much like work," said mamma, taking the baby out of her arms. "you must not do any to-day."

Betty's cheeks turned rosy. She thought of the times she had grumbled when mamma had asked her to hold baby. Now she would have given anything just to hold him one minute.

Mary Sue, Betty's best friend, came by to get her to go on an errand with her.

"I am sorry, but you can't go," said mamma. "Running errands is not play, you know."

Jack came running in with a button to be sewed on. Betty put on her little thimble and began sewing it on. But mamma came in before she had finished.

"Why, the idea of your sewing, child!" she said, taking the needle and thread out of her hand. "Run along to your play."

When father came home to dinner, Betty started, as usual, to open the front door for him. But her mamma called her back.

"You forget, Betty," she said in her pleasantest way, "that you are not to do anything for anybody to-day."

"Then I guess I'd not better ask her to drop my letter in the mail-box," said Cousin Kate. "it might interfere with her play."

"I'm tired of playin'," cried Betty. She ran out to the kitchen. Dinah, the cook, would let her help her, she knew. But, for a wonder, not even black Dinah would let her do anything.

"I've agwine ter a fun'ral," she said, "an' I've in a mighty big hurry to git off. But, law, honey! I wouldn't hab you 'rupted in your play fer nuthin'!"

Poor Betty! She thought the day would never end.

"Oh, mamma!" she cried, as she kissed her at bedtime, "do wake me up early in the morning. I want to get a good start. Helpin' is so much better than playin' all the time."—M. C. Wiley, in Pearls.

"ANARCHY IN THE CHURCH."

Elsewhere we publish an article under the above caption, written for the Wesleyan Christian Advocate by Dr. A. M. Williams, one of the South Georgia delegates to the General Conference, which we consider exceedingly pertinent and timely. We do not refer so much to his criticism of the Nashville Christian Advocate for its alleged meddling with the affairs of the General Conference, though we are inclined to think there may be some justification for his strictures upon the course pursued by that none-too-judicious periodical; but rather to his ringing and forceful protest against the looseness and lawlessness so widely prevalent in many parts of the connection. Certainly, the case which he cites of a pastor presuming to have laymen assist him in the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is highly reprehensible—far too grave an offense to be passed over lightly.

But what is most distressing about the occurrence is that it is symptomatic of a general condition which Doctor Williams has not in the least exaggerated. One has only to observe to see that not a few of our preachers in the administration of the affairs of the Church have become a law unto themselves. They vary the ritual and disciplinary requirements almost at will, and seem to have forgotten the obligation which they so solemnly assumed "to keep" the rules prescribed by the law-making body of Methodism, and "not to mend them."

But not even this, in our judgment, is the worst feature of the present unfortunate situation. Vastly more serious, as we see it, is the open and unapologetic manner in which our doctrines and polity are inveighed against by both tongue and pen. In this day of ecclesiastical self-sufficiency almost any tyro in theology feels quite equal to the task of straightening out Wesley, Fletcher, and Clarke, and revising our time-honored Articles of Faith which have felt the impress of the masters. And for several months we have witnessed the spectacle of some of our leading church papers largely filled with "so-called" discussions of General Conference legislation, many of which have been little else than assaults upon our form of government and the proposal of sweeping and revolutionary enactments. Without a word of explanation or defense, these communications have been scattered broadcast over the land to mislead our people and create a feeling of unrest among them, and at the same time to give to outsiders an unfavorable impression of our Methodist economy.

But it may be asked, "Do you not favor allowing the Church at large to be heard on these subjects?" Most assuredly, we do; but by discussion within our own church circles at our various Conferences and by the right of memorial, a right which even the smallest body among us may exercise. To open the columns of our journals to unrestricted public agitation and make them a vehicle through which every man with a grievance may scatter far and wide the seeds of discontent and sedition, is, we think, to pursue a course fraught with grave possibilities for evil. Is there any other denomination in the South whose government is thus flagrantly and publicly assailed? We have been reading for some weeks most of the church periodicals issued in this section, and we have been impressed with the fact that while we Methodists have been busy finding fault with our doctrines and polity, most of the other sects have been busy extolling the merits of theirs. It is our deliberate conviction that this widespread public criticism is doing us a vast deal of harm, and very little, if any, good.

But wherein lies the remedy for the condition of things which Doctor Williams has described, and which we have ventured to enlarge upon and discuss at some length? It lies in a complete re-enfranchisement of the law and a vigorous insistence upon its majesty and supremacy. It is, of course, not to be expected that all of our preachers and people will ever see alike. Differences of views will always exist, and decorous discussion at the right time and before proper tribunals is not only permissible, but desirable. But when the General Conference speaks by the crystallization of the predominant sentiment into law, it becomes the duty of all to acquiesce in the rule of the majority. No man has a right to insist upon having his own way in defiance of the enactments of the great legislative assembly of the Church. Though some of them may not be to his liking, he should faithfully endeavor to carry out the rules laid down in the Book of Discipline. The good of the Church demands it; his own self-assumed obligations require it. Any other course must necessarily tend to produce discord and anarchy.

There is but one honorable thing for a man who feels that he cannot obey the laws of his denomination to do, and that is to betake himself to some other fold where those laws are no longer over him. A minister who occupies the pulpit of a church and draws a stipend from people who love it and are loyal to it, and yet assails its doctrines and polity, is, to say the least, certainly not possessed of a very high sense of obligation or self-respect. When one of the great churchmen of England was on the eve of becoming a disciple of Rome and the air was rife with rumors to that effect, having occasion to discuss some doctrinal point, he sounded out strongly and unequivocally the Anglican view. Delighted to see his utterance, a friend wrote him a letter expressing his gratification, and observing that he considered it an indisputable refutation of the reports in circulation that he was about to become an adherent of the Roman Pontiff. Quickly responding, the distinguished ecclesiastic said that statement does not reflect my private view, but it is the view of the Church of England; and so long as I remain in that Church, it is my duty to support it and teach its doctrines. Would that his high sense of honor and obligation were more widely prevalent in our time!

A VETERAN CALLED HOME.

From several sources information has reached us of the death of the Rev. John C. Lowe, which occurred at his home at Monteagle, Tenn., on Sunday, February 27. He had been somewhat indisposed for about a week, but was not thought to be dangerously ill. Sitting in his chair, he was suddenly seized with an attack of heart failure, and almost ere anyone was aware that he was worse, had passed into the presence of the Master.

Brother Lowe was one of the older members of the North Mississippi Conference, having entered the itinerant ministry in 1861. During the many years of his active service, he filled a number of important appointments, and was a diligent and efficient worker. He was well educated, possessed a strong and vigorous intellect, and was a forceful and impressive preacher. His style was expository, and few men had a more comprehensive grasp of the fundamental doctrines of the Church. He was a man of strong convictions and unquestioned piety. His conduct and conversation were thoroughly clean and exemplary. He had the confidence and respect of all who knew him, and never was there the faintest suspicion as to the purity and probity of his character.

For the past few years Brother Lowe had been on the list of superannuates, and had made his home at Monteagle, Tenn. He attended the recent session of his Conference at Okolona, and was eager for work; but the brethren thought rest and retirement better for him. With his customary resignation, he accepted their judgment, uttering no word of complaint.

And now, far sooner than we thought, he has gone from us, leaving behind a worthy and unsullied record, and entering upon, we doubt not, a well-earned and glorious reward. His remains were laid away at Monteagle to await the resurrection of the just.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." How fast they are passing away, these men who bore the banners of the Church aloft in other days! But the great mission of the Church below is to perfect and fit its members for translation into the Church Triumphant above. To the sorrowing wife, daughters, and other kindred, we extend deepest sympathy, and pray that divine grace in large measure may be vouchsafed to them in this sad and trying hour.

BROTHER VAUGHAN'S REQUEST.

On another page appears an earnest appeal from Rev. R. W. Vaughan in behalf of the Louisiana Orphanage at Ruston, in which he makes a request that Easter offerings be taken in all the churches in the State to meet the urgent needs of that worthy institution. The condition which he describes should certainly evoke a prompt and generous response upon the part of the Methodist people of Louisiana, and we do not doubt that it will, if brought properly to their attention. We sincerely hope that every pastor will fall in with Brother Vaughan's suggestion, and that by concerted action enough money may be raised to remedy the present unhappy situation. No department of service in the Church is more Christlike, or more calculated to conserve the interests of the divine kingdom, than our orphanage work, and it should be liberally maintained, and as the opportunity opens, largely extended. Let us come to the rescue of our capable Superintendent, who has this work upon his heart, and who needs the assistance of each and all in meeting the difficult problems by which he is now confronted. In the glad Easter time, when our minds are filled with thoughts of the risen Christ and our lips are loudly singing his praises, could we more fittingly attest our appreciation of his benefits and blessings than by ministering to the needs of these orphaned little ones, whose only reliance is upon the Church of the ascended Lord?

PERSONAL.

Rev. C. F. Staples, of Gibbsland, La., favored us with a nice list of subscribers on the 2d inst. We highly appreciate his continued activity in behalf of the Advocate, and pray that God may crown with success all of his efforts to extend the Master's kingdom.

To Rev. T. J. O'Neil, presiding elder of the Newton District, we are indebted for the following interesting item of information: "Arrived at the Lake parsonage, Rev. and Mrs. H. T. Tolle at home, Martha Leonora Tolle." The Advocate extends most hearty congratulations.

The banner worker for the Advocate so far is the Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Greenville, Miss., who has sent in about a hundred subscribers. Leading the procession, however, is nothing new for this tireless toiler. One would scarcely presume to look for him anywhere else than in the forefront.

Rev. J. E. Stephens, who is in his second year on the Jonesboro Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, is pleased with the progress of the work in his charge. The people generally are taking interest in the services, and the stewards have increased the assessment for the pastor from $410 to $660.

Rev. R. A. Tucker, who is in his fourth year at Kosciusko, Miss., still finds his work pleasant in that prosperous and growing town. The year has opened favorably, and he hopes to round out his quadrennium by going forward along all lines. We appreciate his efforts to take care of the interests of the Advocate.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of the Winona District, just back from Ruleville, Miss., writes us that Dr. J. W. Boswell is in the very highest favor in his charge. The pastor's salary was fixed at $1200, and more than one-third of the amount paid in cash. Both Dr. and Mrs. Boswell are in excellent health and spirits.

Rev. W. E. Dickens is having success in his work on the Shiloh Charge, Mississippi Conference. He has a kind people, his congregations are growing, and the outlook is most encouraging. He attests his interest in the Advocate, not only in words, but also in deeds. We thank him for the list of subscribers enclosed in his letter.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, the accomplished president of Whitworth College, passed through the city last Saturday en route to Gulfport, where he was to spend the Sabbath. In company with Rev. J. L. Sutton, he dropped into the Advocate office, where his visit was much appreciated. The editor keenly regrets having missed seeing him.

From Mer Rouge, La., Miss Mollie Higginbotham kindly sends a list of eighteen renewal subscribers to the New Orleans Advocate. We express our high appreciation of the valuable service which she has rendered, and pray that our paper may be a blessing to the homes into which it will continue to go for another year as a result of her faithful work.

The following brethren have our hearty thanks for subscribers sent in within the past few days: J. W. Honnoll, Tunica, Miss.; W. L. Broom, Oxford, Miss.; J. T. Lewis, Clarksdale, Miss.; M. R. Jones, De Soto, Miss.; J. R. Wilson, Kilmichael, Miss.; J. M. Massey, Anguilla, Miss.; M. M. Black, Port Gibson, Miss., and A. L. Davenport, Tremont, Miss.

Rev. J. D. Harper, president of the Louisiana Conference Church Extension Board, has kindly called our attention to the fact that our Calendar is in error in announcing the meeting of the executive committee of that board for March 20. The proper date of the meeting is March 22d. Those having business with this board will please note this correction.

Rev. T. W. Lewis has informed us that the laymen of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, will hold a meeting in Columbus this week, beginning on Wednesday night and closing Friday at noon. Mr. J. R. Pepper and Hon. T. B. King, of Memphis, are expected to be present and deliver addresses, and the occasion promises to be one of much interest.

We greatly regret to report the serious illness of Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church of this city. For some days he was indisposed with la grippe, and on last Friday was seized with a chill, which was followed by an attack of pneumonia, from which he is still suffering. Let prayer be made for this stricken pastor and the anxious ones watching by his bedside.

Rev. H. S. Spragins has recently obliged us with a club of ten subscribers from the enterprising city of Greenwood, Miss., a municipality which is fast forging to the front both in industrial and church matters. It is needless to say that Methodism is flourishing in that field under the leadership of the present preacher-in-charge. Brother Spragins has a habit of winning all hearts and succeeding wherever he goes.

Rev. D. L. Cogdell, of Lula, Miss., who served the Coahoma charge last year, referring to the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, states that, instead of being set down as a dollar short on the assessment for Bishops, his work should have been recorded as paying in full. Brother Cogdell was never known to have a deficit on his Conference collections. No matter how difficult the field, he always gets them.

We regret to learn that Rev. H. Mellard, of the Mississippi Conference, is having serious affliction in his family. He himself is just recovering from a malignant attack of la grippe, and his eldest son, Reid, is in a hospital at Hattiesburg, where he was recently operated upon for appendicitis. We assure our friends that they have our sympathy, and we pray that speedy restoration to health may come to the stricken ones.

In a letter to the editor, Dr. H. W. Featherstun, the presiding elder of the Natchez District, writes: "Rev. H. C. Brown, on account of his health, has been forced to give up his work at Centerville. It is hoped that ten months of rest will restore his health and enable him to resume active service at the beginning of next year. Brother Brown is deservedly very popular at Centerville, and the church there greatly regrets that he must retire."

We regret to be informed that Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Canton, Miss., has just reached the city quite ill, having come for medical treatment. His condition is thought to be serious, and that only an operation can relieve him. His sons are with him, and no effort will be spared to promote his speedy recovery. Let prayer be made for this honored and widely loved minister, whose name is as ointment poured forth throughout all central and south Mississippi.

The New Albany (Miss.) Methodist Church has a choice and faithful member in the person of Mr. Howell Taylor, who is given to abounding in good works. He lately delighted his pastor, the Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, by giving him a trip to the great Dallas Conference, and has subscribed $300 for continuing the campaign among the laymen of the Church. In addition to this, Brother Taylor is supporting a missionary in China. Such liberality is worthy of hearty commendation.

Last week we published two communications in favor of the woman's rights memorial. This week we are publishing two on the other side, which are most excellent reading—one by Mrs. J. W. Perry, the accomplished Second Vice-President of the Woman's Home Mission Society, and another by "Methodist," who is an able and vigorous thinker and writer. And there are more yet to come. Read the New Orleans Advocate, if you desire to keep posted on current issues in the Church.

Rev. L. Carley is on his native heath in serving the people of New Augusta and Richton, Mississippi Conference, having been born in the county in which his present charge is situated. Among other things, he says, "We have never lived among a kinder people; they have endeared themselves to us very much. Mrs. Carley has been quite ill with cardiac asthma, but thanks to Dr. H. P. Smith, the preacher's friend, and a favoring Providence, she is now able to be up. The year has opened encouragingly."

We acknowledge the reception of a kindly invitation from that elect lady, Mrs. T. B. Holloman, to attend the annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference, at Gulfport, March 16-20, and represent the claims of the Advocate. We should be, indeed, happy to accept, but with so many calls and pressing duties, we dare not indulge the hope of being present. We trust that the occasion will be one of both pleasure and profit, and that all the interests of the society will be promoted by this conference of workers.

Rev. E. K. Means, of Minden, La., sends us the following interesting news from his important charge: "The friends and former pastors of the Methodist Church at this place will be pleased to know that the church debt, amounting to $4,000, has this day (March 1) been paid in full. Two members of the Board of Stewards, Brothers J. M. Miller and E. E. Reagan, were appointed a committee to solicit and collect the money. To the tireless efforts of Brother Miller, assisted by Brother Reagan, is due the success. The time of dedicating the church will be announced later."

From the press dispatches, we have learned with regret of the sudden death of Mrs. Blanche Divine Hoss, wife of Mr. E. E. Hoss, Jr., which occurred at their home in Muscogee, Oklahoma, on Feb. 28. She was a daughter of Mr. John L. Divine, deceased, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Chattanooga, Tenn., to which city her remains were taken for burial. About ten years ago she married the eldest son of Bishop E. E. Hoss, and one child, a son, was born to them, now about eight years of age. We deeply sympathize with Bishop Hoss and the other sorrowing ones in this sore bereavement, and pray that the Heavenly Father may comfort and sustain them.

In an appreciated personal note to the editor, Rev. H. T. Gaines, of the North Mississippi Conference, writes: "I was never better pleased with an appointment than I am with Minter City. Rev. J. A. Townes is the best man to his pastor in the Southern Methodist Church. I will put him against any layman that can be found anywhere. He has given us a horse, buggy, harness, and feed for the horse. He has supplied us with things to eat so constantly that our living has cost us very little." Truly, the lines have fallen to Brother Gaines in pleasant places. All, and more, than he has said of Brother Townes is true. A nobler, truer, larger-hearted man would, indeed, be difficult to find.

We regret to chronicle the death of Dr. J. W. Adams, which occurred at his home in this city on Saturday night, the 5th inst., after a lingering illness lasting about a year. He was in the 79th year of his age, having been born in Philadelphia on April 15, 1831. For many years he was one of the most successful and widely known dentists in New Orleans, but retired from the active practice of his profession about ten years ago. He was a prominent member of the Second Methodist Church, and was for many years superintendent of the Sunday school of that congregation. He was one of the trustees of the Methodist Depository in this city, in which building the New Orleans Christian Advocate is published. May God bless the grief-stricken family, and sustain them under the weight of this sore bereavement!

We were deeply pained to learn of the decease of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Shumaker, wife of Rev. J. H. Shumaker, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, which occurred in Nashville, Tenn., on Feb. 21, after a long and severe illness. She was the daughter of Joseph C. and Mrs. Cynthia W. Smyth, and was born in the same city in which her life ended on Dec. 1, 1864. She was married to Rev. J. H. Shumaker in 1890, and for many years wrought faithfully as the wife of an itinerant Methodist preacher in North Mississippi. It was her failing health and the hope that a different climate might prove beneficial that influenced Brother Shumaker to lay aside his loved employ of the pastorate and take up his residence at Nashville. Mrs. Shumaker was possessed of many graces and accomplishments, and was an earnest and devoted Christian. She was never so happy as when working for the Master, and, wherever she went, exerted a far-reaching influence for good. Her obsequies were conducted in Elm Street Church and the interment took place in Mount Olivet Cemetery. Brother Shumaker has the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends in Mississippi in his irreparable sorrow.

LET YOUR EASTER OFFERING GO TO THE ORPHANAGE.

It necessarily follows, that in the establishment of an institution doing charitable work altogether, so long as that institution is unendowed and dependable on voluntary contributions for support, repeated calls for assistance must go forth.

The building of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, at Ruston, La., has thrown upon the Methodist people of Louisiana the responsibility of its care and maintenance, and as the number of inmates of our Orphanage is constantly increasing, the burden of maintenance becomes heavier and heavier. It will ever be so until some large-hearted, benevolent soul, who realizes our needs, comes to our rescue and endows the institution. Hence, I feel that I am perfectly within my rights to issue this appeal for help.

Within a year's time we have grown from a small family of thirteen orphan children and the matron, living in a small four-room cottage, to fifty-two homeless children, with two matrons, in our splendid, new home, now completed. Our expenses for maintenance have increased correspondingly. This has been the severest winter this section has experienced for years. Our fuel bill has been exceedingly heavy; groceries and other living necessities are high; some essential improvements necessary for the protection of our property have been made, and money has come very slowly since Conference.

We were unable to take up all of the note that fell due Jan. 1, and were granted a three-months extension on the unpaid part. That note will fall due April 1. We could not pay all bills for current expenses last month, and the bills for the present month will be due in a few days. There is an imperative need for help. We look to our preachers and people.

I have sent to each pastor an appeal asking him to take an offering on Easter Sunday, March 27, for the Orphanage. No man knows better than I the pastor's burden, and I would be among the last to add to the heavy load they carry, but I appeal to them now, because the need is great, and the children under the care of the Methodist Church in Louisiana will suffer unless help comes. I sincerely hope every pastor will respond to this appeal. If the appeal is made, I am sure the people will respond generously and liberally. Most of our people feel, as one of the leading laymen of the church writes me "no cause in connection with our church work lies closer to my heart." If the people are given a chance they will help.

ANARCHY IN THE CHURCH.

A spirit of lawlessness seems to pervade our day. It not only manifests itself in lynchings and blind tigers, but also in a lack of observance of Church law.

Recently a prominent city pastor decided that the work of administering the elements of the Lord's Supper was too onerous, as there were many communicants in his church. He concluded that the stewards ought to assist, and forthwith called them to that office.

The ordination papers of a deacon authorizes him to assist in the administration of the Lord's Supper. There is absolutely no authority for any layman assisting in that ordinance. Aside from the ordination vow, this brother promised, when received into full connection, "not to mend our rules, but to keep them."

If he has the right to put aside at his own option the ruling of the Church and the custom of the centuries, because it does not suit his convenience or notion, how can he expect the members of his church to be faithful to their vows?

Another evidence of anarchy in the Church is the usurpation of the prerogative of the General Conference by the Nashville Christian Advocate in a recent number. The General Conference is our supreme legislative body. It is a judge of its own membership, makes its rules of order, and directs its committees. Nevertheless the Advocate instructs all parties having papers to present to prepare them in triplicate form and send them to the former secretary prior to the meeting of the Conference. There is no rule of order of the General Conference that authorizes such procedure. The suggestion of triplicate copies is against not only rule sixth of the last General Conference, which requires them in duplicate, but also in spite of the fact that the last General Conference refused to order triplicate papers.

In addition to this the Advocate undertakes to call the committees together for organization "on the afternoon or evening preceding the assembling of the Conference. Till the Conference passes on the credentials of its members there are no members of either the Conference or committees."

All these tendencies to usurp the prerogatives of the Church are unseemly, partake of the natural disorder, and tend to produce that anarchical spirit so prevalent in the present. We need a revival of regard for law, respect for disciplinary requirements and consideration for the parliamentary order of our assemblies.—Rev. A. M. Williams, in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

FERRY SEEDS.

For many years past I have planted Ferry's garden seeds, the company generously furnishing a large package, in addition to paying a fair price for advertising in the Advocate. The package came, as usual, to the office, but as neither the editor or publisher, or the bachelor foreman, had any use for the seeds, the package was forwarded to me at Ruleville. I shall use them. I have always found "Ferry's Seeds" reliable, true to name and first quality. The advertisement will tell you where Ferry's seeds may be found. We thank the publisher for kindly remembering his old friend.

CZAR AS SENTRY.

A story of how the Czar, like Haroun-al-Raschid, took a two hours' walk disguised as a simple soldier is officially reported from Livadia by the Court bulletin. His Majesty wore the uniform of a private of the Sixteenth Rifle Regiment, with complete accoutrements: a rifle, 120 cartridges, and a flask filled with water.

The Czar walked alone. Unrecognized, he saluted the officers, and he thus had an opportunity of seeing the soldier's life as it really is, and not as it appears at imperial parades.

A second anecdote also comes from Livadia, though unofficially. The Czar accompanied by an adjutant, was strolling in the gardens when he suddenly noticed a sentry attacked by hemorrhage. The man vainly tried to salute the Emperor.

His Majesty at once sent his aide-de-camp to order the soldier to leave his post and to report himself to a doctor. But the sentry refused, declaring that he was bound by oath rather to die than to leave his post without being relieved.

The Emperor himself then approached the soldier, and observed to him that by the same oath he was bound first to obey his Emperor, and that by the military code, he, the Czar, had, together with the officer of the guard, alone the right to relieve a sentry.

The Czar ordered the soldier to pass him his rifle and to be off at once.

The Emperor then stood on duty till the officer of the guard hurried to relieve the imperial sentry.—The Daily Mail.

In the March issues of the Youth's Companion appear three stories of adventure by A. W. Tolman—"The Link," "At the Levers," and "The Figure-Eight Knot." Not only are these stories of absorbing interest, but they well illustrate the remarkable acquaintance of this writer with the technical terms and practices in scores of different occupations.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

Mrs. AMANDA D. JACKSON was born Sept. 25, 1855; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, when a girl; was married to George S. Jackson Dec. 23, 1877. Thirty-two years from that day she was stricken with pneumonia and fell a victim to its fatality Jan. 2, 1910. We laid her away in Old Friendship Cemetery, surrounded by many weeping and grief-stricken relatives and friends. Sister Jackson was the mother of eight children, six boys and two girls, of whom three boys and one girl preceded her to the better land. The husband and four children survive her. Sister Jackson loved her home and children with that love that makes labor sweet. She loved her church and was always in her place on preaching days. Her regular attendance makes her vacant seat more conspicuous. Loved ones, weep not as those who have no hope. Your loved one is not gone forever. Though death comes as a foe and deprives us of physical life, Christ comes as our friend and robs death of his sting and the grave of its victory, and offers us eternal life. You have only to take Christ for your personal Savior, and obey his teachings to meet your loved one in paradise.
E. C. SULLIVAN.

MARION McGEE was born in Pina county, Miss., on Feb. 25, 1841, where he spent his life. On March 5, 1861, when only 20 years of age, he was happily married to Miss Nancy Douglas, who still survives him. To this union there was born ten children. Three of his children preceded him to the grave; one son, Joe A. McGee, having passed away just a few weeks before his father's death. This was a severe shock to Brother McGee, who was in feeble health at the time, and he remarked that it would not be long before he would be with him. Brother McGee joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1865, when he was twenty-four years old. He lived a consistent Christian life ever after. Uncle Marion, as he was familiarly called, was a devoted Christian, and during his last sickness talked with his family concerning his departure and the certainty of his hope, and on Dec. 19, 1909, the spirit took its flight, and he was no more. Ah, shall I say no more? No! It only returned to God, who gave it. Of him it can truly be said: "Sleep on, dear one, and take your rest; in the arms of Jesus thou art forever blest."

JOHN A. JONES was born in Alabama May 21, 1840; went into the army as a Confederate soldier in the early part of 1861, was a member of the Noxubee Rifles, afterwards Company F, Eleventh Mississippi Regiment Infantry; was thrice wounded, and once captured. He was a member of O'Neal's Battalion of Sharpshooters detailed from Davis' Mississippi Brigade, and the whole force was captured after the fall of Richmond and sent to Point Lookout, Ind. In October, 1865, he married Miss Mary C. Howell; in 1874 he joined the Methodist Church, and died near West, Miss., Feb. 10, 1910. He leaves a widow, two children and several grandchildren. May God bless and comfort them!

F. A. HOWELL.

JOHN H. MYERS died in Pelahatchie, Miss., Feb. 10, 1910. He was born Aug. 22, 1837. He was a member of the Methodist Church from his boyhood, and always took a live interest in church affairs. His last days were filled with religious joy, such as is rarely seen. He was ready and willing to go up and meet his Lord. He was twice married: first to Miss Emma Carr, and then to Miss Domie Patrick. There were born to him eleven children, eight of whom are living. There are a number of grand and great-grandchildren. His mechanical talent and industry made him a very useful man and a blessing in this section of the country. At Lodebas Church, after religious and Masonic ceremonies, the remains were laid to rest. May the loved ones follow his good example.
C. McDONALD.

On Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 26, 1910, God saw fit to call Brother J. N. SPINKS from this life of temptation to where there is no tempter. He had the privilege of living longer than his allotted time, having reached the ripe age of 81 years and 6 days when death came. He was born near Magnolia, Miss., Jan. 20, 1829. In this community he lived all of his life. His sunset was beautiful. As his sun slowly sank into the western horizon, the sky was tinged with the golden rays of hope for his loved ones. In 1855 he became a member of the Muddy Springs M. E. Church, South, where he remained a consistent member throughout his long, useful life. For nearly forty-five years he was church secretary; he kept the church records in fine, historic style. In 1869 he was married to Miss Ellen Guy, who now survives him. May the God of peace comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones, and may the calling of this brave Confederate veteran, patriotic citizen, and generous Christian draw us all nearer to Him whom we all must face sooner or later. We do not sorrow as those without hope, but look forward with the blessed assurance of being satisfied when we awake in His likeness, where we shall meet again this soldier of the cross, who has conquered the last foe, death.
J. L. DECELL, P. C.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in his unerring wisdom has seen fit to take from our Sabbath school and class, Mrs. NELL TAYLOR HONNELL, therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we each and all, have sustained a deep loss, and with reluctance give up our friend, consoling ourselves that her removal has made heaven more attractive.

Second—That while we feel her loss most grievously, we know, from her pure life on earth, that she is now domiciled near the great white throne on high.

Third—That we tender our condolence to the bereaved loved ones and bid them look up, for while we bear the cross she wears a crown.

MRS. N. M. HAY.

Your doctor's approval of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will certainly set all doubt at rest. Do as he says. He knows. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Have not coughed once all day? Yet you may cough tomorrow! Better be prepared for it when it comes. Ask your doctor about keeping Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. Then when the hard cold or cough first appears you have a doctor's medicine right at hand.

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by the Church Conference at Ripley, Miss.

Whereas, God in his all-wise power has deemed it best to remove from our midst our much-loved sister and friend, Mrs. M. E. MURRY, and whereas, in her death an irreparable loss has been sustained by the town of Ripley, and the M. E. Church South, therefore, be it resolved—

First—That the town has lost one of its most loyal and helpful characters.

Second—That the church has lost one of its most devoted, faithful and consecrated members.

Third—That though our hearts are sad, yet we bow in humble submission to God's will, with thankful hearts that our lives have been blest in having known this pure, noble, unselfish life.

Fourth—That we will profit by a life that was such a blessing to the world, and emulate the example of her whose kind, loving heart and tender sympathy for others made her so like the blessed Master.

Fifth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication; a copy be spread on the minutes of the church record, and a copy be sent to the bereaved family who have the sincere sympathy of the church.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if any one afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 704-35 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give, only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

What we call fortunes, good or ill, are but the wise dealings and distributions of a wisdom higher, and a kindness greater than our own. I suppose that their meaning is that we should learn, by all the uncertainties of life, even the smallest, how to be brave and steady and temperate and hopeful, whatever comes, because we believe that behind it all there lies a purpose of good, and over it all there watches a providence of blessing.

—Henry Van Dyke.

Here Is Power You Can Depend On

KEEP ahead of your work and get things done more rapidly, easily and at less cost by using an I H C gasoline engine.

Until you install one of these engines you are not getting all the profit you deserve from your farming operations. It solves the "help" problem. It is the most economical worker on the farm. At any hour of any day or night it is ready to operate the cream separator, the pump, the grinder, the saw, fanning mill, sheller, huller, grindstone, washing machine, lighting system—any one of many such jobs.

Thousands of farmers have come to depend on this most reliable of helpers, an

I H C Gasoline Engine

Made in Different Styles and Sizes to Suit Every Man's Needs

The I H C line of engines is the most popular on the farm because they are so simple in construction. No previous experience is needed to operate them with complete success. Besides, they develop the greatest power possible from every gallon of gasoline.

Equip a power house at low cost. It will be the biggest paying investment you ever made. Or get a portable engine mounted on trucks or skids.

A pumping engine will solve the wind and water problem; a spraying outfit will enable you to protect your fruit from disease, worms and blight; a sawing outfit will lighten your labor, and a plowing outfit will save your time and horses. Get one, and learn its labor-saving qualities.

There are many styles and sizes, from 1 to 25-horse power—an engine for every section and every problem. Vertical and horizontal (both stationary and portable.) Also gasoline tractors—first-prize-gold-medal winners—the best all-round farm tractors.

Acute Pains

relieve acute pains of any nature. They are equally effective in neuralgia, rheumatism, sciatica, locomotor ataxia, or the pain due to spinal trouble. A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health! What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ills or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ills, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.: "I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 5 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it at once. 'Twill help you.

LESSON FOR MARCH 13.

TWO MIGHTY WORKS.

Matt. viii, 23-34.

Golden Text: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?" Matt. vii, 27.

Between the scripture of this lesson and that of the preceding one is recorded three incidents of such import as to merit more than a passing thought. A scribe, possibly influenced by seeing the great throngs of people following Jesus, made the voluntary offer that he would follow him, not only then, but wherever he should lead. The scribes were abundantly supplied with the comforts of life; not so with Jesus, and he told the scribe that he had not a place where he could lay his head. A hasty resolution, and one formed from its being popular, is not lasting; especially is this true in leaving the world and coming to Christ.

The next one that would be a disciple said that he was willing, but not just at that time; certain duties demanded his attention first; after they were attended to, he would come and cast his lot with those seeking the kingdom. Jesus told him that God's service should come first; the mentioned duties would be attended to by those who had not been impressed as he had been.

The third one is mentioned by Luke, but is supposed to have occurred at the same time with the first two. He said: "Lord, I will follow thee; but first let me return home and tell them all good-by." "No, for no man that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back is fit for the kingdom of God," meaning that the looking back must not be as that of Lot's wife; it must not spring from a reluctance to part with things that are not of Christ.

With all thy soul, all thy mind, and with all thy strength must God and God's service be loved.

The Lord had already given his disciples a command to get ready for a sail over the sea, and it was while such preparations were being made that the three willing followers received instruction suited to their different cases. The multitude that followed him saw that they could go no further with him; only a few could find boats, and the greater number must await his return. It might have been the same old fishing-boat of Simon and Andrew, or one belonging to James and John; that the Lord boarded; however, when they started across they found that they were followed by quite a number of smaller vessels, containing those who desired to follow even across the sea.

Jesus was tired, and for a short season of rest, he sought the hinder and higher part of the vessel, and in a short while he was asleep.

Even if the sea was calm when the start was made, a strong wind, blowing southward from the source of the Upper Jordan, would soon toss the waves into a tempest. So it did, "inasmuch that the ship was covered with the waves, but He was asleep," insensible to the raging storm, and appearing as other tired and exhausted men would appear. The disciples were afraid. Why should they fear?

Was not the Lord there in the ship with them? Had they not seen enough of his power to know that where he was, there was safety? But we need not wonder, for we have seen enough of Christ's power in our own lives to know that we are safe when he is near; yet we shrink before the approach of the least trouble, and fear lest we be overcome. This is not right. Lord, forgive us! Help us to learn that fear and faith cannot live together; one must drive the other out.

These men that were in the ship were sailors, as well as fishermen; they had seen many a storm and had saved themselves by their own skill in handling the boat. Not so now, since the Master had taught them how dependent they were upon the care of the Father in heaven, and how they had only to ask, and they would receive. Their first lesson in trust was taught in their utmost need. Their cry of distress: "Lord, save us; we perish!" awoke the Master, and, still reclining, he said to them: "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

They had some faith, but not enough to know that a ship cannot be wrecked with the Son of God as a passenger. Had they ever read in the 107th Psalm where King David described just such a storm, ending with "He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still?"

The Lord said no more, but probably advancing to the prow of the vessel, looked up as if he saw the fierce wind, and said, "Peace!" Then, looking down upon the surging waters, spreading out his hands as he commanded, "Be still!" Could the elements hear his words? "The sea is his; he made it," and obedience is the evidence of hearing. At once there was a great calm. Not a ripple on the surface of the waters. His disciples were filled with wonder, and could only say: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"

They had yet much to learn of this wonderful man. The time would come when they would see him taken bodily, as if borne upon the wind, and disappear through the clouds that then hung so black and heavy about them.

Sailing on the peaceful waters, the ship was soon landed on the other side of the lake. Then peace and quiet was soon disturbed, for when Jesus and his followers were walking away from the ship, they were met by two men possessed of devils; they were fierce, so much so that passers-by were in danger. They came at once to Jesus, calling out: "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?"

There are plenty of that kind of men nowadays; men that seem to have within them as many devils as these two of the Gergesenes. They are fiercely wicked, and in their very wickedness they unconsciously testify of Jesus. If they are spoken to of God's love, they will tell you not to meddle in their affairs. If these two of the tombs could see our daily papers, they would conclude their own case as not so bad after all. But the fierce and untamed devils must obey the command of the Son of God. He cast them out.

Then the men who had been possessed went into the city and told of all that had been done; and they of the city came out and asked Jesus to go away; they did not want him. Do not wonder at this, for was not the authority of city officials, and even of the federal government, solicited to stop an evangelist from preaching and drive him away from the city of New Orleans? Verily, we are worse than the Gergesenes!

SOME CORRECTIONS.

There are several inaccuracies in the report from McHenry and Wiggins charge as printed in the Minutes of the late Mississippi Annual Conference. In the column for members reported last year the Journal gives 290, while my report gave 295. The total membership is given in the printed table as 295, while my report gave 243. My report gave 16 additions on profession of faith, and 20 by certificate and otherwise. The printed table is blank. I reported 17 infants and 3 adults baptized. The printed table is blank. I reported the value of houses of worship at $6500. The printed report gives it at $650. I reported 10 members of the W. F. M. Society. The printed report gives 8. I reported grand total from tables 1, 2 and 3 at $1,646.65. The printed table gives it $1,649.65. Some of these inaccuracies are of less importance than others, but I give them as they are.

THE BEST SEED THAT GROWS—SELECTED FOR THE SOUTH

THIS is the prize-winning corn for the greatest number of ears per acre. The BEST "seeded" corn. Our thoroughbred "seeded" seed is yielding from 50 to 100 bushels per acre every year. Our customers from every state are reporting successful crops. The ears average 10 to 12 inches long, with 18 to 20 rows of perfectly formed, deep-set, white grains. Ears average about 50 percent grain, stalks deep green and very succulent. Practically no barren ones or nibblers. It will pay you to plant "Seed Corn." Use a little of it this year—just enough to get plenty of this "seeded" seed for planting your entire crop the following season. The immense yield will amply surprise you.

In the interest of scientific farming, we have prepared a booklet which we are sending absolutely free to any farmer who requests us to mail it. It is a very interesting document devoted specifically to the planting of corn. For a good many years we have given deep thought and much study to this special branch of agriculture. The information that it contains will prove of considerable value to planters, because it points out the way to more successful and profitable corn growing. It means "more corn per acre." Write us to send you this free "Corn Book." A postal card will do.

Tidings from the Field

Shaw, Miss.:

Rev. W. W. Woollard, our new presiding elder, came to us Feb. 27, according to appointment, and, notwithstanding the lowering clouds gave us a constant mist of rain all day, we gave him a congregation at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., and he was equal to the occasion. He gave us two strong sermons. They were well rendered, full of deep thought and edifying and stimulating to the pastor and his flock. At 9 a.m., Monday, he met the full official board of Shaw, and Brother C. H. Dennis, one of our good, wide-awake stewards of Merigold, in the pastor's study, where the business of the first quarterly conference was dispatched. He completely won the entire official board, as he did his congregation the day before, and, taking all things as they were; we had a delightful quarterly conference. We reported our members all at peace one with another; fourteen additions to the church this quarter, and none lost by death or otherwise; two splendid Sunday schools; twenty-seven new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate; a new fence around the parsonage, and the parsonage newly and beautifully papered throughout by the consecrated women of Shaw Home Mission Society; and last, but not least, every dollar of our domestic mission fund, assessed by the Conference Board, was paid in full and sent in on Feb. 28, with a determined resolution of the pastor and official board to pay our foreign missionary assessment on or before May 1.
Now, if this is a good report, let honor go where it rightly belongs; for it is due to the fact that I have a most excellent official board and faithful members, who are ever ready to co-operate with their pastor in every good word and work; for, without their co-operation, I could do nothing. May the rich blessings of the all-wise Father above ever rest on the Advocate and its many readers.

—Luther A. McKeown.

March 1.

Ripley, Miss.:

We closed a fine revival at Ripley on Feb. 15, after ten days of fine preaching and large attendance. Our congregations were large from the very first, and the interest ran higher and higher until the close. A great work was done in the church, which shows itself in our prayer-meeting and Sunday-school attendance. The preaching was done by Rev. J. A. Bowen, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but now conference missionary evangelist of the North Alabama Conference. He delivered a great gospel message at each service, which was well received and greatly enjoyed by our people. The North Alabama Conference made no mistake in putting Brother Bowen in the field as an evangelist. He should have been there long ago. No one better suited for the work could have been found. Our people at Ripley are preparing to reseat their church with oak pews and add some Sunday school rooms, which are very much needed.

They hope to have it completed by May or June. Also our congregation at Falkner is fixing to reseat, refloor, paint and paper their house, and put a good chapel organ in it. Our people at Blue Mountain are still at work at their debt and doing all they can to pay it off. They still owe something over $200. They will soon have a fine steel alloy bell, weighing 570 pounds, to call them to church and Sunday school. We thank the Lord and try to move on.—J. H. Bass.
March 2.

Rienzi, Miss.:

With much pleasure we note the advancement in the great cause of our Master as given through your valuable columns of different issues, and extending over practically our entire Conference. This is what Methodism means, for it certainly conveys the idea of Christian progress, without any limitations whatsoever. While we have not been heard from before, we have upon our minds and hearts the Lord's work, with all that it means, and are doing our best, and believe we will have a great year on Rienzi Circuit. Our people are true and loyal Methodists, and co-operate with their pastor. Our Sunday schools are moving on with a keen interest, and in Rienzi we have a union prayer service (with the Baptists), having united our efforts in this work, and hope, through God's grace, to reach those who are out of the ark of safety, and be strengthened ourselves.
We are praying for a great revival, and you will hear more from us later.
We regret so much to hear of the death of Sister H. R. Tucker. She was for a long time my faithful Sunday school teacher at Booneville, and from her always came inspiration and encouragement.—Elijah H. Cunnings, ham.
Feb. 28.

New Albany Ct., North Miss.:

We worshiped last Sunday in the new Methodist church at Ecu. The day was quite rainy, in consequence of which the congregation was small.
But the few who were out felt that it was good to be there. It was the first time God had been worshiped in a house erected for that purpose in that growing little town. The people enjoyed it, too, because they had worked and prayed so earnestly for the success of the enterprise. Several articles have appeared in the Advocate on the success achieved at Blue Mountain. We have had the same conditions to discourage at Ecu, and I doubt if we have had as much outside help and sympathy as that noble little band. The house is still unfinished, but we have it far enough along to worship in and preserve what has been done. And all this without any indebtedness. I know this will be good news to Revs. J. H. Mitchell and N. G. Augustus, who made the first start for a Methodist church at Ecu. The other churches of the charge, the church in New Albany, the Board of Church Extension, and Rev. J. H. Ingram have helped us in a material way, to all of whom we feel very grateful.—A. W. Langley.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1910.

C. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

VOL. 57—No. 11.

"PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

WHOLE No. 2822.

Editorial.

The most serious near-sightedness is that which limits one's vision to this present world.

If higher criticism has ever made a minister more effective as a soul-winner, there is no record of it. An ecclesiastical microscopist is a poor substitute for a preacher of faith and spiritual power.

The world is weary of religious pretense. Men who recite the creeds of Christianity with their lips, and negative them with their lives, are among the greatest hindrances to the progress of the Church.

"Be courteous," wrote Saint Peter to the primitive Christians. The religion of Christ overlooks not a single virtue, but tends to foster and develop every grace calculated to ennoble or adorn character. The very essence of courtesy is thoughtfulness of others, and that is plainly taught throughout the Book of Holy Writ. Christian perfection must necessarily include considerateness of one's fellowmen.

Integrity is the crowning glory of manhood. To say that one can be trusted is to pay him a high tribute. There is always hope for a person who is dependable, though he may be far away from the divine kingdom. There is within him a foundation of rock upon which to build. But take genuineness away from an individual, and, no matter what remains, he is immeasurably poor. Wealth, brilliancy of intellect, exalted station, or nothing else, can take the place of a vanished rectitude. Well-nigh damned is the soul whose habitual attitude is one of duplicity.

Two things absolutely essential to a successful ministry are a knowledge of Christ's power to save and a vision of humanity's great need. Unless one believes that the death-dealing plague of sin holds the race in its terrible grip and that the only remedy is the blood of Calvary, he is sure to lack in zeal and earnestness. As another has said, "The gospel of a broken heart demands a ministry of bleeding hearts." The spectacle of human beings going to wreck and ruin every day, and the fact that God has at infinite cost given us an infallible cure for that which is destroying them, ought to put fire into the bones and vigor into the step of even the most lethargic preacher.

The building of Christian character is a life-time task. The master architect in carrying forward the work is the Holy Spirit. He instructs; he guides; he quickens; he empowers. But we also have our part to perform in the process. We must pray; we must study the divine Word; we must discover our weaknesses, and seek to guard against them; we must practice self-discipline, and win the mastery of every wayward thought, appetite, and passion. And when, finally, our characters shall have become like that of our Lord, we will have risen to the loftiest summit of human destiny, and be ready for an eternity "in the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

MODERN PHARISAISM.

Many who lay claim to a high type of piety are much given to fault-finding. Affecting to be perfect themselves, they feel called to exercise a rigid censorship over their brethren. They seldom see any good in the Church, but they are Argus-eyed to discover the evil in it. They seem blind to everything except that which is bad. Their croakings never cease. They are sure that all except themselves and a few others like them are rushing to destruction. And they are disposed to wield "the big stick" in the world religious. Every one in Zion who does not conform to their conception of piety, they desire to drive out. Apparently, they are more concerned to stigmatize and punish sinners than to save them. With such a religion, we have scant patience. Its spirit is precisely that which characterized the Pharisaism of our Lord's time, and which he so scathingly rebuked. Jesus saw good in the most abandoned of the race, and, seeing it, he held out to the fallen a helping hand. In the outcast harlot, trembling beneath the curses of men, he discovered the possibilities of illustrious sainthood, and opened wide the door of hope to her wandering feet. Pessimism is not piety. To be cynical is not to exhibit superior sanctity. A gospel of wholesale destruction is not the gospel of the man of Galilee. We thoroughly believe in the Wesleyan doctrine of Christian perfection, but not in the kind that claims immaculate purity for one's self and brands all others as unclean. There are different degrees of faith; there are different stages of development in the Christian life; the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear. The weakest and most imperfect child of God is not to be despised. He should be gently taught and assisted up the shining way. To be forever hurling anathemas at him is nothing short of wicked. Any alleged experience of grace that does not bring with it an enlarged charity is to be viewed with suspicion.

A MALIGNER TAKEN TO TASK.

For the past year or two Mr. Tom Watson, of Georgia, formerly a candidate for the presidency of the United States on the Populist ticket and a politician of some notoriety, has constituted himself a severe and carping critic of the work of foreign missions. While Cleveland, Harrison, Roosevelt, Bryan, Taft, Ambassador Bryce, and, in fact, all of the leading statesmen and diplomats of the world, have been paying tribute to the high character of missionaries and testifying to the valuable service which they have rendered to the cause of civilization and humanity, this man has sought in every possible way to depreciate their achievements and create a prejudice against them. Whether his course has been due to ignorance of what has been accomplished in pagan lands and a distorted conception of foreign missionary work, or to a wilful and malicious desire to misrepresent a cause for which, without reason, he has formed a violent dislike, we shall not undertake to say. Conscious of the falsity of his allegations, the churches have paid little attention to his loud railings and accusations. They have been so utterly without anything to sustain them, that small notice has been accorded them by the religious press.

But, apparently irritated by the lack of interest awakened by his former assaults, Mr. Watson has lately become even more bitter and venomous in his attacks. In his last outbreak he is reported to have charged that "Elsie Siegel was a missionary; that there are cases similar to that girl among the American women missionaries in China, and that more American women are led astray by the Chinese than there are Chinese converts." Stirred to indignation by the baseness of such a charge, Mr. William T. Ellis, a distinguished newspaper man of Philadelphia, who has been a great traveler and who is thoroughly familiar with missionary work throughout the Orient, took the matter up, posted himself accurately, and came to Atlanta to discuss the subject. In a public address before the Bible Conference in that city last week, he read affidavits from the State Department and others high in authority showing that Elsie Siegel had never at any time been employed as a missionary by any church or association, and that Mr. Watson has not a single shred of proof to support his statement. And referring to his accusation as to what is going on in China, Mr. Ellis said in words that rang with emphasis, "This charge is monstrous. I owe it to the Georgia women that I met in the Orient to come down here and nail this slander."

All honor to this brave and noble editor! In driving this noisy calumniator to the wall, he has rendered the cause of truth and righteousness a substantial and needed service, and deserves the thanks of the Christian people of the nation, and especially of the South. Of Mr. Watson's course and utterance, we dare not trust our hand to write. If he has been correctly reported, he is utterly unworthy of the Southern blood which courses through his veins, and his name should be spoken only in execration and contempt. One who, without the slightest semblance of warrant, could thus libel the heroic women who are toiling and sacrificing to extend the divine kingdom in heathen lands, is, it seems to us, capable of almost anything mean and despicable in the category of human actions.

We frequently hear it said, "Once a Roman Catholic, always a Roman Catholic." But that statement is very far from being true. The adherents of Rome themselves figure their losses at 10,000,000 in the United States within the last century. Joseph McCabe, a scholarly ex-Catholic priest, estimates that the Romish Church has lost in Europe and America within the last hundred years not less than 80,000,000 adherents. Referring to losses in the United States, he says: "The 10,000,000 or so of Catholics in the United States do not represent a miraculous addition to the Vatican. They came from Ireland, Austria, Italy, Germany, Poland, France, Canada, and Mexico. They are but the salvage from one of the most appalling wrecks that Catholicism has suffered during the fatal nineteenth century. In fact, they do not represent one-half of the descendants of Catholic immigrants into the United States."

THE FINISHED MAN.

By Rev. W. S. Harrison.

"How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?"

What is God's ideal of the finished man? The human product complete? When is this to be realized? The resurrection must be reckoned with. Man cannot be complete till this great event takes place. This has always been a subject of mystery; sometimes of heated controversy. It was acute in the days of the apostles. "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" St. Paul's answer to these questions is worthy of study. The answer is not in abstract terms, but by parable. That's the way Jesus taught.

"Thou fool," (aphron,) simpleton, vacant minded. It is hardly fair for the translators to make him seem to use the word fool (more), forbidden by the Great Teacher in the Sermon on the Mount. It is hard to do justice to some people without the use of that word!

"Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Likewise, said the Master: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." The gift of life by the grain to the new plant is at the cost of dissolution. Likewise the death of the body is precedent to the finished man, the resurrection life.

"How are the dead raised up?" How does the wheat plant grow? In the living wheat plant we have the parable of the resurrection.

"Thou sowest not that body that shall be." Now, it seems to me, the apostle by this comparison teaches that the "body that shall be," the resurrection body, is not the same body which was buried in the earth.

"Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or some other grain." We sow the bare grain (gumnon kokkon), the naked grain! How small, how dry this naked grain! In contrast, note the branch of wheat which springs from it; four to six stalks, each bearing a long ear, packed with grains. This product (roots, stems, blades, wheat and chaff) exceeds by more than 200 times the weight of the original seed-grain; probably not an atom of the seed remains in the plant. Truly "thou sowest not that body that shall be."

Yet in all the processes of growth, the identity of the plant is maintained. But identity does not consist in the sameness of the materials which from time to time enter into the growth. "God hath given it a body as it hath pleased him"—a body very different from that which died in the ground; yet in identity of plant life, the same. "To every seed his own body."

This is St. Paul's parable of the resurrection; his illustration of how the dead are raised up, and with what body they come.

The life in the plant makes its own body. This is how "God gives it a body as it pleases him," by the natural processes of growth. We are ignorant of any other way God may have of making living bodies. This applies to all organic life.

The child is born with a body constructed by natural processes. From that hour by its own vital forces it makes body for itself. In a few years it has a new body. Not a particle of the one it began with remains. Its first resurrection! So on through life each person takes in, assimilates, vitalizes, and thus incorporates the dead materials into the living tissues of his own body. This is life. There is a corresponding decay. The materials which become vital in the tissues of the body serve their purpose, lose their hold, become effete, and are cast off, dead as they were before they became part of the living body.

Thus, the life in us is making and losing body all the time. We die daily as we live daily. As long as the vital forces are in the ascendent we live. When the waste becomes greater than the recuperating power, we die. By the time a man reaches the ripe age of fourscore he has made and lost some twelve or fifteen bodies. In death one more body is added to the number. In the resurrection, which of all these will the spirit claim? or will it care for any of them? Is there any reason why it should prefer the one which at the last went into the tomb? In the final dissolution the spirit, the soul, does in effect what it had been doing in life: parts with that which is effete and no longer necessary.

No parable can fit in every point. The misfit in this one is this: the vitality which gives existence to the plant is in the seed. But there is no germ of life in the dead human body. The life is in the spirit. How, then, shall the spirit get back his own? "How are the dead raised up?" in some manner similar to the growth of the wheat plant; else there would be no meaning in St. Paul's comparison.

"With what body do they come?" What choice of materials will be left when all bodies shall have been reduced to elemental existence? This is the common lot. Only a few noted exceptions. Enoch and Elijah were translated. Jesus conquered death in the same body which suffered on the cross. His body did not see corruption like David's and all others. And he came from the tomb a citizen still of this, rather than of the spiritual world. He had flesh and bones unlike spiritual beings. Before his ascension he must have experienced a change similar to that given to Enoch and Elijah. Some such change will come to all who shall be living when the trumpet shall sound the knell of time.

Whatever differences there shall be in the future, bodies will surely be made by the souls themselves when each shall transmute these dull materials into his own spiritual fibre.

A TEMPERANCE NARRATIVE.

By An Aged Local Preacher.

I live in a large city. Eleven years ago I solemnized the marriage rite between a young couple in my home. Two years later I baptized, in my home, their first born babe. Several years later I baptized, in my home, two other children of different ages. Their home during this baptismal period and now was beyond the city limits on the line of a suburban railway—a street car line. Last night, February 7, 1910, that couple came to my house. He was perceptibly intoxicated, but was able to tell me that he desired to break off from his drink habit and live a strictly sober life, and had come, with his wife, one little boy and a gentleman friend, to get me to administer to him a temperance pledge for one year, and that I could make it as strong as I pleased.

He was in the service of a business company and his wife said to me, privately, that he regularly turned over to her his wages. Aside from his occasional liquor indulgence, their married life was happy. I had not seen them together since their marriage night. I wrote a strong pledge to abstain from all kinds of intoxicating drinks for one year. He signed it. I signed, as a witness. So did his wife and their gentleman friend. I gave the completed writing to his wife and followed the gift with a prayer, and they left our home before 9 o'clock.

If he should keep his pledge for twelve months he will furnish hope that he may keep it for twelve years, and for all the years of the life he may live.

Possibly this narrative may be read by some wives who have husbands that are prone to the drinking of spirituous liquors, and possibly to an occasional intoxication. If those erring men would imitate the example of the man to whom I have reference, and try a pledge of abstinence from all that intoxicates, what comfort their act would be to their wife and children, if children there be.

This is an age of divorce between husbands and wives, and in many cases the drink habit on the part of a husband has prepared the way for divorce. Without it, in many cases, divorce would not have occurred.

I will not discuss the habit of chewing and smoking tobacco among men, further than to say that my wife and I have lived together in the married state more than sixty-three years and in all that time I have never been a user of tobacco in any way.

I have written the foregoing for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which comes to me regularly, and here I greet most cordially the new editor on his tripod, and greet Pastor Werlein in his pastoral charge. We were associated pleasantly in Centenary Church in other years.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

IV.

My father had some valuable books. Among them was Clarke's Commentary on the Old Testament which he read often. He also had Fletcher's Check to Antinomianism, which helped to get predestinarianism and antinomianism out of him, root and branch. By the time he had read these books through he was a Methodist of the purest type. I mention this, because my parents were brought up under the influence of the primitive Baptists.

I had a copy of the New Testament given me by an uncle, after whom I was named, before my conversion. I really had no taste for reading my Bible. To me, it was dry reading. After my conversion, I enjoyed reading my Testament more than any other book. I bought a copy of our Methodist Discipline and Fletcher's Christian Perfection. These three books constituted my library for a year or more.

Many hours were spent by my brother, W. B. Lewis, and myself, under a beautiful arbor of vines and branches of trees. Under this arbor we were completely hid from outside view. It was our place of prayer, reading and meditation. We spent many happy hours together in that sacred spot. Morning, noon and evening, when we could, we resorted to our place of prayer. My heart is tender—my eyes moisten while I write these lines; as I think of the sweet seasons we had there together.

Often, in connection with our most sacred moments, there are incidents that occur which afterwards appear amusing. I now remember one in connection with this place of prayer. It was in the summer of 1856. Rev. H. M. Youngblood was our pastor and preacher. He was frequently in my father's home. He was a good nurse for young Christians. He seldom, if ever, lost an opportunity to talk and pray with and for my brother and me. On one occasion, while spending an evening and night in our home, he put one arm around my neck, the other around my brother's, and started to a nearby grove. We went in the direction of our place of prayer. There was only one entrance, and it was partly hid from view by vines. It was dark. Brother was ahead. He stooped down and slipped in. I followed. Brother Youngblood could not see the entrance. He pulled at the vines awhile, then knelt down and groaned. He tried again to enter, but failed. The devil got after him—so he said. He walked away, climbed a near by fence, broke a rail, then made for a near by stream of water and knelt on the ground for prayer. The devil suggested that he was in danger of being bitten by a snake. He resisted the devil, and in a little while was praying in real earnest. He got happy and began to shout. Brother and I soon joined him. This occurred nearly fifty-four years ago. Brother Youngblood, after the war, transferred to the White River Conference, had trouble with his presiding elder, quit our Church and joined the Methodist Protestant Church. He died many years ago.

It was good for us that we found this beautiful place, provided by the God of Nature. I never miss "The Bower of Prayer" without being reminded of the "sweet long ago." One verse of that song runs thus:

"Sweet bower, where the vine and the poplar are spread,
And wove with their branches a roof over my head;
How oft have I knelt on the evergreen there,
And poured out my soul to my Savior in prayer."

But the time came when we had to leave that "sweet bower" arbor and go elsewhere, where duty called. Let me close this chapter with the 7th, 8th and 9th verses of this wonderful old time song:

"Dear bower, I must leave you and bid you adieu,
And pay my devotion in parts which are new—
Well knowing my Savior is found everywhere,
And can, in all places, give answer to prayer."

"Although I may never revisit your shade,
Yet, oft shall I think of the vows I there made;
And when, at a distance, my thoughts shall repair
To the place where my Savior oft answered my prayer."

"My blessed Redeemer, my hope and my all,
Will guide and direct me when on Him I call,
And when I am dying, He'll be with me there,
And take me to heaven in answer to prayer."

Jackson, Miss.

REV. CLARENCE A. POWELL.

Brother Powell died on Thursday afternoon, December 2d, at Newton, Mississippi. He was nearing the close of his third year there as pastor, and the thirty-fifth year of his active ministry. Born in Yazoo County, March, 1853, converted and licensed under the ministry of Rev. Ira B. Robinson, he entered the conference in the class with T. B. Holloman, also of Yazoo County, in 1873.

He married, during this year, Miss Susie Carson, of Leake County, who blessed his life with her companionship, walking its thirty-five years of service serving at his side. Of eleven children, eight survive—Clara, Fred, Irma, Lula, Kate, Clarence, Joseph and little Lily.

More than ten years ago an agreement was spoken between two members of this Conference touching a day in the future when one should be taken and the other left. No argument went before, nor followed the affectionate sentences which spoke the hearts of these friends. No seers were they to eye the future, and mark the place and circumstances where the pact of friendship should be interrupted and cease upon the earth, and the agreement rise to press upon the survivor its sacred obligation.

It falls upon me now, one party in that agreement made years ago, to perform the tender service tenderly assigned to me by my departed friend and brother. I crave indulgence from my brethren for the personal note preliminary to what shall follow, though how this note shall take coherent form at all without the burden of the personal sense of loss penetrating and filling it, I can not see.

In the completeness of the tempered blade flashes forth the earnest and the prophecy of its future execution. Strong character in the minister is explanation and guaranty of a great conduct of his ministrations, when such character is set within an unshakable faith. I would describe Brother Powell in such terms as these. Strength of character, in native and generous endowment was his. His mind was clear and penetrating, his opinion staunch and positive, his courage high and indomitable. He would have been distinguished in any walk of life. His Lord was his only master—but that mastery was entire, toning his servant's strong spirit into noble expansion, into steadfast, unmovable expression. Entirely rooted, grounded, and submitted to the gracious will of God, his ministry found its ready expression from his conception of the mighty cardinal facts and his consciousness of God. His preaching grew straightway from the doctrines which affected him most profoundly.

His own exquisitely tender character as parent gave depth to his unspeakable appreciation of the Fatherhood of God. Tenderness, jealous devotion to his household was a marked element of his character. His personal force stood him a strong providence to his own; he watched over, commanded, brooded over his loved ones with the sleepless vigil of complete and competent affection. So minded, the Fatherhood of God with its perfect application of divine Providence, command and care, appealed to this father and entirely satisfied him in his sense of perfect security as a son.

Brother Powell dwelt upon this doctrine, preaching it continuously and powerfully.

Christ, the Son of God, envied by the Father's love, representative of that love to the world whose redemption he was commissioned and sent to accomplish—upon this theme, also, Brother Powell dwelt and taught. Upon these lofty planes of truth he stood, his faith as cloudless as a summer sun at noon—and, conscious of his commission he preached. The love of God—love fulfilling the law—the love of Christ, his love moving upon the conquest of the world with all the power and substance of heaven engaging it—Brother Powell stood upon these truths conspicuously impressed upon his spirit. Instructive, exalting, his preaching with rare breadth moved between the poles of these doctrines.

He was never in doubt. The native force of his spirit folded fully within the will of the divine Spirit, gave undisturbed assurance to his firm and settled faith. His was the confidence of granite, cohering from the principle within it, binding into unity its inflexible crystals. To an inquiry from a brother pastor some hours preceding his death, as to readiness for departure, his response was prompt, without hesitation that "That matter had been settled long ago." Simple index pointing back thirty-five years, where his faith opened and established his normal relation to God and life.

To mention his conduct and course as a man among men is to continue the course which marked Brother Powell's walk with God. His life was a commentary, amplifying the text of his relation with his God. Accurate justice spoke from him. It may be that one here and there, in personal contact, and upon the other side of an unsettled question, might have deemed him hard. His course was the clear and candid expression of his sense of justice. From that sense, as he understood and believed, no friend nor enemy might move him. With some there is a gift, of uncertain value, by using which a position may be held with firmness while a personal charm of manner removes the pang and sense of disappointment from the man defeated, the position lost. This gift was of no special cultivation in Brother Powell. Had it been so, his ambitions might have widened boundaries—he would have been a leader of moment, by many gladly heard and followed. As it was, his modesty was of the delicate quality which likens a womanly woman to the violet. He was content to be right, to do right; if his position strengthened others, he was deeply gratified, saying little.

In his home he was devotion itself, with the devotion of the strong paternal spirit conscious of providential capacity and obligation. The tender wife, each of the children, together, composed the apple of his eye.

Loyalty to friends naturally characterized him. Loyalty which defines itself in a consciousness that it contributes helpfully to the object of its attention. Brother Powell's could not be described as the loyalty which appeals in the clinging vine, grasping its trellis the stronger from its fear that it would fall unaided. The tenderness of the vine was there, the tenaciousness of the clasp was there; the weakness of the vine had no place in his loyalty to his friends. Strong in so much, his strength was unabated at this central station of influence.

It is not usual for a member of a body like this to pass the greater part of his ministry in comparatively less responsible charges as Brother Powell has done, and be held as he has been in such esteem. "One of the ablest," "One of the strong men of the Church," are terms which have always described him. Where his assignments by the Church carried him, his record began, grew and closed equally, whether upon circuit or station or district. Of the community, the careless and the frivolous obtained and maintained profound respect for the preacher. Those more thoughtful but less religious, learned to admire the intellectual strength and unshakable principles of the minister of God. The pious, the Christian people of the community devotedly loved and supported their pastor and friend.

More than once our brother was prostrated with severe illness. Under bodily affliction he bore himself with fortitude as unusual as it was characteristic. An incident will illustrate, occurring a few days before his death. Great physical agony attended the final stages of the disease from which he suffered. Unable to lie down, nor sit, nor stand, with comfort, he would pass restlessly through all these changes of position, vainly seeking to breathe easily. Unable to bear the agony further, he groaned—broke forth in a succession of groans on this occasion. As his friend, hearing him, came in and sat down by the bedside, the groans ceased. Sitting in bed at the moment, with head drooping and lines of agony wrinkling his face—and with intervals between the words, he gasped: "This noise is out of order, you must excuse me!" This quenchless courtesy to his friend, this considerateness in such anguish, upset the friend, who tearfully begged him to groan all he would, while breathing a prayer for the blessing of relief upon him.

I must not prolong this paper. His brethren are called to one final observation of his life and character. This is in the statement that Brother Powell was remarkably clear and satisfying in his expounding and interpretation of our Arminian theology. Not technically a scholar, perhaps, nor widely read in books, he nevertheless possessed an equipment of spirit and mind admirably adapted for statement and exposition of Arminian Methodism.

The life of James Arminius lies near me as these lines are penned. I have been moved by the fitness of sentiment which was spoken in an obituary notice of the venerated father—the sentiment folds about and fits the estimate we have of our brother who has given us distinguished service, and brought profit and honor upon the Church he loved.

This is the sentence (translated): "Here lived a man, whom they that did not know him could not sufficiently esteem; whom they that did not esteem him could not sufficiently have known."

His friend and brother,

W. H. HUNTLEY.

MRS. FRANCES PENELOPE LITTLE.

Mrs. Frances Penelope Little, wife of Rev. Duncan Alexander Little, late of the Mississippi Conference, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. S. B. Enochs, in Jackson, Tenn., Jan. 14, 1910, and was buried in Jackson, Miss., by the side of her husband and four children.

Mrs. Little was born in Autauga county, Ala., and at the age of nine years removed with her parents, John and Amanda Sheely, to Jasper county, Miss., where she was married to Mr. D. A. Little, a young lawyer of Paulding, on Oct. 10th, 1866. Some years after their marriage Mr. Little was converted, and in the fall of 1870 joined the Mississippi Conference, where he soon took rank with the best and wisest preachers in the State. For many years he was kept in the presiding eldership, filling some of the most important districts in that Conference.

Sister Little became a Christian in early childhood, and at that time entered upon a course of life that meant so much to the Church in after years. She was a woman of strong convictions, with a clear-cut, definite Christian experience. Being richly endowed in mind and heart, she was always ready to give a convincing reason for the hope that was in her. She was a tireless and efficient church worker, delighting to take an active part in the public services or to read the gospel to the sick in the private home and talk to them of Christ. In all the work of the church she was very helpful to her pastor, having had the experience of years of training and counsel in a Methodist parsonage, her advice was always good.

As a mother and wife she reigned as a queen among women. The useful ministry of her distinguished husband derived much of its force and effectiveness from her. She looked after the children and so ordered the affairs of the home that many of the burdens were lifted from the shoulders of her husband, so that he could give himself more fully to his work for the Lord. She was the mother of nine children, four of whom are dead. The five living are, Chas. C. Little, Port Gibson; Duncan A. Little, Jackson; Geo. G. Little, Winona; Mrs. R. C. Kelley, Jackson, and Mrs. S. B. Enochs, Jackson, Tenn.

Sister Little has many friends throughout the State who will deeply regret her sudden going from us and who sympathize with the children in this great loss to their home. But, like her sainted husband, she has left us to enter into her great reward. Her beautiful Christian life will ever abide with us as an inspiration and a blessing. May the Christ whom she trusted and in whose faith she triumphantly passed away comfort and bless her loved ones who so deeply feel the loneliness of her going.

J. C. LOWE.

And Brother J. C. Lowe has gone. He was one of my Conference classmates. We joined the Annual Conference together at Jackson, Tenn., in November, 1881, and out of a class of thirteen but two of us, as far as I know, are still living—myself and Brother Amos Jones, of Jackson, Tenn.

Brother Lowe was a true, good man. I have been associated with him much during these forty-eight years, and never knew him to do anything unbecoming a Methodist preacher. He was a good preacher, and a good and useful man.

ANOTHER COMRADE GONE.

On Sunday morning, February 27 ult., Brother J. C. Lowe passed away at his home in Monteagle, Tenn. He was a member of our Ministerial Relief Association. The members have until March 24 to pay Assessment No. 2, which goes to Sister Lowe. She is needy and worthy, and I urge all the members to send their mortuary fee to Rev. John Park, Oxford, Miss., as soon as possible. At a later date I will issue call for Assessment No. 3.

A bill is pending in the Mississippi Legislature, with a favorable outlook for its passage, to appropriate $75,000 to establish a State charity hospital at Jackson. The city in which it is to be situated is expected to add to this $25,000, $5000 of which has been subscribed by Major R. W. Millsaps, who is widely known for his generous deeds, and whose philanthropy far surpasses that of any other man who has ever lived in that commonwealth.

Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, the official head of the Christian Scientists, in issuing a Christmas greeting to her followers, wished them, among other things, "a famine of sense." Evidently Sister Eddy is no iridescent wisher or dreamer. In many things, particularly in the matter of finance, she exhibits extraordinary practicability. A mystic she may be, but she knows how to keep a full pocketbook and take good care of her own material interests.

A letter has recently been received at Nashville, Tenn., from Oxford, England, which brings the information that Mr. M. F. Woodrow, the young Vanderbilt student who was awarded the Cecil Rhodes scholarship in 1906, has added another honor to the record of his alma mater by winning the Vinerian law scholarship at Oxford University. This is the first time that this valued prize has been won by an American. Hurrah for Vanderbilt and her brilliant young representative!

A dispatch to the Chicago Inter Ocean from Alexandria, Va., states that a movement is beginning, to erect in that quaint old town a Masonic memorial to George Washington. The enterprise contemplates the construction of a $1,000,000 temple, in which will be a hall of fame, where space will be allotted to all of the grand jurisdictions of the country to use in honoring their distinguished sons. The project is expected to become national in its scope and enlist all the lodges in America.

It is stated that William J. Bryan will lead the fight for county option in the State of Nebraska. This will give the temperance people of that commonwealth an eloquent and conspicuous leader. The moral element has always been strong in Mr. Bryan, and we are not surprised to see him take up his lance to do battle against the iniquitous liquor traffic which is the greatest curse of our time. All honor to this brave tribune of the people, and may success crown his efforts in this new crusade!

A press dispatch from Franklin, New Hampshire, states that the foreclosure of a mortgage on the farm, near that place, where Daniel Webster was born, may lead to the formation of an association to purchase and maintain the property as a memorial to the famous statesman. Senators Lodge and Crane of Massachusetts and Gallinger of New Hampshire, are said to be much interested in the project. The scheme deserves to succeed. The spot where the great "Olympian thunderer" first opened his eyes to the light will always be a place of interest to thousands of Americans.

The next inter-collegiate oratorical contest in Mississippi will be held at Greenville on May 13. The institutions whose representatives will compete are Millsaps College, the State University, the A. and M. College, and Mississippi College. In addition to the speaking, there will be athletic contests, and nothing will be left undone to make the occasion a pleasurable one for all visitors. The proposal to have dancing on the excursion boats ought, however, to be abandoned. With church schools participating, entertainments of that character are not only inappropriate, but, under the circumstances, would be actually discourteous to the Christian young men in attendance.

Senator James Gordon, of Mississippi, after having loved his way into national fame and listened to the plaudits of his countrymen of all sections of the Union, returned to his home at Okolona on the 11th inst., where he was accorded a great ovation. His brief incumbency in the United States Senate emphasizes more than anything else the fact that the day of sectional animosity is far spent, and that the dawn of an era of good-will is at hand. Both North and South should unite in hushing forever the demagogic voice that seeks to keep alive the bitter memories of the Civil War. The nation has already had more than enough of that.

The movement for a Panama Exposition in the Crescent City is awakening much enthusiasm among the business men and leading citizens of New Orleans. Indeed, the project is said to be exciting more general interest than any other undertaking since the Cotton States Exposition twenty-five years ago. A large delegation left for Washington on a special train last Saturday to take the matter up with the authorities of the Federal Government. The Mayor, the Governor, and the Louisiana representatives in Congress are said to be enthusiastically in line and no effort will be spared to make the enterprise a certainty. Such a celebration of the completion of the great Panama Canal would, it seems to us, be most fitting and appropriate.

The first of the several monuments to be erected in honor of the women of the Confederacy was unveiled at Rome, Ga., on the 9th inst., when the chief address was delivered by Mr. S. A. Cunningham, editor of the Confederate Veteran at Nashville. The shaft is of Georgia marble, and is thirty feet high. It is decorated with two groups of figures at the base: one representing "News from the Front," and the other "The Ministering Angel." There are on the sides two inscriptions praising the purity and fidelity of the women of the South: one by President Woodrow Wilson, of Princeton University, formerly a resident of Rome, and the other, by Dr. G. A. Nunnally, formerly president of Mercer University. We are glad to see these columns go up, and we wish that they might be tall enough to pierce and flout the very skies; for the heroism and devotion of the women of the Confederacy is one of the brightest chapters in human history. They dreamed not of the hallo, or forum, or regnancy in the councils of Church and State, but they blessed and glorified the home, and were the inspirers of dauntless valor and lofty aspirations in the breasts of the majestic men of that stormy period. May the memory of them be kept forever green, and their spirit and example ever remain a benediction to the South!

THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT PASTORS' CONFERENCE.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Upon call of the presiding elder, the pastors of the Alexandria District have just held a conference, which, for its brotherliness, spirituality and aggressive planning, was in a degree epochal. Such fraternity, co-operation and consecrated zeal, it has never been our privilege to witness or to enjoy among a similar group of preachers. After a unique sermon on spiritual power, Monday evening, Feb. 28, by Rev. H. R. Singleton, the presiding elder opened Tuesday morning with a Bible reading and lecture on the "Pastor's Mission," and the ideal of leadership that would have stirred the emotions and aspirations of a body of preachers hearing titles of far more dignity than the little group who here pledged their love and obedience to the one who so emphatically demonstrated his worthiness of having "the rule" over his brethren, and it would have taken a mote-hunter to have found any "presiding elder" question here. The spirit of superintendency has already prevailed on the Alexandria District, and the official is overshadowed in the leader.

The question of revivals and the evangelistic campaign consumed the larger part of the conference, and resulted in the following policy being adopted:

First—A prayer circle was formed, in which the pastors and presiding elder agreed to pray for each other by name daily, as Brother Brown has already been doing, and to get prayer circles among each of the congregations until the Knox spirit of "give me Scotland or I die" prevails among our people, and faith says "it shall be done!"

Second—Friday, March 25, is set for a day of prayer and fasting.

Third—The presiding elder was authorized to buy a gospel tent for the district and draft an evangelistic campaign, planning the revival work for the district as far as possible on the co-operative plan, using the pastors in the work to the very best possible advantage.

Fourth—He was also voted full liberty to give all the time needed, according to his judgment, to the work, leaving the middle of the year quarterly conferences to the pastors, and was instructed to secure the services of a gospel singer to go with the tent and to be used in the campaign generally.

Thus there was seen, by faith and in much prayer, what was believed to be the dawn of a better day for the kingdom of our Christ in these ends of the earth.

The next question in importance was the every-member campaign for a missionary collection, which was carefully and prayerfully considered, and was likewise taken hold of for a determined forward move to attain this ideal set for us by our laymen, accepting their challenge to follow them; and the presiding elder served due notice that if the pastors did not do this he would do it himself, and some expressed a feeling of a strange sensation at being out to the necessity of having to run to keep out of the way of the presiding elder.

The missionary collection is to include home and foreign, church extension and the American Bible Society, the latter up to the limit of the assessment only.

The pastors all agreed to comply with the request of the Woman's Home Mission Society, and preach on Christian stewardship or tithing.

A plan to publish a district bulletin, with the presiding elder as editor and the writer as business manager, was launched, that every detail of the work may be laid before the members of the church, and that we may the better "provoke one another to good works."

Sunday school and missionary institutes are being planned for the latter part of the year for and including the adjacent churches around Bunkie, Jena and Alexandria.

A district Epworth League conference was set for May 31-June 2, to be held at Boyce, and Mrs. Anna Lyons of Leesville, Mrs. O. V. Black of Trout and Miss Minnie May Rawlins of Jena were appointed a program committee.

Sincere love and brotherly concern was felt for Brother Purell, who was detained on account of the serious illness of a child; for Brother Ledbetter, our pastor-host, in the sickness of his wife, which threatens to be serious, and for Brother A. R. Hoffman, who had to give up his work on account of the failure of his health. Brother Singleton, too, was called home to a sick child. "Let brotherly love continue" was the prayer on every heart, as we turned to our flocks to take up our sacred tasks with a newer vision and a diviner inspiration, which promise much for the Lord's work in these ends of the earth.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE DALLAS LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE.

By Rev. S. A. Brown.

The Laymen's Convention, held at Dallas February 19-22, was a great meeting, held in a great State, composed of great men, and considered great themes. It culminated in well-laid plans for greater things in the future. The presence and addresses of the representatives of the Church in the several mission fields was an inspiration to all. The program was logical, and led from good to better, from service to service, and the meeting came to a close "at high tide." If I should attempt to write of the addresses, I should say they were all intelligent presentations of the need of the world, the adequacy of the gospel to supply that need and the ability of the Church to supply the gospel. And every address was full of earnestness, and every speaker created an intense interest on the part of the hearers.

The spirit that seemed to permeate the whole assembly was one of determination to put self and all possessions on the altar to be used of God in the furtherance of his kingdom. I never felt so conscious of the gospel's power, I think, as I did while listening to Dr. Lambuth's address on "The Adequacy of the Gospel to Meet the World's Need." Such a contrast as he did draw! Even the songs were a triumphant note. "The Kingdom Is Coming," "Oh Tell Ye the Story," seemed a belated prophecy, and we felt like saying, "We realize it."

The reports from the different lands were proof that God is leading the hosts on to victory. The Church was well represented, all but three conferences having delegates present. Note books were in evidence, and, no doubt, the congregations at home have heard from the delegates of the great things God is doing for us, whereof we are glad.

My conviction is that the momentum of the movement is nothing short of marvelous. The preacher who ignores it is going to be embarrassed in the presence of our intelligent and consecrated laymen in a very short time. The layman who ignores it is going to feel lonesome in the Church in the midst of the activities of his brethren.

Church News

The Foreign Missionary Committee of the Southern Presbyterian Church at its meeting in Nashville, Tenn., on the 8th inst., added eleven new names to its roll of missionaries and laid plans for an aggressive forward movement. Among those accepted for work abroad were Mr. Andrew Allison, of Ellsville, Miss., and Messrs. J. V. N. and F. C. Talmage, of New Orleans. The two latter are grand-nephews of the great Brooklyn preacher, Dr. T. De Witt Talmage.

A dispatch from Louisville, Ky., bearing date of the 9th inst. announced that the building committee, lately appointed to mature plans for the construction of the great representative Church at Washington City, will proceed to the national capital to take up their work in a few days. The committeemen from Mississippi is Mr. J. L. Dantzler, and from Louisiana, Mr. John P. Scott. Our people generally should feel an interest in this commendable enterprise and stand ready to assist in carrying it forward.

Dr. Louis Klopsch, editor of the Christian Herald and world-famed as a philanthropist, died in New York City on March 7. It is said that since 1892 he raised and distributed for charitable purposes more than $3,300,000, and several of the crowned heads publicly attested their appreciation of the service he rendered their subjects in times of disaster and great need. His obsequies were conducted in the Metropolitan Temple, and among the lavish floral offerings was a three-foot wreath from President and Mrs. Taft, the former of whom also sent Mrs. Klopsch a feeling letter of condolence.

Dr. J. A. Barrow, of the Holston Conference, and the Editor of the Midland Methodist are having a lively discussion over the question as to whether the General Conference should elect Bishops by a majority or two-thirds rule. Our esteemed contemporary favors the good old way of electing by a majority vote, and we think has much the best of the argument in every respect. There is not a particle of a doubt that the two-thirds rule would tend to make political manipulation much easier. The Midland is generally correct in the positions which it assumes. It is a safe, sane, and well edited periodical.

Bishop A. W. Wilson has just closed a series of lectures before the students and faculty of the Theological Department of the Vanderbilt University on "Paul's Mental Attitude Toward Christ." To say that they were both interesting and instructive would be stating the truth very mildly. They were powerful discourses, calculated to bear fruit long after the good Bishop is gone from the walks of men. He is quite feeble in body, but is gradually improving from his late illness. His mind is vigorous and his utterances clear; his brain is not superannuated; no matter what men may think of his body. It is to be hoped that these lectures will be preserved in book form.—Midland Methodist.

After having served the Presbyterian congregation at Starkville, Miss., for twenty-one years, Dr. H. R. Raymond, in a beautifully worded communication to the Session tendered his resignation on Sunday, the 6th inst. Dr. Raymond is in the 86th year of his age, and has been actively in the ministry for sixty years. A cleaner, truer, more faithful man we have never known. Possessed of ability far above ordinary, a rare sense of propriety, and a self-mastery most unusual, he was splendidly equipped for the work of the ministry, and has wrought worthily in every field into which Providence has led him. Who can measure the influence of such a life, or conceive of the richness of the reward that awaits this noble veteran when the Father's summons shall bring him to his enduring home? The Starkville Church will seek to have him made pastor emeritus, a distinction which he well deserves.

Through the kindness of the author, the Rev. J. L. Cunningham, A.B., B.D., we have received a copy of his booklet, lately issued by the Methodist Publishing House, "The Making of the Ministry." It is a neat pamphlet of forty pages, which opens with "A Foreword" from the pen of Bishop A. W. Wilson. The main discussion is under the three following heads: "Calling a Ministry," "Selecting a Ministry," and "Training a Ministry." The concluding part is devoted to suggestions of a practical nature. We take it that the chief design of the publication is to direct the attention of the approaching General Conference to the important subject of how to procure a better trained and more efficient ministry. With some of Mr. Cunningham's proposals we are in hearty accord; but from others we strongly dissent. We do not think it would be wise to make probationers wait four years before receiving them into full connection, or to raise higher the requirement for admission on trial. To be sure, we need a better educated ministry, but at present it is extremely difficult to procure enough preachers of any kind to man our charges. The true problem which confronts the Church is not one of exclusion, but of enlistment and development. Of a matter so vital, we need to take not an academic, but a practical view. We should hold on to our men, and by means of a judiciously selected Conference course, our Correspondence School, and other educational methods, endeavor to make out of them the utmost possible. They may not be ideal, but they are all we have, or will have, for some time to come. But, though we do not endorse all of its suggestions, we are glad that this pamphlet on "The Making of a Ministry" has been issued. It will awaken thought and discussion and do good. The price is 10 cents, and it may be had either of the Publishing House, at Nashville, Tenn., or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The Institute is past history now and we look back upon it to see what good has come to us. We were unfortunate in that some of the brethren were sick and could not come, while others were in attendance, on court and could not be with us. This eliminated some of the papers, but the open discussions of the different subjects were very profitable.

Our president, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, had for the key note of the Institute the importance of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. And as you will notice from the program, the greater part of it was related to the laymen's movement.

We were fortunate in having with us two of the delegates to the last conference in Dallas. Their talks upon what the laymen had been able to do in the past two years and what they hope to do were inspiring. Our Conference missionary evangelist, Rev. D. E. Kelly, was with us also. He gave us an idea of what he hoped to do for the cause of Christ in our territory.

One fortunate inspiring note was struck in the brethren agreeing that all missionary work is one and that we are to save a world, not only the heathen across the seas, but all who are without Christ; that we must carry with us our own country, and that as we are the stewards of the Lord, he needs not only what we have, but he needs us, too, in order to accomplish his purpose.

Yes, the discussion of the women came up, too. It reminded me of a couplet that I once heard:

The dog and the cat sat on the mat.
The dog said to the cat, "Where am I at?"

That is where we left it, and where we are at, has not been decided as yet.

Another inspiring feature of the Institute was the relation of prayer and missions, as brought out in the discussion. We can not pray for what we do not think about. If we are to pray missionary prayers, we must think missionary thoughts. We must know our work, we must read, we must think.

The Institute resulted in a committee of three being appointed—Revs. J. A. Moore, Geo. H. Thompson and J. C. Chambers—to consult and arrange for a preachers' institute, to be known as the Hattiesburg Preachers' Institute, for all brethren who can come to Hattiesburg and which is to meet bi-monthly, for discussions of Church problems and for mutual instruction and benefit.

Each speaker at the Institute was acquainted with his subject, and, as we look back, we are glad that we were permitted to attend. God has never despised the day of small things, and the influence of the meeting will help us all for many days to come.

The presiding elder, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, delivered a great sermon on the "Great Commission." This, we think, was the feature of the Institute.

NEW ORLEANS CHURCH NEWS.

Reported for the Advocate.

On last Sunday large and appreciative audiences heard the celebrated Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary to the Bulgarians, in the morning at the Second Methodist and in the evening at the Rayne Memorial Church. Miss Stone tells the thrilling story of her captivity in a most charming and eloquent manner. No one can hear her without wanting to lead a more useful life in the Master's cause. Miss Stone is traveling under the auspices of the Methodist Board of the W. H. M. S. in Louisiana.

Special revival services will be held in the Second Church during Passion Week, March 20-27. The preaching will be done by the pastor, and the general theme is, "With Jesus During His Last Week." Sunrise prayer-meetings will be held on Good Friday and on Easter Sunday. A large catechism class is to be admitted into the full membership of the Church at the close of the meeting. The Conference Collections will be paid on Easter Sunday.

A memorial service for the late Dr. J. W. Adams will be held at the Second Church on Sunday, March 20, at 3:30 p.m. Addressés will be made by Mrs. Lillie Ueber Townsley, Mr. M. B. De Pass, Mr. J. F. Foster and the Rev. Dr. F. N. Parker. It is altogether fitting that his church should honor the man who gave more than a half-century of service to it.

At the suggestion of the presiding elder, Rev. F. N. Parker, there will be appointed special committees to consider the several subjects to come before the District Conference. These committees will make a careful and an exhaustive study of the topics assigned to them and be ready to report some valuable information at the sessions of the Conference. This will do away with the dull routine reports of the pastor and the laymen that many times are unsatisfactory and incomplete. The presiding elder is to be congratulated on this wise suggestion. The advertising committee for the Conference is composed of Messrs. Townsley, Atkinson and Joyner.

The Soniat Avenue Church of the Disciples (Campbellites) of this city, though composed of less than 100 members, is supporting a foreign missionary this year. This is a most commendable exhibition of liberality. Would that more of our churches might see the vision and make such sacrifices for our Lord!

The Baptists are making good headway in this city. Six years ago, we are told, they had only three small churches, with a mere handful of people, and now they have six congregations and more than 1000 active members. The Baptist Home Mission Board is putting thousands of dollars into this city every year to build churches and pay pastors.

The Protestant Episcopal churches of New Orleans are receiving large numbers into their churches in the confirmation classes at this season of the year. They know how to keep their children in the church of the parents, and we venture to say, not more than one-tenth of them ever join churches of other communions. This is a lesson for others to learn.

The meeting of the Woman's City Mission Board will be held at St. Mark's Hall next Wednesday at 2:30 o'clock. This is the occasion for the annual reports of the several officers of this important Board. The Board has had a most remarkable year of progress and success. Every woman in our churches should become a member of the W. H. M. S. and enlist for service.

There is a faithful little band of women from the various denominations in New Orleans who hold weekly prayer-meetings at the different churches and pray for the coming of the Kingdom. These meetings are profoundly spiritual, and resemble the old Methodist class-meeting in their method and power. Let the good work go on! Our Mary Werlein Church is the only church we know of that still continues the old-fashioned Methodist class-meeting.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting was called to order by Dr. F. N. Parker. Prayer was offered by Dr. S. H. Werlein.

Present: Parker, Sims, Rice, Atkinson, Townsley, Werlein, Harrell, Haggard, Joyner, Sutton, Carley, Whitehead, Lutz.

The committee on religious work at the U. S. Barracks reported that services could be held and a place would be provided, but as the hour was not convenient, it was left to the individual churches rather than make a definite appointment.

The presiding elder, Dr. Parker, proposed a plan for holding the District Conference in which by a series of inquiries all details of the work going on in the city would be brought out and the various committees appointed would make recommendations for forward movements on lines of work now neglected. The pastors, by resolution, approved the plan and requested the presiding elder to appoint the committees.

A committee consisting of Brothers Townsley, Atkinson and Joyner were appointed to advertise the District Conference and try to secure a large attendance.

Brother Atkinson reports progress being made on the new Parker Memorial Church and he hopes that the District Conference, which is to meet in his church on March 21, will be the beginning of a gracious revival among his people.

"THE WOMAN'S MEMORIAL."

An editorial appeared in the New Orleans Advocate of Feb. 10 under the title of "The Woman's Rights Memorial." Inasmuch as these words are misleading and many points in the article vulnerable, we deem it best to give the readers of the Advocate another view-point.

The words "woman's rights memorial" turn one to thoughts of political suffrage, with which the memorial in question has nothing to do. This contention of the women deals with the Church, and not the State, and any effort to project outside issues into the movement is calculated to draw attention away from the real issue.

The article has also caused us to wonder why it appeared at all. If the editor really believes that the memorial "has awakened very little enthusiasm throughout the Church," and "that there is little probability of the movement gathering sufficient strength to make it a serious source of disturbance," pray why does he devote the two leading columns in his leading editorial to such a forlorn and fading cause? We cannot believe him to be so poor an economist, but the rather that he would use his valuable space to bring to his readers news of the live and vital issues of the Church to-day. No, an issue that is based on a righteous principle and has for its object the strengthening of the Kingdom of God is too live to be lightly set aside by man.

Mr. Meek tells us that this same issue "disturbed the harmony of the M. E. Church for several years," and urges this as a reason why it should not be agitated in our Church. "Disturbed the harmony?" Is it possible that this good editor does not know that almost every advance step that has ever been taken by the Church of God has disturbed some harmony somewhere? The coming of Christ among men disturbed the harmony of the Jewish Church, which was living to and for itself alone. Christ gave them the opportunity to adjust themselves to the new civilization that confronted them, and to break away from the old customs and preconceived notions, and keep step with Jehovah, and they would not. But did He stop? No; he continued to disturb the peace until he found a people who would follow his leadings, despite primitive notions and narrow leaders.

Paul disturbed the church, and would not cease his agitation until it was said of him that he had "turned the world upside down." Martin Luther disturbed the church and shook it from center to circumference, until a new, a living faith sprang up in the hearts of men. John Wesley disturbed the church—the old, "conservative" Church of England, by licensing unordained men (laymen) to preach! Could a more radical step have been taken in the old church, with its apostolic succession? Yet these men are preaching still, and this disturber of the peace to-day stands out among men as a great mouthpiece of God.

Coming to our own branch of the Church, we find a disturbance arose back in the sixties, when some who, like Luther, caught the vision that the Church was founded on the democratic principles of Christ, sought to bring lay representation into our General Conference. But who to-day, in the face of the great Laymen's Movement, would dare to say that the laymen should not have a part in the councils of the Church?

A still greater disturbance came to us in 1878, when the women went to the fathers and brethren to know if they, too, might have a part in the redemption of a lost world. That was, indeed, a disturbance: Women organize like men? That was unwomanly! And yet, with a heroism scarcely equaled, those women continued to knock at the door of the Church, seeking larger opportunities until forsooth, because of their very importunity, they were heard. And who to-day would abolish the work of these women, who are not only raising hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, but are telling the story of the cross to their sisters of every name and nation?

Eight years ago the women brought on another disturbance as they sought to establish the order of deaconess in the Church. It was then said by those who did not know whereof they spoke that the women were wanting to be exhorters, preachers, etc. Some high in authority even predicted dire calamity as a result of such action. Yet a late lamented Bishop said in one of his addresses not so long ago that one of the great needs of the Church to-day was 500 women, consecrated to the work of the deaconess.

And now another disturbance is on! Let us thank God for the men and women who, on down through the ages, have been great and brave and true enough to break away from ancient thought and custom, and have dared to stand up and strike the rock of conservatism that has at times been the curse of the Church. Upon such men and women our Lord has depended as he has sought to lift the old world to larger views of him and to an ever-widening conception of the extension of his kingdom.

But, speaking of disturbance, it might comfort the women to know that all the disturbance in the Church is not because of them or any action they desire taken. If we are to draw our conclusions from things seen and heard, there are other matters agitating the mind of the brethren to-day, which will require much of their time and thought, and which even now is causing unrest throughout the Church.

Mr. Meek objects to the memorial also because "such action would be out of harmony with apostolic and primitive precedent." Is it possible that he is going to hold our Church to "apostolic and primitive precedent?" The General Conference will have a mighty task to eradicate from our policies all but those things that are in line with apostolic and primitive methods. What will we do with our Sunday schools, women Sunday school teachers, our women's societies, our lay representation, our money collectors, and our time limit?

There were no laymen in the first Jerusalem council, when "the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter" of admitting Gentile converts into the Christian Church without circumcision. (See Acts 15:6.) What are we going to do with our great body of laymen? In those days there were no collectors of money without the laying on of hands. (See Acts 6:6.)

What will we do with our hundreds and thousands of faithful women who, year in and year out, collect funds for their own enterprises, and in many places actually do the collecting for the brethren also, sometimes under the direction of the pastors, and that, too, without the laying on of hands?

What are we to do if we are to be held to apostolic and primitive methods? If we have been guided by these precedents heretofore, how did all those strange things happen to get into our Church? When? Where? Upon what authority? How did the laymen ever succeed in getting in? The only answer Mr. Meek or history can give is that the clergy, the then authoritative legislative body, admitted them contrary to "apostolic and primitive precedent." Thus the women now ask that same body of clergymen and laymen to admit them, contrary "to apostolic and primitive precedent."

Mr. Meek believes God designed for woman a special sphere of service "in keeping with her aptitudes." Who is to be the judge of those aptitudes? As he understands apostolic and primitive methods so well, he might work out a Biblical plan by which we could be in this succession and keep in our sphere, too. No; Christ laid down no divine order of Church government in the Bible. It is not there. Christ gave truth to his Church in great principles, and left the government to man. He instilled principles by the baptism of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost in the upper chamber, in which man and woman shared alike. Our place in the Church was not ordered by Christ, nor forbidden by him. He gave us our place by the side of man, and in the home we share with him in the duties, responsibilities and administration. We seek the same place in our Church home. Will it be unwomanly for us to stand with him in our Father's house?

We can but believe that the manhood of our Church not only so honors its womanhood, but also so honors God, that it will not longer keep her in the "outer court." Surely, no such primitive method will longer obtain among us.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Have we not demonstrated our fitness for full membership in the Church? Have we not proved our faithfulness to God and the Church? Have we not shown fitness to finance in his kingdom? What, then, debar us? Not Christ, we are persuaded—only man, who would hold us to "apostolic and primitive precedent."

We believe we have heard His voice calling us forth. Can it be said that woman does not know His voice? He left the governmental forms to his Church. And to His Church we appeal!

IS IT WISE?

With all due deference to the learned women of our Church, a grandmother, who has studied human nature some, would like to call their attention to one or two stubborn facts.

It is true, the rapid strides made by woman in the last half-century, in nearly every field of work, is simply marvelous. Up to that time she seemed to have been in comparatively a chrysalis state. But when her awakening came, and she began to emerge into life, the breath of freedom was so exhilarating that she simply spread her wings, and lo, the result! In every nook and corner of the business and educational world, she is there. In most of the benevolent societies, she is there. And in all the avenues of church work, where sympathy, love and a tender touch are necessary, she has entered and proven herself a skilled worker. Nevertheless, she is not satisfied, for even now she is simply resting her wings and gathering strength for another flight. The law-making bodies of Church and State would she enter, and attempt to carry their ponderous weight on her frail and delicate wings.

Mothers and wives, weigh well the price you will have to pay. Let it be granted that many of you can take the place of any man in the nation—but the question is: Can he fill your place?

In the beginning, man was made with the brawny muscles of endurance, while woman's texture was of a more delicate and lighter mold. Were they to do the same work? Decidedly, no.

Side by side, through life, it was intended for them to go, but the heavier work naturally fell to him, and the lighter, equally as necessary, to her. The home, with all of the hallowed associations that this word brings up, was to be her realm. To provide for, and keep it sacred, was his. This idea has come down to us throughout the ages; and, although the sphere of each has widened, still the heavy and more laborious parts belong to the stronger sex. To the mother, while in its tender and pliant age, is intrusted the sacred duty of shaping and pruning the giants; it may be, of the future. Ah, if you could only realize it, you, and you alone, are even now molding the destiny of Church and State, by your own firesides. Will not this suffice?

Press not the men too far. Magnanimous and deferential by nature, one of their characteristics is, not only to yield their seats to women fair, but, when pressed too far, to quietly withdraw and seek other fields where they can wrestle, if need be, with caliber of their own.

Help your husbands to believe that the structures of Church and State continue to rest on them, and that to your tender hands is consigned that which is just as essential, but the more delicate parts of the framework.

Can you not be satisfied with adorning, with your works of love, and mercy, and charity, in every part of the globe, the wonderful temple reared for the saving of the nations? But, beware how you tamper with the groundwork! Its security does and ought to rest on the strong and sturdy shoulders of your husbands and sons. Every woman that enters the Conference doors, with privileges equal with the men, simply crowds one of them out. One by one, you may take the offered chairs, but sooner or later you will stand aghast at the sight of the temple, beautiful, swaying to and fro on foundations too frail to bear its weight. Husbands and sons need all the responsibilities of Church and State that can be placed on them. For their future hope of life and heaven, ponder well the question, is it wise to relieve them of all work, and where will they be when you have taken their places? AVIA.

A WORD TO YOU.

If your subscription is paid up, we thank you for your help in making possible the paper we are publishing to-day. If your subscription is behind, we ask you to consider the heavy burden that the subscribers who are in arrears place upon us. The extra paper for one subscriber does not amount to much, but when it runs into the hundreds, the paper and postage for those who are in arrears amount to a very heavy item. Then the postal authorities object to our allowing our subscribers to fall in arrears. All these reasons move us to cut off from our lists quite a large number during this month of March. The clerk who corrects the list, will not know you, he will only notice that your subscription is far in arrears. Will you not make prompt remittance, before your name is reached? We do not want to lose any of our friends, and would like to give you the paper always, if we could, but the income from the paper is the only means we have of publishing the Advocate. HIS POOR MEMORY.

A Canadian farmer, noted for his absent-mindedness, went to town one day and transacted his business with the utmost precision. He started on his way home, however, with the firm conviction that he had forgotten something, but what it was he could not recall. As he neared home, the conviction increased, and three times he stopped his horse and went carefully through his pocketbook in a vain endeavor to discover what he had forgotten. In due course he reached home and was met by his daughter, who looked at him in surprise and exclaimed: "Why, father, where have you left mother?"—Leslie's Weekly.

THE HOPEFUL VIEW.

Write on your daybook, on your ledger, on your money safe, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Do not worry about notes that are far from due. Do not pile up on your counting desk the financial anxieties of the next twenty years. Melancholy is the owl that is perched in many a Christian soul. The good times, if we will but believe it, are now; the better times are not backward—but beyond. We believe, as in the past, so in the future, the world will grow better and better. By and by the world and all there is therein shall pass away, but in the new heavens and the earth righteousness, only righteousness, shall dwell; and cheerfulness and growth will ever mark the progress of the soul.—Talmage.

QUEER HAPPENINGS.

Whack! whack! went the blows of the ax on the cherry tree.

"Does the cherry tree feel it, father?" Charlie asked.

Charlie sat on the piazza steps at a safe distance from the flying chips. Charley was a boy who often asked queer questions.

"I guess this tree is too nearly dead to feel anything," Mr. Baker answered, and Charlie was glad it couldn't feel. Mrs. Baker had said the tree must come down, for it didn't yield a quart of cherries in a summer, and its withered branches spoiled the looks of her front yard.

Then something that was really very queer happened—something that made Mr. Baker cry out, "Goodness! I never saw the like before!" For out of the tree, dislodged by the blows, which by good luck didn't touch them, there dropped a nest of five young red spirrels. Four of them skipped away as if they had learned how long ago, though maybe this was the first time they had ever tried; but the fifth one seemed to be hurt by the fall to the ground. In fact, Mr. Baker thought it was dead, so he picked it up and tossed it to Madam Pussy Cat, who was watching curiously a few feet away.

Charlie supposed she would pounce on it as if it were a mouse, but what she did was really more queer than anything that had happened yet. She came up, smelled of it, then very gently lifted it as if it had been a kitten, and walked off with it to the barn.

You may be sure Charlie followed her. Pretty soon he came back with eyes wide open.

"Why, father," he said, "Madam Pussy Cat has put the spirrel to bed with her own family. 'Tisn't dead—I saw it squirm. You—you won't let the spirrel get lost, will you, father?" Charlie knew that kittens with little blind eyes had a way of going off, and never, never finding the path back.

Mr. Baker laughed. "No, Charlie," he promised. "We'll wait and see what Pussy does with it."

Well, the queer things kept piling up, for Master Red Spirrel, as Charlie had said, wasn't dead at all, only a bit stunned at first; and Madam Pussy Cat mothered him until he became very frisky indeed—so frisky that one day Mr. Baker made a little cage for him to stay in until he became used to a station in life which he wasn't born into.

Charlie fed him so that he grew quite tame, and it was safe to let him out, because he would always come home again. Madam Pussy Cat seemed very proud of her adopted child, and they were great friends.

One night, when Charley had been thinking a long while—as much as five minutes—he nestled up to his mother and whispered, "I think, mother, that Madam Pussy Cat must be a Christian cat the way she treated Ruddy."

Mrs. Baker smiled, but she wondered to herself, "What will that boy say next?"—Helen A. Hawley, in Sunday School Times.

SPEAK UP, BOYS.

Next to standing erect and having a manly bearing, I like to have a boy speak up when he is spoken to. He can never make a good impression if he mumbles or "mouthes" his words when he is talking to others. Clear and distinct enunciation is a valuable trait for a boy to possess. I was in the office of the president of a great corporation, one day not long ago, when he rang his bell for the office boy. The boy came in a moment, and the gentleman said:

"Did you take that package over to Brown & Smith's?"

"Mum-mum."

"Did Mr. Brown send any message for me?"

"Mum-mum-mum."

"What did he say?"

"Mum-mum-mum-mum—"

"Oh, speak up so that I can understand you!" said the gentleman, a little sharply. "I do not know what 'mum-mum-mum-mum' means."

It sounded exactly as though the boy were saying "mum-mum-mum-mum" every time he opened his mouth. When he had finally held up his head and spoken more intelligently, and had then gone from the room, his employer said:

"I really think that I shall have to let that boy go. He mumbles everything he says so that I can hardly understand what he means. I do not like to send such a boy with messages to our customers. I like a boy who can speak up like a man. He can do that, and at the same time be a perfectly modest and respectful boy. Somehow, I feel rather suspicious of a boy who hangs his head and mumbles everything."

I think that a good many people have that feeling, although a boy may be excessively shy and mumble all that he says, and at the same time be a perfectly honest boy, but he makes a very poor impression and will not advance so rapidly as the boy who looks one squarely in the face, and speaks up like a man, when he has anything to say.

The voice has much to do with a boy's success in life, and should be well cultivated. There are boys who speak up so that they can be heard a long distance every time they open their mouths, who are even more objectionable than a boy who mumbles. An overloud, brassy voice, with a kind of defiant ring in it, is extremely unpleasant, and is sure to make a very bad impression. A voice with a whine in it is always irritating, and an insolent tone of voice has told against more than one boy when he has been in search of a position. The voice that is clear and distinct, and at the same time deferential, is the voice which makes the best impression. Don't mumble, don't "meech," don't whine, and don't use an insolent tone, when you speak.

You may think that it is of no consequence how a boy speaks, if he does his work properly and faithfully, but I am sure you are mistaken. There are other things to be taken into account besides doing one's work as it ought to be done, if a boy hopes to get on in the world. I know a young man nearly thirty years of age who is very thorough in his work, and would long ago have been advanced to the position of foreman of the establishment in which he works, but for the fact that he is boorish in his manners. This manner of one's speech, as well as one's general bearing, are all considered at certain times, apart from his work. So, speak up, and acquit yourselves like men, boys!—Success.

Editorial.

THE EDITOR'S DEFENSE.

On another page is printed a communication from Mrs. Luke Johnson, of Gainesville, Ga., in which she severely arraigns us for our recent editorial on "The Woman's Rights Memorial." She begins by objecting to the title under which we discussed the subject, as "misleading" and tending to confuse the issue with that of woman suffrage. We beg to assure our sister, that in choosing that heading we had no such sinister design. It appeared to us to be a proper and definitive designation of the memorial under consideration. Are not those who are endeavoring to promote this movement insistent upon the contention that they are simply asking for their "rights in the Church?" Why then should they object to our use of the expression which they have made their slogan in the campaign which they are seeking to wage? Certainly, no one in all the land is silly enough to imagine that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, could grant our sisters any "political rights."

But, since our sister has raised this issue, we do not hesitate to say that, in our humble judgment, the spirit which has given birth to the two movements is much the same—that woman's rights in the Church and woman's rights in the State appear to us to be twin sisters. Arguments practically the same are used in the advocacy of both, and some of the women who are clamoring for the one are also promoters of the other. Indeed, if an honest and open expression of sentiment were obtainable, it would be most interesting to see how many of the leaders in this new movement in the Church favor woman suffrage, and how many also believe that woman should have an open door into the pulpit. If such information were available, we do not doubt that some of the brethren who are disposed to allow themselves to be flattered into a quasi-endorsement of this proposed innovation, would open their eyes and assume an altogether different attitude.

Our correspondent questions the sincerity of our statement that "we think the movement has awakened little enthusiasm." We can not say that we are surprised at this exhibition of distrust. It is said that suspicion is not a small part of the "new woman," and that she rarely takes even herself seriously and never wants her utterances to be too strictly construed. However, the question as to the strength of the movement is a mere matter of judgment. We have yet seen no reason to change our opinion as to the size of the following our sisters have been able to muster, and the correctness or incorrectness of our view we are quite willing to leave to the arbitrament of the approaching General Conference.

Our critic is amazed that we should deprecate the bringing forward of this memorial on the ground that "we dislike to see the peace and harmony of the Church disturbed." In vehement language she insists that "disturbance" is a necessary part of all worthy achievement, and compares the work she and her associates are undertaking to do with that of Wesley, Luther, Paul, and even Christ himself. We admit that most forward movements of a revolutionary character have been accompanied by more or less agitation and strife, but it by no means follows that there are no agitation and strife which do not eventuate in progress. They are far oftener the results of unwisdom and misdirected effort than of wise planning and righteous activity. Seasons of contention are never seasons of revival power and ingatherings of lost souls. There must be harmony among believers for the Holy Spirit to do his most effective work. And, indeed, "disturbance" of the kind to which our sister refers is justifiably only on the ground that some great and absolutely essential end is to be achieved—an end, perhaps, upon which is contingent the very life and existence of the Church. Bringing forward a scheme which is in no sense vital or necessary, and which many of the best and truest of our people think would be positively harmful, and making it a source of wrangling and contention, is quite a different thing from battling to save a lost world, or clashing with a Church wholly apostate, or kindling revival fires where religion had practically ceased to exist.

Nor are the other precedents of "disturbance" cited by our sister any more relevant than those to which we have just referred. Lay representation came just at the close of the great Civil War, when the forces of the Church were scattered, and well-nigh destroyed. While there was opposition to it, the demand for it was widespread and general. It was felt to be absolutely essential to the rehabilitation of the Church in that sad hour of gloom, and almost of despair. It commanded the support of a large majority almost from the start, and required no blustering political methods and manipulation to carry it forward to success.

Referring to the situation then existing, Bishop McTear said: "The great measure of 1866 was lay delegation. Its prostrate, almost collapsed, condition required all the available help the Church could command." And also the impression our correspondent seeks to make that the authority for the woman's work, as it now exists, was wrung almost vi et armis from an unwilling Church, is widely at variance with the historical facts. Her overwrought imagination has greatly magnified the extent of the opposition. The deaconess movement is yet too young and small to estimate the measure of its influence for good. We are hopeful, however, that it will prove a valuable arm of service, if our sister and others like her do not wreck it by entangling it in their ill-advised struggles for imaginary rights.

But even if these other movements and the disturbance attending them were exactly as our correspondent has represented, it would by no means follow that the agitation which she and her associates are attempting is wise or justifiable. Before she can claim that it is wholesome and warranted, she must first show that the issue involved, like those which have gone before, is meritorious and necessary—a thing which she has not even remotely approached doing. The effect of this movement in the Northern Methodist Church is very far from reassuring. Not a few of the leaders of that denomination think it has done more harm than good. And it did one thing of which we feel sure that even our good sister will heartily disapprove. It carried into their last General Conference a number of negro women and had them voting for bishops and connectional officers and the various legislative measures pending before that body.

Our critic becomes sarcastic and merry in discussing the question of "apostolic and primitive precedent." We have no apology to make for our position on that subject. We are in the company of Dr. J. M. Buckley and many of the foremost men in American Methodism. Our view, however, is not that ascribed to us by the aggressive champion of this unfortunate memorial. As we said in our reply to Brother Broyles, "We do not contend that the apostles gave minute directions as to every detail of Church government, or prescribed in every instance specific methods of work which may not be varied." Our position is, that just as the State has its statutory enactments which may readily be changed, and its constitution, which is more sacredly guarded; so the Church has things which are fundamental, which are essential, which have been divinely sanctioned—its constitution, so to speak; and other things which are merely incidental, which are mere expedients, and which may be varied almost at will. Thus, for instance, the Church may, if it wishes, cease to take up a collection on the first day of the week as did the primitive Christians—that is incidental; but it would have no right to do away with baptism or the observance of the Sabbath—they are things which are fundamental. So we have no difficulty in justifying the existence of the Sunday school, the women's societies, the time limit, and such like. They are mere expedients which may be instituted or abolished at will. But the woman's memorial proposes to change the fundamental government of the Church, its very constitution; and in so doing, it clashes with the teaching and practice of both our Lord and the apostles. This is our position—our sister has not touched it—and we believe it to be impregnable. The only question she has asked, which, in view of our position, is really pertinent, is the one which relates to the introduction of lay representation, and, as will appear further on in the discussion, that was plainly a return to the condition existing in the primitive days of Christianity.

Our sister says that there were no laymen at the general Apostolic Council at Jerusalem. We really regret that she has undertaken to discuss this phase of the subject, for evidently she has examined it most superficially. "No laymen in the Apostolic Council?" Why, does not our sister know that at that time there were no laymen and no preachers? The distinction had not yet arisen. What were the elders who participated in that great gathering? We quote from that scholarly work, the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia: "They were not identical with preachers, because every male member could preach. They were not lay-elders, because the distinction between laity and clergy had not yet been made. They stood in and at the same time over the congregation; in it, because they belonged originally and constantly to it; over it, because they exercised the right and duty of oversight and guidance." They were chosen by the men of the congregation. Thus they were quite as much laymen as they were preachers. And as this high authority states elsewhere, such functions could only be exercised by male members. Thus it is perfectly clear that the men in every congregation were an integral part of the government of the Church in the very beginning.

Our sister's point about "no collectors without the laying on of hands," is pitifully weak. It has been abundantly answered in our statement that mere expedients in Church government may be varied at will. But we can not resist the temptation to say that she wholly misconceives the nature and function of the deacon's office. It was not their mission to collect, but to disburse money and to look after the sick and the poor.

But again, our correspondent contends that Christ gave truth, doctrine, to the Church, and nothing more. Therein she is mistaken. By his administrative acts Christ did much toward the establishment of his Church. He sent out the seventy, chose and trained the twelve, and instituted the Sacrament. And not in a single instance, either by word or act, did he indicate that woman was to exercise governmental functions in the Church. The Savior ascended, the inspired apostles came upon the stage of action, and they, especially Paul, had much to say on this subject. Nor did he confine himself to "doctrines," but he discussed the ordinances, the sacraments, the discipline, and the officers of the Church, and even spoke of woman's position in it. And while there may be some room for difference of opinion as to some of the superficial aspects of his teaching about woman's dress and deportment, there can be no doubt as to what he taught about her general relation to the government of the Church. His position was in perfect accord with the practices of the divinely established Jewish Church, of the post-apostolic Church, and of nearly all the Churches of enlightened Christendom to-day.

But says our critic, once more, we want the same position in our "Church home" that we have in our every-day home. That is precisely what we want our good sister to have. The Bible teaches that man is the head of the family, and we want him also to be the head of the Church, as the same Holy Book directs he should be.

But she affirms that they have been praying over this matter, and that they believe they "have heard the divine voice calling them forth." We reply that the leaders of this movement have "no monopoly on prayer," and that theirs are not the only ears that can hear the whisperings of the Holy Ghost. Others have been seeking divine guidance as well as they.

AN INTERESTING VOLUME.

Rev. W. G. Harbin's book, "Modes of the Heavenly Life," is now out of the press, and the filling of orders will be begun this week. The volume contains a series of bright and helpful sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit, and is a publication of unusual merit. Its method of treatment is new and distinctive, but thoroughly orthodox. Many passages are brilliant, and the style is admirable throughout. It is calculated to do much good, and deserves a wide circulation. The editor heartily commends it. The price is 75 cents; orders may be sent to Mr. C. O. Chalmers, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La.

THE FLING AT DR. BOSWELL.

"As Methodists we do not accept Mr. Wesley in all things as our guide in matters of theology, since he was not, technically speaking, a theologian, but an evangelist." What? How? This from the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate; and Dr. Boswell no longer on the tripod! Mr. Wesley "not a theologian!" There is a discovery for us moderns! Arise, Dr. G. G. Smith, and smite this heresy! And to think of finding such things in the "Texas!" Eheu!—(Nashville) Christian Advocate.

We have no desire to enter upon a defense of Dr. Rankin, of the Texas Christian Advocate. He needs no assistance at our hands. The hills of Holston have been in the habit of producing men who give a good account of themselves in every arena. But we do desire to protest most earnestly against the derisive fling at our worthy predecessor, Dr. J. W. Boswell, contained in the above paragraph. The day of judgment only will reveal the tremendous service which Dr. Boswell has performed for Methodism in his long career on the tripod and elsewhere. If Dr. Winton could only catch his spirit of defense, instead of that of disintegration, to which he seems wedded, he, too, might perform a mighty work for our Zion.

PERSONAL

Writing from Wesson, Miss., Rev. E. L. Alford sends a list of subscribers, for which he has our hearty thanks. The work moves on smoothly under his guiding hand and the prospect is encouraging.

Rev. W. E. Akin, of Pleasant Hill, La., continues to take care of the interests of the Advocate. We highly appreciate what he is doing for us, and count him one of the good friends of our paper. May the Lord prosper him in all the work of his pastorate!

We are grateful to Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of LeCompte, La., for lending a hand in circulating the Advocate and for words of cheer and encouragement. He is meeting with gratifying success in his present field of labor.

Things are moving on nicely in the Ruston District, wrote Rev. R. W. Tucker, the capable leader in that field, on the 11th inst. "All the preachers are in place and are true and faithful men." Happy is he who has such co-laborers in carrying forward the Master's work.

We acknowledge the reception of a club of nine subscribers from Moss Point, Miss., sent in by Mrs. G. J. Swan. We thank our sister for her good work in behalf of the Advocate, and pray that God may richly bless every effort she may make to extend the divine kingdom.

We make grateful acknowledgment to the following brethren for aiding in the circulation of the Christian Advocate: F. A. Howell, Durant, Miss.; J. H. Bass, Ripley, Miss.; J. T. McCafferty, Moorhead, Miss.; J. B. Randolph, Iuka, Miss.; L. M. Lipscomb, New Albany, Miss.; and O. L. Savage, Guntown, Miss.

We desire to call particular attention to the article on the woman's memorial, signed "Avia," which is to be found in another column. It is from the pen of a noble Mississippi woman, long noted for her activity in church work. It is a forceful and telling plea for her side of the question, and the spirit of the communication is most admirable.

Writing from Haynesville, La., some days since, Rev. W. T. Woodward, the pastor of that place, says: "A very interesting inter-denominational Parish Sunday School Convention was recently held in our church here. The attendance was very good, and a number of excellent speeches were made."

Rev. O. P. Armour has recently organized an Epworth League at Buena Vista, Miss. This gives him a League at three out of the four appointments of the charge, each doing a fine work. The total membership of them is 78. It always pleases us to hear of interest in our young people's work. It is a wholesome and promising indication.

Rev. T. H. Porter sends a cheering message from Courtland, Miss., reinforced by a substantial list of subscribers and a good check. The North Mississippi Conference has in it no more faithful pastor than Brother Porter, who always moves upon a high plane and keeps busy promoting the welfare of his flock and the interests of the church.

That enterprising young pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Natchez, has recently placed us under obligations by adding a number of names from that goodly community to our subscription files. We have never known a Lewis who could not be counted on to do his part in any worthy work. That is a name to conjure with in the great State of Mississippi.

Rev. E. H. Gregory, the Presbyterian pastor at Moss Point, Miss., was an appreciated caller at the Advocate office last week. Brother Gregory and the editor were associate pastors in West Point, Miss., several years ago, where they grew to be friends. We were delighted to see him looking so well, and to observe that time is dealing gently with him.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham informs us that after treatment by specialists in Memphis, Rev. J. R. Robertson, of the Toccoola charge (Miss.), has returned home. He was advised to give up all active work for some months that he may take a much needed rest. A "supply," whose name will be announced later, will fill his unexpired term.

Rev. T. W. Lewis writes that the Columbus District Laymen's meeting, which was held in Columbus last week, was a marked success. About a hundred laymen were in attendance, and the addresses of Brothers Pepper and King were instructive and stirring. Enthusiastic resolutions were adopted, which will be printed in the next issue of the Advocate.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, whose address is Winona, Miss., requests us to state that the Southern Methodist Handbook is now out, and that he is ready to deliver it to brethren desiring it at 25 cents, postpaid. We have had the pleasure of examining the volume, and have no hesitancy in commending it as the best one yet issued. Every pastor ought, by all means, to have a copy.

In sending his second round of appointments, Rev. W. M. Young, presiding elder of the Sardis District, writes: "The district is in fine shape. Since pastoral charges have increased the assessment for ministerial support and the outlook is promising for a fruitful year. The brethren are presenting the claims of the Advocate, and we are hopeful of introducing it into many homes in these parts."

We are indebted to our long-time friend, Rev. J. W. Dorman, for a list of 14 subscribers from the goodly city of Lexington, Miss. Brother Dorman is in his fourth year in that delightful charge, where he has wrought a fine work and is universally loved and appreciated. He is one of the most influential men of his Conference, clean, manly and consecrated. No one was ever done an injustice by word or deed of John W. Dorman.

The Parker Memorial congregation, of this city, under the wise and energetic leadership of Rev. C. D. Atkinson, the pastor, is going steadily forward in the construction of its new house of worship. A rally in the interest of the enterprise will be held on Easter Sunday, when an offering to replenish the building fund will be taken. The sermon on that occasion will be preached by Dr. F. N. Parker, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, which we dare say will be a great message.

Rev. C. V. Breithaupt began work at Houma, La., a little over a year ago, and, considering the difficulty of the field, his success has been most remarkable. He has organized a church of twenty-five members, has secured building lots worth $1,000, and raised for all purposes more than $1,000. He is planning to erect a church and parsonage during the present year. In Houma there is a Catholic Church of 5,000, and the entire parish is almost wholly under the influence of that denomination.

Rev. J. W. McClellan, of Chunky, Miss., writes, under date of the 15th inst.: "Brother W. W. Clark, of this place, died last Friday. He was a life-long Methodist, was superintendent of the Sunday school at Chunky for a number of years, and was an unfailing friend to the pastors sent to his charge. He was the father-in-law of Rev. W. L. Blackwell, Rev. R. A. Sibley, Jr., and Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, all preachers now in the Mississippi Conference. His place will be hard to fill. Everybody loved him."

We regret exceedingly to be informed of the affliction in the family of Rev. W. R. Williams, of the North Mississippi Conference. His father, who has been ill and under treatment at Jackson for more than a year, recently had a fall in that city, which fractured a leg and left him in quite a serious condition. His sons have removed him to his home at Amory, where he lies prostrate, and his recovery is by no means certain. Let prayer be made for our brother and his loved ones in this hour of trial and anxiety.

There has been little perceptible change in the condition of Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Canton, Miss., who remains in the New Orleans Sanitarium, in this city. He is able to walk about his room and is cheerful, though he is feeble, and his system is considerably depleted. He is suffering from an affection of the prostate gland, and his physician thinks an operation will be necessary to relieve him. Let his host of friends pray that God may bring him safe through this ordeal, and spare his valuable life for many years to come.

We are indebted to Rev. R. O. Brown, of Amory, Miss., for the following items of information: "Rev. K. M. Harrison has been confined to his room with rheumatism all the winter. He was able to be out at services last Sunday (March 6), and it was an occasion of rejoicing to his numerous friends and former parishioners. Rev. J. B. Stone, who also resides here, has been quite sick at his brother's home, at Suligent, Ala., for the past four weeks. I visited him to-day (the 10th) and found him some better, but still very feeble." The brethren are requested to remember him at the throne of grace.

We learn with interest that the North Mississippi Conference has recently had a new presiding elder in harness; not by appointment of the Bishop, however, but by the constraint of necessity. His name is J. B. Randolph, the genial pastor at Iuka, and the place where he rendered service was Tishomingo, on the work of Rev. W. N. Dodds. Brother Dodds commends the efficiency of Brother Randolph as a presiding elder, and says, "I think we can use him for the place some time." From this it would appear that Brother Jacob is not only developing pastors, but also "beloveds," in the Corinth District.

Writing from Louisville, Miss., on the 8th inst., Rev. S. B. Myers gives the following account of his work: "The outlook for a good year was never more flattering. The work is advancing on all lines. The stewards raised the assessment for the preacher $100; the Sunday school has almost doubled in attendance; the prayer meeting is four times as large; and the church is full at every preaching service. We reorganized the Epworth League on Sunday, the 6th, with 40 in attendance and 11 new members." Brother Myers has also done some valuable service for the Advocate, for which we make grateful acknowledgment.

For some years the Advocate has had what is known in the office as "The Help Fund," which is used to send the paper to very needy ones who are anxious to have it but are unable to pay the cost of subscription. In this way it has been possible to send it into a number of poor homes into which otherwise it could not have gone. Of course, in all such cases, the publisher furnishes the Advocate at the least possible price. This "Fund" is now about exhausted, and we make this statement hoping that generous friends, reading it, may be moved to send a contribution to replenish it. We think there is no doubt that this is a worthy cause, and that gifts made to it are calculated to do great good.

Rev. J. R. Bright, who at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference was assigned to the Inverness charge, has obtained a leave of absence, and is now prosecuting his studies at Vanderbilt University, having effected an arrangement by which Rev. R. A. Ellis will take charge of his work while he is away. In a personal note written on the 12th inst., Brother Bright stated that Prince T. H. Yun was at that time at Vanderbilt for the purpose of delivering a couple of lectures, and that he is greatly loved and honored at that institution. Our young friend has also kindly furnished us with an account of the meeting of the Religious Education Association recently held in Nashville, which will appear in our issue next week.

Some time since the Business Men's League of Louisiana issued a public address, which, among other things, contained utterances that have been construed as striking at the prohibition and gambling laws of the State. In a meeting at Shreveport on the 12th inst., a sub-committee of the legislative committee of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League published a formal reply, and challenged the Business Men's League to join them in petitioning the Legislature to submit the question of state-wide prohibition to the people. Those present at the meeting of the sub-committee were Circuit Judge Charles V. Porter of Natchitoches, Representative Robert Roberts of Minden, the Rev. A. W. Turner and R. P. Moore and C. E. Jenkins, the latter two business men of Mansfield; J. B. Ardis, a local wholesale merchant; Attorneys G. W. Jack, Frank J. Looney and the Rev. Claude L. Jones of Shreveport.

Rev. W. B. Jones, the capable presiding elder of the Seashore District, makes the following observation upon the situation in his diocese at the end of the first quarter of the Conference year: "In closing up the first round, I am glad to say that all things are going well in this district, and that everything points to a year of progress. We have a most excellent set of preachers, who are all at the post of duty, doing good work, and the laymen are joining hands with them most heartily. An efficient lay leader in every charge would help much in advancing the interests of the church and the kingdom. A number of parsonage and church-building enterprises are on foot, some already being built, and others will be erected as soon as practicable. The new parsonage at Long Beach, which is in course of construction on the beach, promises to rival almost any in the district. It will replace the one recently destroyed by fire."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE BROTHERHOOD.

Brethren: Assessment four was due thirty days after reorganization at the Conference at Brookhaven. All members are assessed five dollars and annual dues of twenty-five cents, and twenty-five cents to aid any supernumeraire who may not be able to pay the full assessment of five dollars.

Our organization is not for charity among ourselves; nor is it strictly an insurance. We simply, as brethren, agree to pay this amount to the dependents of any brother who may be called from labor to rest and can no longer supply their needs.

Have you sent your assessment to Rev. J. A. Moore, Mount Olive? And, if not, why not? The day may not be distant when this act of brotherly love will prove a great blessing. Are there not others who will send their names to Brother Moore for enrollment and pay assessment five, now due?

You may be able to leave yours provided for, but what of those of the less fortunate brother? Do you not wish to impress them that the ties that bind us as brethren are not broken in death? If so, join us, and help the sorrowing in their deepest affliction.

J. M. WEEMS, President.

LOAN FUND DAY.

To the Advocate Readers: My Dear Friends—I call attention to the announcement that on the second Sunday in April, or as near thereto as practicable, you are expected to make a contribution to the Loan Fund of Church Extension. May I ask all our presiding elders and pastors to give the people a chance to give? In view of the urgent needs for large additions to our Loan Fund, we must ask our people for large gifts. Do not dispose of the matter by simply passing the collection baskets around. Send the subscriptions through the congregation, and ask everybody to give.

MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE CHURCH EXTENSION BOARD OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the North Mississippi Conference, composed of T. W. Lewis, J. R. Bingham and V. C. Curtis, met at Eupora March 1. Rev. T. H. Dorsey, a member of the board met with us.

Six applications were received and considered. Two of these were approved. In accordance with a resolution of the General Board asking the Conference Boards to take care of all applications for less than two hundred dollars, the other four were referred to the next meeting of the Conference Board, which will be at Sardis during the next session of the Annual Conference.

In connection with the meeting, a program, which had been previously arranged, was carried out. Brother Dorsey preached a very able sermon bearing on the work of Church Extension, at 11 o'clock, the writer preached in the afternoon at 3:30. Brother Bingham read a most excellent paper, and Brother Lewis made a strong practical address, both pertaining to the work of the board.

All these services were well attended and much interest manifested. We hope the interest will be permanent and will soon find tangible expression in a new church building in that enterprising town.

We were brought under many obligations to the popular pastor, Rev. Eugene Johnson, and his noble people for their many favors and unbounded hospitality while in their midst. V. C. CURTIS, Secretary. Coldwater, Miss., March 10, 1910.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

THE BIBLE MODE OF BAPTISM

(Published Mar. 1, 1910. Sample copy for 16 cts. in stamps.)

THE LATEST AND MOST CONVINCING BOOK OUT.

Immersion Delusions Completely Exploded by Facts Taken from the Only Bible in Existence During the Days of John and the Apostles. Presented in a Way that all Can Understand. Terse, Clear and Concise.

QUESTION SETTLED.—For all of those who have any regard for Ancient Divine Authority, even that which John and when he baptized, the question of the mode of Baptism is forever settled. Those who are fond of divisions can find many things on which to differ with others, but there is now no further excuse for differences as to the mode by which Baptism was performed in the days of Christ and the Apostles.

AN UNUSUAL DEMAND.—Never before has there been such a demand for this exact information as there is today. Methodists and others who have all the while practised The Bible Mode of Baptism have seriously neglected to inform the people on this subject. Immersionists, including Mormons, Adventists and Campbellites, give it no rest day nor night. Many of the present generation know little except from that side, and much of it is based on the grossest of falsehood.

$525.00 IN PRIZES For Bible Readers, Old and Young

FIRST.—In order to encourage Bible study, I offer $25.00 in prizes for the best answers to a list of questions on the subject of Baptism. I will send the questions free to any address. Get all the help you want from any source, and if you will enclose 16 cents in stamps, I will mail you a copy of The Bible Mode of Baptism from which all of the answers may easily be learned. Send for book and questions at once.

SECOND.—I offer a prize of $500.00 to any one who will furnish the references where the following words occur in the Greek New Testament the number of times which it is claimed that twenty Baptist Standard works say they occur, namely, rantizo, 62 times; ekkeio, 152 times, and louo, 139 times. Get all the help you wish from any Greek scholar, lexicon, or concordance, and let me hear from you.

A MOST LIBERAL PROPOSITION.—At the request of hundreds of people I have just published a revised and enlarged edition of The Bible Mode of Baptism, 3,000 copies of which are mailed out this week, and letters from the Atlantic to the Pacific, including Cuba and Mexico, indicate that at least a million copies are needed right now. I am taking steps to furnish them, and with the co-operation of preachers and people, it can be done within the next few months. Let every pastor, S. S. Supt., teacher or other church officer, please let me know at once, how many he can use at $1 per dozen; $8 per 100. You send no money until books are sold. Retail price, 15 cents a copy. AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY COMMUNITY.

REMEMBER: It is not a cheap little tract that I am offering. (Send 16 cents for sample and see what it is.) It consists of three parts: (1) The Bible Mode of Baptism, (2) The Church and Children, (3) Immersion Delusions Exploded. If you are not satisfied, return it and get your stamps back.

A beautiful bud has been plucked from the garden of this world and transplanted in the paradise of our Lord to bloom eternally.

Little MATTIE LEE JOHNSON has been taken from us. On Saturday, Feb. 26, her dear body was laid to rest in the Boone's Chapel Cemetery. She was permitted to shed sunshine in her home and joy in her parent's hearts for only seven short summers. While her place is vacant and we shall never more hear her sweet voice on earth, we know that she is in heaven, for God said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We can not understand why she was taken from us. But we know that our Father doeth all things well. And may his grace enable those who sorrow to say, "Thy will be done."

HER TEACHER.

After a long bodily affliction, it was early in the morning of the fourth day of January, 1910, that Mrs. MAGGIE BARR departed this life. Her body has gone away, but her sweet influence will last through time and eternity. For several years she had been a member of the Methodist Church, and through her protracted illness, she was faithful, loving and patient. She was a devoted companion and mother, and her every day advice to the children was to keep in the right way. The children and myself were almost constantly by her bedside, and we heard no words of complaint, but in all things she gave thanks to God. We believe she went to rest, and may God help us to so live that when we come to pay the same debt, we will have a place with Jesus and our loved one in the glory land.

THE HUSBAND AND CHILDREN.

Mrs. HATTIE WATTS was born Sept. 3, 1883, in Claiborne Parish, La., and died Dec. 29, 1909. She had been sick a long time, and was conscious of the approach of death. She said God knows best for me; I am going to die, and also said she was prepared to die. She joined the Methodist Church at thirteen years of age, and lived a Christian life. In 1905 she was married to D. C. Watts, and to them were born two children. It is so hard to give our dear ones up but God knows best. He doeth all things well; so weep not, dear loved ones, for we know our dear one is in heaven. She leaves husband, two children, father, mother and four sisters and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

Dearest Hattie, thou hast left us,
Left us, yes, forever more,
But we hope some day to meet you
On that bright and happy shore.

HER SISTER.

SARAH A. WOODARD was born in Green County, Ga., July 17, 1827, died Feb. 11, 1910, aged 82 years, 6 months and 24 days; was married to James G. Riley March 17, 1848. She raised five children, seven of her own and two step-children. Six of these survive her. The youngest is now fifty years old. The fifth generation of her own descendants were represented at her funeral. Her remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery. She was a devoted and faithful follower of Jesus Christ for many years; was one of the early pioneers of Methodism in Atalla County, Mississippi. Many years ago her home was the home of the itinerant Methodist preacher, who always received a cheerful Christian greeting and was made to feel at home, and everything possible was provided for his rest and comfort.

Her pious walk and godly conversation led many to the Savior of sinners. She was truly a mother in Israel. Her body sleeps in the silent tomb, her spirit has gone to God, who gave it, to bask in the sunlight of our heavenly Father's love, and with loved ones who have gone before.

W. B. HULL.

RAIFORD, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Ingram, aged 13 years, 11 months, 29 days. From the home of their adoption, in far away San Angelo, Texas, a wail of heart-breaking sorrow was wafted to the loving, sympathetic souls of their numerous relatives and friends. This sad message heralding the death of the eldest son of that happy Christian home, a bright, beautiful lad of unprecedented promise, carried universal grief in its wake. How well we remembered his handsome, interesting face, framed with clustering curls of rich brown hair that matched his wondrous dark eyes, and made little Raiford the handsomest boy in our neighborhood. His accustomed place in dear old Emory Church was exchanged for one in the Sunday school of his new home Church, but his pleasing personality, his gentlemanly bearing, and good deportment, will ever remain as a cherished remembrance to all of our people. What fond hopes, what sweet memories, what fond love lie entombed in that lonely grave in the Western prairies! Oh! were it not for the promises of the Christian faith, how could so great a sorrow be endured by his loved ones—especially his broken-hearted father and mother, his idolized grandmother, who shared his home and loved him from his infancy so tenderly; his devoted uncle, who lived adjoining them; his loving aunts, whose far-distant homes prevented their attendance on the brave little sufferer during his last fatal illness? Yes, and "Uncle Henry," too, who was ever a pillar of strength and helpfulness in other trials in the days gone by, and many others, who loved him and them and longed to comfort them in their time of deep grief? But he who has promised to send a comforter, who loves them for their many years of faithful service, will bind their lacerated hearts into another link in the golden chain that reaches to his own great suffering heart. God bless them now and forever more.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect adopted by the W. H. M. S. of Minerva, Miss., in memory of Mrs. J. F. STOKER, who departed this life Feb. 14, 1910:

First—That in the passing away of Mrs. Stoker, we have sustained a deep loss, she being one of our most enthusiastic workers.

Second—That we feel our loss more acutely for her wise counsel. We feel that our loss is irreparable.

Third—That though we appreciated her presence and were so fond of her, as a character, yet we bow submissively to the will of the Lord.

Fourth—That we cherish fondly her memory through the coming years and each of us strive to live a life of deep devotion and be with her in eternity.

Fifth—That we extend our sympathy to the aged and heart-broken mother, the devoted father and the young, motherless children.

Sixth—That we send a copy of these resolutions to the stricken family, the Christian Advocate, the Whona Times and the Kilmichael Record, and also spread them upon the minutes of our society.

Heart Trouble from Childhood

"I suffered with my heart from girlhood; could not sleep on left side. Eleven bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy removed all these troubles, and brought complete recovery." MRS. H. C. CRUSE, San Francisco, Calif.

The life of the body is the blood. It runs on and on, carrying nourishment and gathering up impurities as long as life lasts—the heart makes it go. When the heart is weak it cannot do this, and dizzy spells, palpitation, short breath, indicate that it is doing its work imperfectly.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy strengthens the heart nerves and muscles, and restores normal action to the heart.

The first bottle will benefit; if not, your druggist will return your money.

LESSON FOR MARCH 20, 1910.

LESSON XII—A PARALYTIC FORGIVEN AND HEALED.

Matt. ix, 1-13.

Golden Text: "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—Matt. ix, 6.

The citizens of that country on the eastern shore of the sea, after having heard of the wonderful work of liberating the demonized men, requested the Master that he go away, depart out of their coasts. Was it that they were unworthy of having him among them? Simon Peter once said, "Depart from me for I am a sinful man, O Lord." Those in this state of mind are the ones who most need the presence of Jesus, and among whom he did his works of love and mercy. If the Gergesenes had had that one reason of unworthiness, Jesus would not have left them. There were other causes for their request, and Jesus knew best as to what they were; for he at once entered the ship to re-cross the sea. One of the men, out of whom the devils were departed, followed after Jesus, begging to be allowed to go with him. Jesus knew him, knew of the home that he had left because of his affliction, and of the loving ones that waited and watched for his return, so he said, "Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee."

The very best thing that can be done with God's gift of a change of heart and life is to take it home and begin Christ's service there. If the home life is religious, then the influence will work outward; it will be with us as we mingle among men.

The poor man obeyed Jesus; went back to his home and people and told of the Lord's blessing so well and so faithfully that when Jesus came into that country not long afterwards the people "Sent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diseased, and besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment; and as many as touched were made perfectly whole." All this from the testimony of him who once dwelt among the tombs, with legions of devils in his heart.

The course of the departing ship was directed to his own city, his home. Not Nazareth now, for those, with whom he had been brought up, had driven him away from the home of his childhood and youth, and he had sought refuge in Capernaum. He had also heard that Herod had put John the Baptist in prison, and Herod often visited Nazareth, and he might attempt to imprison the Lord. Then Capernaum was a central point for his Galilean ministry. There was work waiting for him when he arrived at Capernaum, for some kind friends, full of faith, brought to him a man lying on a bed, sick of the palsy. The man could not come himself, but he was willing to be brought. Many a man groaning under the burden of sin, his soul sick, would come to the great Physician, but can not, for he knows not how. Who brought you to Jesus, brother? Did any one? Or, brother, whom did you ever bring to Jesus? Most men come to the Savior, as the harvest time of the seed sown by the loving mother's hand. Jesus saw their faith; the faith of the sick man and the faith of his friends that brought him. The mighty and wonderful works that Jesus had done, had produced faith. They knew he could banish sickness, disease of any kind, by his word; but did they know, by this time, that he came not only to make life here worth living, but by curing the soul, make them ready for life eternal? Jesus looked not alone on this man's bodily infirmity, but he looked upon his heart, and saw more than mortal could see. The man and Jesus, they two of all the world, knew whether or not it was sin that brought him to his present condition. So he said to the man, "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee." He calls him son, then this is a father-in-law for his child; his sin is to be forgiven because his father loves him. This was what was seen by the all-seeing eye. There were others there whose hearts Jesus was reading; there were scribes there, and they came there to watch and find fault, "and to catch him in his words." On their hearts Jesus read, "This man blasphemeth." To them Jesus said, "Why think ye evil in your hearts?" If I have power to make whole those that are sick, to still the tempest, to cast out devils, which all result from sin, is it not just as easy to drive out sin itself? I said that to this man that you, and him, and all of every time and of every nation "may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sin." The poor man with the palsy still lay upon his bed listening; Jesus turned to him then and said, "Arise, take up thy bed, and go to thine house." That was enough then; more at that time would have been pearls cast before swine. The man arose and went home. The multitude wondered and glorified God; the Scribes were discomfited, they had no assuring message to take back to those that had sent them.

Jesus left that place where that throng of people had seen and heard of what was there done, and came to where another work was to be done among a different class of listeners. The Pharisees, or maybe the same Scribes, still followed on the outskirts of the crowd. Jesus passed by the place where people came to pay the custom duties, or tax, and there saw a man named Matthew, the publican, or tax collector. Matthew must have heard much about Jesus from the people who came from all parts of the surrounding country, and he must have been anxious to see the Lord; he must have settled it in his heart that this was indeed the Lord, for when Jesus turned and said directly to him: "Follow me," there was no hesitation, but an immediate obedience. He must have heard that Jesus had said, "No man can serve two masters." Matthew has not written much about this; when Jesus fills the heart, self takes the second place. Although Matthew wrote the history of Jesus that comes first in the New Testament, a more extended account of his own conversion is related by Mark and Luke. From them we learn that Matthew followed first, and then led the Lord to his own home, followed by his former companions, other publicans and many sinners. Paul was called from the ranks of the enemy to fight for him whom he had fought against. Matthew made a feast, or supper, at his home for the Lord, and as other guests he could not exclude the publicans and those designated as sinners; had not Jesus called him from among them, and would not his kindness and goodness extend to them? Matthew was no more fit to be saved than they. So as guests at Matthew's house all the publicans, and a great number of sinners came, "and sat also with Jesus and his disciples." There may not have been room for all of the disciples, and some of them must have given way to the publicans and sinners and remained near the door. To these the Scribes and Pharisees put the question, not without derision, "Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?" The disciples did not answer, but Jesus heard the question, and from his position at the table, more pointed and full of rebuke, he made answer. Calling to them, he said: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick; but go ye and learn what that meaneth; I will have mercy and not sacrifice; for I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." What a saying! What power, working rebuke to the self-righteous, and comfort to him who sought surcease from sin and sorrow!

TOPIC FOR SUNDAY, MARCH 20-

HOW TO FIGHT THE GOOD FIGHT.

References: I. Tim. vi, 11-12; Eph. vi, 10-18; I. Cor. ix, 25-27; II. Tim. iv, 7-8.

How abundantly have St. Paul and other of the sacred writers used the military expressions to describe the life and work of the follower of Christ! The devotional hour can be made luminous by a careful study of these expressions with their significant lessons. The human heart, with its struggles and temptations and questions, finds a peculiar propriety in describing the Christian's life as a warfare and falls eagerly in line with the military expressions used in the sacred Scriptures. Add to these the fact that our writers of song have found these figures fruitful and useful and one is the more impressed with their appropriateness. The Epworth Leaguer will never find anything objectionable in these expressions, for there is something in the young heart that loves the tramp of an army and the sound of a bugle and no songs stir our hearts more thoroughly than "Onward Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War," or "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus, Ye Soldiers of the Cross."

Our subject to-day is "How to Fight the Good Fight," an answer to which we shall try to make as briefly as possible and as practically as possible.

In the first place, make a full enlistment. I have no doubt that the feebleness of many of our attacks on evil and on the enemies of the gospel grows out of the attempt we have made, sometimes half consciously, to stand on both sides at once and our well intended efforts are weakened by our failure to take an unquestionable stand in the army of Christ. Now, this means more than becoming a Church member. It means what St. Paul describes in Romans xii, 1. It means a self, presented, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, our reasonable service. It doesn't mean that all of our young people are to be preachers, for the gospel of Christ has enemies against whom we need soldiers behind the counter, at the bar, in the school room and, in fact, in all the realms of life. It means whatever our work we fight on the side of Christ and occupy no uncertain or questionable ground. All for Christ, is a full enlistment an "unentangled life."

Answer in the second place, get a full appreciation of the nature and strength of the enemy. It was this that St. Paul sought to give in Ephesians vi, 12. That the evil of the world is not simply human, but super-human; that it is not physical, but spiritual; that it is not just natural, but supernatural; that it isn't flesh and blood, but principalities and powers, spiritual wickedness in high places, is what the apostle urges on the soldier of the cross. If the enemy were physical, perhaps physical strength might avail somewhat, perhaps natural powers might be sufficient, but the very fact that behind all evil is a super-human spiritual power with a devilish delight in tearing down, throws the Christian soldier back on the necessity for a divine equipment for his warfare. We want our soldiers to have a full view of evil—not to make pessimists of them, not to paralyze them, but to enjoin them to seek a strength infinitely greater. We must not let them minimize the evil, it is here, strong and mighty, combined and alert; but we would have them realize that he who leads them is greater yet by far.

So, I say in the third place, get a complete equipment—put on the whole armor of God. Read over again Ephesians vi, 10-18. Contemplate the meaning of the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the spirit and ask yourselves, as young soldiers of the cross, whether past losses haven't come from a failure to avail yourselves of your divine equipment, a failure to draw heavily upon divine resources. Let's increase our own courage by a daily care for our own proper standing with God, self-examination and the exercise of a good conscience. Let's increase our faith by a daily study of the victories of faith won in days gone by in Christ's Name by those who looked to him. Let's increase our skill by a more systematic study of his divine truth—a more skillful use of the "sword of the Spirit." Above all things, let us not forget our secret prayer for divine equipment.

In the fourth place, let's keep our eyes open for something to do, and do it with our might. Neglect and lethargy and procrastination and idleness have done more evil to the kingdom of God than sin.

Then, in the last place, let us never forget while we fight the good fight, the prize that awaits God's soldiers. Read again Paul's joy as he looked backward. He had fought a good fight, but his joy is increased a thousand fold as he looked forward (2 Tim. iv, 8). "Henceforth," Measure the meaning of that word and we might begin to understand his reward.

"Never think the victory won.
Nor lay thine armor down;
The work of faith will not be won,
Till thou obtain the crown."

Fight on, my soul, till death
Shall bring thee to thy God;
He'll take thee at thy parting breath,
To his divine abode.

EXERCISE AND BREATHING

"Limited breathing capacity is one of the most common physical ills," says Dr. Jean Williams in Woman's Home Companion for March. Poor breathers are found not only among the sick of the earth, but also among the moderately well. All chronic invalids are poor breathers, and it is quite likely that they never would have been invalids if they had been good breathers.

Now here is the connection between good breathing and exercise. In order to be a good breather it is necessary to have sufficient lung capacity. Suitable exercise broadens and deepens the chest, gives freer capacity to the lungs and better fits them for their important task of supplying oxygen to the body and relieving it of the deadly carbonic acid.

When in the fresh air, breathing deeply, we absorb enough oxygen to saturate the blood. If we are exercising briskly at the same time, we absorb more oxygen, and are, therefore, just so much better off."

THE DUTY OF THE HOUR.

By Rev. W. B. Murrah, D.D., LL.D.

The familiar and often quoted saying of Shakespeare about "a tide in the affairs of men," has application to churches not less than to individuals. Our Lord rebuked the stupidity that failed to discern the signs of the times. The fact that the children of this world are often, in their generation, wiser than the children of light, is a reproach that the Church should not always deserve.

In matters educational, the Church, especially in America, is confronted by splendid opportunities which impose grave responsibilities. There are some considerations which call for special emphasis at this time, and suggest an imperative duty which we can not afford to disregard.

Certainly, one could not, with propriety, be charged with extravagance in statement when it is declared that there was never before a period in the history of the world when so much attention was given to the subject of education as now. Men of all grades of intelligence, widely separated by employment and fortune, are united in the conviction that in some way the character of the civilization of the future is to be determined by the forces generated in our educational institutions. This unanimity of sentiment is all the more remarkable, in view of the fact that many who are foremost in the recognition and assertion of this conviction have not themselves had the advantages of these institutions. They discern a manifest fact, and with practical wisdom adjust themselves to actual conditions.

It is important, at this time, that we should keep in mind the fact that we are living in a transition period. Methods, systems, and policies, are undergoing revision. We hear a great deal of the old education and the new education; and since, as Herbert Spencer, with that felicity of expression that was characteristic of him, has said, "We dress the minds of our children as we do their bodies, in the prevailing fashion," it is of the very first importance that the Church should be powerfully influential in setting the fashion in education. In some way (and I know of no better or more effective way than through our Church press), the conviction must be burned into the minds of our people that great things must be done in our educational work, and done soon, or we are going to suffer disastrous consequences. Indeed, it is not too much to say that unless we make a very great advance in the way of organization, system and equipment, we must abandon it altogether. It would be disloyal and even a craven thing to think of this.

Since education in its highest sense means the perfect development of all of the capabilities with which man is endowed; it is of paramount importance that one should get the right direction in the formative period of life. The life-molding of an immortal being is a tremendous thing. In the stage of growth and development, when the great questions which pertain to destiny are pressing for an answer, the institution that he attends, which to him is supposed to be authority in all things, ought not to be indifferent and silent.

The supreme purpose of an educational institution should be to make character, and there is nothing about which we need to feel such concern as the influences which are to shape the characters of the leaders of public thought. If the Christian Church ceases to dispense the blessing of education through its colleges and universities, it will soon lose all control over brilliant and influential men. If there is any place in this world where Christianity should speak with definiteness and authority, it is in our educational institutions.

The Church, then, must educate. This is not only a legitimate function of Church work—it is a normal function as well. There can not be any healthful, vigorous Church life where this department of enterprise is neglected. It opens avenues for activity and channels for benevolence which are closed to all other motives and appeals. We may be sure that the Church which does not maintain a constant and firm hold upon educational institutions will have no future. And it must be an intelligent and persistent hold. Mere spurts of enthusiasm now and then will not count for much. It is not too much to say that the Church should exercise coercive influences strong enough to make the colleges of America, Christian colleges. We have a right to demand this in the name of our civilization. Thus far, they have been largely so. The Church must say what shall be their character in the future. But unless the Church fosters and controls great educational plants of commanding influence its demands will be impotent.

It follows from this that if the Church is to educate, it must do so in a respectable and efficient way. It can not afford to even suggest the suspicion that it is a party to sham and mere pretense. It must never put its members in a position where loyalty to its institutions will be in conflict with the interests of their own children. To meet the demands suggested by these considerations, the Church must speedily and adequately endow its colleges for higher education. This is pre-eminently the duty of the hour. Academies may be self-sustaining. It is doubtful if any other policy should be encouraged respecting them. They may be even sources of large revenues. Many of the best are. This is notably the case in the New England States. But a genuine college must be endowed. In no other reliable way can we supply the faculties, laboratories and libraries to make a college.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

I was licensed to preach in July, 1856. James Y. McNabb, who died in Virginia during the war, was licensed at the same time. Later in the year, J. W. Sandel, now an honored member of our Conference, was licensed to preach. There were at the close of the year, 1857, thirteen local preachers in the bounds of what was then known as Pearl River Circuit. There are now twelve or thirteen charges covering the same territory.

It was in 1857 that I was admitted on trial. Conference met in Brandon, November 18, and closed on the night of November 25. It was in session eight days, including Sunday. There were seventeen admitted on trial in our Conference that year. I know of two only, besides myself, who are still living, viz: P. Howard of the Mississippi Conference, and Geo. Jackson of the Louisiana Conference, both of whom have been superannuated for a number of years. So, now, I, the last one of that class, have dropped out.

The great Dr. Winans died in 1857. His funeral was preached during the session of Conference by Dr. Geo. C. Light, who died February 28, 1860.

The Conference business was all new to me, and of course, very interesting. Bishop John Early presided. Henry J. Harris, late of the Mississippi Conference, was secretary. Among the leading men of our Conference, as I saw it, were Geo. C. Light, D.D., B. M. Drake, D.D., L. Campbell, T. C. Thornton, D.D., D. M. Wiggins, "Little Tommy" Owen, Thomas Nixon, Ransom J. Jones, Thos. Clinton, Barnabas Pipkin, H. H. Montgomery, Wm. H. Watkins, D.D., John G. Jones, Richard Abbey, D.D., Levy Pearce and C. K. Marshall, D.D.

I have a blanket that was given me by Dr. Marshall's daughter, which she owned while he was a member of our Conference. Just how old it is, I do not know. It is a good one yet, and I prize it very highly. Dr. Marshall, as I saw him in 1857, was one of the grandest preachers of our Conference.

I was charmed with the appearance of the preachers. They were all dressed in black, except one. He had on a very common suit. I looked at him, and thought, "Poor fellow; you must have come from a very poor circuit. I hope I will not be your successor." Yet, when the time came for reading the appointments, my name was called in connection with "Black Creek Mission," where this same brother had been for the past two years. Brother Willis, for that was his name, stepped forward and handed me the plan of the work. It was the most complete plan, in all respects, I have ever seen. I studied it and mastered it, and kept it till I wore it out. It was helpful to me all the year.

But where was Black Creek Mission? I had never heard of it. Did not know whether it was north, south, east or west. I felt sure it was somewhere in North America; but just where, I knew not. I left Brandon, accompanied by my brother, Wm. B. Lewis, on the morning of November 26, and reached home in due time. My father, who had in former years killed many deer and turkeys in the bounds of my work, in and around where Baxterville now is, and who knew many of the officials of my charge, gave me much information about the people and places. My uncle, Rev. Wm. B. Lewis, Sr., died about this time. He was at one time a member of our Conference.

My father fixed me up with a good horse, bridle and saddle, and on Monday, the 14th of December, 1857, I mounted my pony and started to my work, followed by the prayers of as good a mother and father as any boy ever had. I shall never forget that parting.

In Mark x:29-30 we read: "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." Wonderful!

I was in my 22d year, a poor boy, unlettered, but knowing God as a sin-pardoning Father, Christ as my Savior, and the Holy Ghost as my Comforter. I could and did sing as I went:

"I love thee, my Savior; I love thee, my Lord;
I love thy dear people, thy ways and thy Word.
I love all my brethren; I love sinners, too,
Since Jesus has died to redeem us from woe."

I knew not what was before me; yet I knew I was in the hands of God. My Bible, Discipline, Hymn Book, Fletcher's Appeal and Christian Perfection, Watson's Apology for the Bible, Watson's Institutes, and Wesley's Sermons constituted my library. I also had a copy of Smith's English Grammar and a copy of Ancient Geography.

I spent my second night after leaving home with Mr. Everett Pope, east of Pearl River. Here I felt at home. Mrs. Pope and I had known each other from childhood. She was a daughter of Rev. Stephen A. Regan, a local preacher who lived near my father when I was a boy. Mr. Pope gave me an interesting account of the people I was to serve. I sat and listened with deep interest, sometimes painful, as he described the people, how they lived and what they did for a livelihood. Some of them would bring chickens, eggs, butter, honey, hides, gophers, etc., to market and barter them for whisky and tobacco. Then, if they had anything left, the poor wife, mother and children, came in for a part in the way of sugar, coffee, dry goods, shoes, etc.

He told me of a man who started to market with a tub of beautiful honey in the comb, and a gopher in his cart. After getting a few miles from home, he discovered that he had forgotten something. So, leaving his cart, he mounted his horse and hastened home. Upon his return he found his gopher in his tub of honey—dead. The thing had kicked and scrambled till the honey-comb was all to pieces, then drowned in the honey. The fellow returned home again, strained the honey, took it on to market and sold it without telling why he had to strain it. In after years, I heard a man say that religion is like honey with everything impure, unclean taken out of it. Then he added: "Honey is sweet. So is religion, pure and undefiled." I have ever found it so.

A NOTABLE GATHERING.

By Rev. J. R. Bright.

The seventh general convention of the Religious Education Association held its annual session March 8-10, at Nashville, Tenn. This national meeting brought together eminent educators, professors and presidents of leading institutions and representative pastors and prelates of the Churches of the land. On the platform of this great gathering there were distinguished speakers, such celebrities as Bishops Hendrix and McDowell, President Faunce, Professors Willett and Grayham Taylor, and Chancellor Kirkland and Dean Tillett.

Strong addresses were delivered, discussing the various phases of religious education under the general theme, "The Church and Education."

The association was organized seven years ago in order to "promote religious and moral education." Its purpose is threefold: "To inspire the educational forces of our country with the religious ideal; to inspire the religious forces of our country with the educational ideal; and to keep before the public mind the ideal of religious education and the sense of its need and value."

Upon one fundamental proposition the consensus of opinion in this convention was unanimous that religion and education should be inseparable; and as a corollary to this, that no institution can fulfill its mission without teaching the essentials of religion; and that, on the other hand, the Church can not accomplish her purpose without entering the school business.

Religion and education both have the self-same end, normally, to teach the art and science of living, i. e., how to live according to the divine plan.

Whether there be two or three parts to man's make-up, it is an established fact that man has a spiritual nature; that he is by nature a religious being. Significant is the conclusion that body, mind and spirit constitute man and that he is born with a spirit which contains the potentiality, or germs, of the divine life. This seed of divinity in the soil of the human soul, under favorable environments and cultivation, sprouts and brings forth "first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." The normal education of the child develops the divine nature in his inmost being and keeps him while growing up from straying from the fold and the shepherd of his soul. It is infinitely easier to keep a lamb in the flock than to recover it after it has been lost.

It fulfills its purpose by the activities of its seventeen departments, their co-ordination with existing agencies, the discussion of principles and plans, the dissemination of information, the stimulation and formation of public opinion, and the general co-operation of individual members.

Like the laymen's movement, the association is inter-denominational and non-sectarian. It seeks to awaken intense interest in behalf of religious education and to advance this cause along the old lines of educational endeavor and through the operating channels of religious effort. It does not seek to duplicate or replace any organized agencies in effect, but to develop and correlate those already at work toward this great end. It aims through the practical solution of the serious problems thereof, to increase the efficiency and influence of Sunday schools, young people's societies and Christian associations; to cause the Church to awaken to a full sense of her obligation and opportunity and become a real training school for soul culture; and to make the schools, colleges and universities of our country effective agents for religious instruction and character building. It would bring each and every pupil, student and scholar to the Master's feet and let them learn of the divine Teacher.

What does all this mean? Simply, that we are to give more thought and effort to "feeding his lambs" on "the sincere milk of the Word." We must look after and see to spiritual nourishment, as well as activity, for the soul like the body demands both proper food and exercise. Spiritual impressions must precede spiritual expression; the one comes from teaching the Word of God; the other through training in good works. So the Church of the future is going to give more attention and energy to the teaching and training of the children and youth of our people. True education holds the primacy in religion, though not the supremacy over it, and yet education is but the handmaid of Christianity. It is ours to utilize the educational forces at our command in order to consummate the religious ends in view. Let the heaven of the ideas and ideals of Christian education spread and reach the mind of the churches and the heart of the schools; let it inspire and grip the pedagogues and prophets in our Israel; and the Kingdom in reality will be forth-coming in our midst.

Wesley Hall, Vanderbilt University, March 12.

A MEMOIR AND TRIBUTE TO A PURE AND USEFUL LIFE.

Mary Elizabeth Shumaker, wife of Rev. J. H. Shumaker, and daughter of Joseph Carlton and Cynthia Weller Smith, departed this life February 21, 1910, after a long and severe illness. She was born December 1, 1864, at 822 Fifth Avenue, South, Nashville, Tenn., where she has lived for the last few years and from which place she passed to her eternal reward. Following a sweet and comforting funeral service at Elm Street Church, her remains were laid to rest in beautiful Mount Olivet.

She was converted and joined Elm Street M. E. Church, South, when about fourteen years of age, and soon became active in all departments of its work, being ever loyal, devout and enthusiastic.

She was married December 9, 1890, to Rev. J. H. Shumaker, a member of the North Mississippi Annual Conference. From the first she was a model mistress of the parsonage and an ideal home-keeper, being equally gifted and happy in entertaining the Bishop, presiding elders, pastors, evangelists, or laymen with her joyous and unstinted hospitality. She accepted all appointments as of the Lord, the first being Eriar's Point Station, in the delta, on the bank of the Mississippi River, which was then, in a true sense, a mission field with a very unhealthy climate, but she went bravely to the work, counting not the cost.

Another difficult place might be mentioned away back in the poor hills, on a small salary, where she even preceded her husband, making many acquaintances by the time he arrived with the household goods. When he was disposed to grieve over her hard lot, she said to him: "I need just such an experience as this poor place will afford. Don't worry over anything."

The children and young people in every place will rise up to call her blessed, as she entered so naturally into their sympathies and was happiest when leading them into the beauties and joys of Christian life and service. Everywhere she counted her friends by the hundreds. The sick and poor always appealed to her sympathy and tenderness, as she was always ready to serve and sacrifice for them, forgetting her own needs when seeing the needs of others.

As a sufferer, her character gave forth its brightest luster. Her greatest trial came when on account of her bodily afflictions it seemed best that her husband should give up the regular itinerant work, but she was comforted many times by the thought that inasmuch as they were denied the privilege of serving as itinerants they could yet serve the itinerancy, as her husband was secretary of the Methodist Benevolent Association from its beginning, and she had such a large part in its establishment and beneficent work, being permitted before her death to see over $80,000 distributed among the widows and orphans of deceased itinerant preachers.

She had high ideals of the Christian life; was a woman of prayer, a student of the Word and a lover of the house of God. She was an affectionate and obedient daughter, fond and unselfish sister, devoted and faithful wife. Her love was pure, her faith was strong and her hope was bright, and she ever rested on the promises of God.

The following tribute was spoken at the bier by her former pastor, Rev. J. B. Erwin:

"My friends, I come to speak of one whom I loved as my own child, one whom for twenty-five years we loved in our home, because she was very dear and dear to us all, and I am proud that I enjoyed her friendship and had her loving confidence as her pastor and friend.

Years ago, when I was pastor of this charge the first time I became acquainted with her—just developing into splendid womanhood. It was my great pleasure to be her adviser when she was contemplating taking that sacred step to become the wife of a Methodist clergyman. It was my happy opportunity to stand before her and declare the bonds that made her and her noble husband one. It was a pleasure to me to watch her as she entered upon those duties so unenviable and see her discharge them so well.

Here, in this Church, the rosy hours of happy childhood were spent in the Sunday school; the glad days of her young life were given to working in this membership. Here, at this sacred altar she first partook of the emblems of the broken body of her Lord. Away from it she went as the wife of an itinerant Methodist preacher.

My friends, I want to say to-day that the stings and sorrows of this hour are largely mitigated when we consider the character whom we know as going away. Sister Shumaker was, to me, a beautiful character. There was a cheerfulness in her disposition; there was a sunniness in her life that made her a lofty and cultured soul. She was refined in every sense of her being; there was a charm in the very tones of her voice—a beauty in the manner of her address that always spoke so fittingly of the plastic hand that had reared and trained her. She worshipped God in spirit and in truth in Christ Jesus his Son, and followed in his steps the very best she knew how.

And now God has taken her unto himself, and from the bright heights she is looking to-day and saying, 'Come on, the half has not been told.' And knowing her as I did, I think if she could speak to you to-day from those celestial heights, she would say to you, 'the sufferings through which I passed are not worthy to be compared to the glory that has been revealed. I would go through them all and do it gladly if the road ended where the Gates of Pearl have swung to me—I would go through them all again.'

My friends, I am glad that Jesus has kindled the glow of hope in the shade of the tomb; and flung it into our hearts and forever opened wide the heart with the hope of immortal life. How many of us have loved ones crowding the shore to-day—mother, father, husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister?

May God bless and keep you always and bring us all to meet this dear child in that bright world so fair and so happy. WM. H. JOHNSON, Pastor.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

I regard the present laymen's movement as the most significant and encouraging enterprise that has appeared in the interest of our Lord's cause since I became interested in religious work, away back in the fifties. During all of that time it has seemed to me that the greatest obstacle in the way of religious success has been because of a lack of interest upon the part of a large proportion of our laity—good people, otherwise, but not familiar with missionary and other religious literature, and, of course, not interested in that character of reading. Some are, and have been interested all along. In my long itinerant life I have never served a charge where I did not find some pure gold—men and women who sympathized with me in my weakness and unworthiness; shared my troubles, and who supplied my temporal wants. With such parishioners I found religious literature, an open Bible, a family altar. In short, a little heaven there.

Why are some of the laity so efficient and so far in advance of others? Because their minds are not hidden "like marble in the quarry," but have been developed and become useful. Their mouths are unlocked, and their fountain of tears is opened, and they are consecrated to God.

For the last quarter of a century Christian women have been better organized and have been more efficient than men, but as God is undoubtedly in the laymen's movement, both sexes will be reached by it. The laity will be revolutionized and there will be a grand forward movement—not by the officers of the army alone, but the rank and file will rush into line, and gladly bear their part. Then we shall see, as we never have seen before, that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation. Then our ministerial ranks shall fill up, and of our benevolences there shall be an overflow.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS.

Dear Brother Meeke:

Circuit Court is now in session at Tunica, Miss. It found but one prisoner in jail. Before the saloons went out of business the jail invariably contained from forty to sixty inmates. There were also then from four to five times as many murder cases on the docket as there are now. Prohibition prohibits, as well as any other law—not absolutely, but to a remarkable extent. One might as well say that the law against murder does not prohibit, because only one murderer in fifty receives the extreme penalty of the law. J. W. HONNOLL.

A CARD.

I wish to say to the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, that on account of family conditions I asked for and received a nominal appointment at our last Conference. I did so because I could not see how I could, at the time, go forward to do whatever work might be assigned me. Conditions have somewhat changed; and I can now give a good part of my time to work. So if any of the brethren need my assistance in their meetings I promise to give them the best there is in me. Many of the brethren know me personally, and have labored with me. I do trust that there will be nothing to prevent me at the next Conference from going at the command of the Church, as I have done in the past. Sincerely,

B. T. CREWS.

Senator LeRoy Percy, the new United States senator from Mississippi, was sworn in and took his seat on the 15th inst. He was assigned a place on several important committees, and has settled down to work. The Mississippi Society at Washington tendered Senator and Mrs. Percy a reception on the evening of March 19.

The police of Pontiac, Mich., have traced nearly fifty burglaries in the past three years to the peculiar effect of whisky on one man. This man, whose name is James Monroe, has confessed that he committed the burglaries, and he said that a few drinks of whisky produced in him an irresistible impulse to steal.

It is said that Joseph Brucker, an aeronaut, starting from Spain, will undertake to cross the Atlantic in a dirigible balloon, and that he will be accompanied by two friends. It is announced that they will attempt to reach New York by way of Cuba and Porto Rico and up through the South. We think they may count themselves lucky if they do not reach the bottom of the ocean. Hohson's venture of sinking the Merrimac was tame compared to this undertaking.

Though not yet discredited, as Cook has been, Commander Robert E. Peary is by no means having smooth sailing in seeking to claim the glory of having discovered the north pole. The effort to have Congress make some recognition of his exploit has not yet succeeded, and some of the national legislators have referred to Mr. Peary in terms none too complimentary. Last week he appeared in Atlanta to lecture, where Governor Brown refused to introduce him, and the public gave him a decided frost. This has led to the cancellation of his other dates in the South.

Former Vice President Fairbanks, in the New York World, in discussing his impressions of foreign countries, says: "The awakening of Japan is the most notable of all. She has a difficult task before her in Korea, but the advance already made is reassuring. As to the future, perhaps the most interesting problems are presented in China. The progress made since the boxer uprising ten years ago has surprised even the Chinese. The course of the United States toward that country has won in a considerable degree the confidence and respect of its people, a fact of great future importance."

A deplorable condition of things exists at Wesson, Miss. The largest cotton factory in that State is located there, and the population of four or five thousand is almost wholly dependent upon the mills for support. For several weeks the factory has been able to run but little, and, as a result, wages have stopped and many of the people are in want. The neighboring towns, Brookhaven and Hazlehurst in particular, have generously contributed funds to assist the nearby sufferers. Such a situation is most unusual in the South, where most of the people happily live on the farm, and few of whom ever fail to secure the actual necessities of life.

Knowing of the generous assistance which Mr. Rockefeller has given the National Anti-Saloon League, the Model License League recently addressed him a communication, claiming that prohibition is a failure, and that their organization alone promises relief from the abuses of the liquor traffic. And, having stated their case, they appealed to the money king for funds to carry on their work. But, instead of responding, Mr. Rockefeller gave them the cold shoulder. It is needless to say that in doing so he displayed the sound common-sense for which he has so long been noted. The reformation of the saloon business is a chimerical dream. It would be quite as sensible to undertake to remove the abuses in stealing and to refine the art and make it respectable.

George W. Vanderbilt's Biltmore estate has been enlarged by repeated purchases until it now embraces 130,000 acres of mountain land covered with timber. It is his ambition to make this mountain tract self-sustaining. Four million feet of lumber were taken from it last year, mostly hardwood. 5,000 cords of fire wood were sawed, and in addition to this, there were gathered over a thousand cords of tanbark, and several hundred cords of pulp wood for the manufacture of print paper. The Vanderbilt game preserve is now said to be the largest in America and one of the largest in the world. Roaming the 130,000 acres of forests, are thousands of squirrels, bears, and deer, and almost innumerable pheasants, rabbits, quails, and wild turkeys. The lynx, wild cat, wild boar, and wild goat are also said to exist in considerable numbers.

We appropriate the following from that enterprising and ably edited paper, The Commercial Appeal, of Memphis: "Dr. Gaylord, of the Cancer Laboratory, Albany, N.Y., has published an interesting statement to the effect that cancer can be cured by vaccination. There are so many startling scientific assertions being made of late that all must be accepted with a pinch of salt. There is little doubt that eventually some effective cure or method of treatment will be found for all of the ills of the flesh, but it is not always wise to accept the first assertion that is made before its practicability has been determined. When the United States Marine Hospital Service announced that yellow fever was communicated by mosquitoes the medical profession laughed. Old veterans who had fought through epidemics thought the mosquito theory one of the most fanciful fads of the century. But a thorough test was made, and now yellow fever has lost its alarm, for it can be controlled and cured. Science makes great strides each year. Possibly Dr. Gaylord is right. He has devoted a life study to the disease in an institution endowed for that purpose. Cancer is a stubborn and, so far, an unconquerable malady, and if the discovery which he claims to have made is a success, he has added another great gift to the cause of humanity."

PRESIDENT CLIFTON'S RESIGNATION.

After an incumbency of eight years, Mr. W. L. Clifton has resigned the presidency of Grenada Female College, his resignation to take effect the June 1. A dispatch to the Commercial Appeal from Grenada, on the 15th instant, says: "Mr. Clifton and his accomplished wife have placed the school on a better basis than it was ever before. The curriculum is much higher than that of the average college for young ladies; Mr. Clifton having refused to lower the course for the sake of popularity. He has a host of friends, not only in Grenada, but throughout North Mississippi who regret that he has severed his connection with the college. He is a scholarly man, yet while a student and educator, he is practical and has a grasp of every day affairs. He has not made known his plans for the future."

Appropos of Mr. Clifton's resignation, Mr. J. R. Bingham, president of the Board of Trustees, has issued the following statement to the public:

"No one can regret Mr. Clifton's resignation more than I do, both personally and officially. He has no superior, if he has an equal, as an educator in this section."

"During his administration the property has doubled in value and more than trebled in equipment. He has made the school popular and successful."

"Leading educators are applying for the position."

"The object of this writing is to assure the pupils, patrons and friends of Grenada College that the trustees will secure a man of capability and character to carry forward the school to still greater success."

"The really great work done there by Mr. Clifton makes it possible for us to do what otherwise would be beyond our power."

"We hope to retain practically unchanged the present excellent faculty."

"I do not hesitate to say that the next session will be the greatest one yet known in the heroic history of Grenada College."

"Further announcement will be made soon. Meantime, let all the friends of Grenada College prepare for our forward movement."

MINISTERIAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Our comrade, Brother J. C. Lowe, has passed away. Assessment No. 2 of our association will go to his widow. The members have until March 24, 1910, to pay assessment No. 2. Our Constitution says: "On the death of a member, the Secretary shall pay

Then there's the dust of the atmosphere and the pickled-pigs-feet and mackerel smells that coffee in open barrels take in and so readily absorb. Oh yes, you get a plenty when you buy loose coffee and have the grocer wrap it up for you in a paper bag that leaks strength and flavor all the way to your home; but do you want it all, or simply a clean, crisp, fresh, high-grade article like

In view of the two calls made upon the association since Conference, and the constitutional provision that we shall have one full assessment on hand to make immediate payment when called upon, we have decided to call upon all the members of the association to send their mortuary fee to John Park, Oxford, Miss., as soon as possible. This call will reach you through the Advocate March 24, hence you will have until April 24, 1910, to make payment.

Please, brethren, do not neglect this call. This is assessment No. 3.

Church News

Dr. John C. Kilgo, of Trinity College, attended the Founders' Day celebration at Tulane University in this city. While here, Tulane conferred upon him the degree of LL.D.

It is said that the Dutch Reformed Church has doubled its contributions within the past decade, and its membership within the past thirty years. It now has 300,000 communicants in the United States. This is the Church to which Mr. Roosevelt belongs.

The seventy-first annual commencement of Port Gibson Female College is fixed for May 13-16. The commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. J. E. Carpenter, of Jackson, Miss. This institution has had a good session, and is doing a great work under the capable administration of President H. G. Hawkins.

Among the speakers at the World's Sunday School Convention, which is to meet in Washington City, May 19th, will be President W. H. Taft. This approaching conference of Sunday school workers has already awakened much interest and enthusiasm and promises to be one of the most noted religious gatherings ever assembled on the American continent.

In China alone last year 1,365,000 copies of the Bible, or parts of it, were distributed by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and of these more than 90 per cent. were bought, not given away. This indicates that the millions of the yellow race are hungry for the Word of God, and that the light of the gospel will soon be shining throughout Oriental heathendom.

Everywhere the Laymen's Movement is producing gracious results. Our churches in Louisville, Ky., have pledged themselves to increase their foreign missionary contributions from $7,000 to $15,000; and in St. Louis from $12,000 to $25,000. The laymen of the South Carolina Conference are raising the missionary assessments, and 50 per cent. additional—an advance from $12,000 to $18,000. Never before was the missionary conscience of the Church so thoroughly aroused, and never were the opportunities for achievement so inviting and inspiring.

The Board of Trustees of Wesleyan Female College, of Georgia, the first regularly chartered college in America, if not in the world, for conferring degrees upon women, have inaugurated a campaign to raise an endowment of $200,000 for that institution. Of this amount, Macon, the city in which it is located, has donated $40,000. The Florida Conference has also pledged its support to the movement, and will co-operate in carrying it forward. La Grange College and Andrew College, in the same State, are pleading earnestly for an endowment of $100,000 each. The latter, of which Rev. J. W. Malone, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, is president, has lately received a gift of $25,000 from Mr. J. P. Williams.

In a note to the Midland Methodist, Bishop Hoss has announced the cancellation of all engagements until after the General Conference, giving as his reason "domestic afflictions of a providential nature" and the need of rest. Among other things, the Bishop says: "The past year has been the hardest of my life in many ways, and I am seriously feeling the effects of it. My doctors tell me that I must get two or three weeks of rest. I trust that my brethren who know that I have never shirked any duty these forty years will be generous in judging me now." This honored chief pastor is doing only what he should do in thus safeguarding his health. His life is far too valuable to be imperiled by toiling to the point of absolute exhaustion.

Information has reached us that Rev. W. A. Borum, of Oxford, Miss., has been called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church at Jackson, Miss., and that he will accept the call. We were associated with Mr. Borum in the work of the Master at Greenville for several years, and note with gratification his entrance into this wider field. He is a man of deep spirituality and unusual effectiveness in the pulpit, and as a pastor we have never known his superior. He is a brave, clean and manly minister, who compromises with no form of evil, and who makes himself felt in all his former movements of the day. While at Greenville, he was instrumental in having erected a beautiful $25,000 church, and at Oxford he influenced his congregation to build a magnificent Sunday school annex. We congratulate the Baptists at Jackson upon having secured the services of Brother Borum, and we predict for him a career of large usefulness in the capital city of Mississippi.

The movement to erect a great representative Southern Methodist Church in Washington City is said to be making commendable progress. It is announced that of the $350,000 necessary to complete the structure, $200,000 or more will be on hand by the time of the assembling of the General Conference. This church is designed to take the place of the Mount Vernon Church at the national capital. The following have been appointed to represent the connection in maturing plans, and are expected to co-operate with the Bishops in carrying forward the enterprise: Arkansas, Gov. George W. Donaghey; Alabama, R. S. Minger; Florida, J. E. Wall; Georgia, Asa F. Candler; Kentucky, J. Edgar Stewart; Louisiana, Dr. John P. Scott; Missouri, Murray Carlton; Mississippi, J. L. Dantzler; North Carolina, Gen. J. S. Carr; Oklahoma, Dr. T. P. Powell; South Carolina, Henry P. Williams; Tennessee, J. R. Pepper and R. B. Dayenport; Texas, Jesse E. Jones and L. W. Slaughter; Virginia, J. P. Branch and B. A. Schoolfield; West Virginia, John C. Mayo.

POSTPONEMENT OF CHILDREN'S DAY TO JUNE 12, 1910.

At its annual meeting in Nashville, Jan. 3-7, the General Sunday School Board unanimously decided to make a special effort through the Children's Day collections of 1910 to complete the "Endowment Fund" of $50,000 for a chair of Religious Pedagogy and Sunday schools in Vanderbilt University, as enacted by the General Conference of 1906, and contained in Paragraph 248 of our Book of Discipline. To this end the Board appointed the undersigned as a special committee to carry out the purpose of the Board, and to devise a plan by which the remainder of the money might be raised the present year.

After taking counsel of the College of Bishops and receiving their full approval, the General Sunday School Board has decided to urge all Sunday schools of our Church, for the present year only, to observe Children's Day on the second Sunday in June (June 12), instead of the third Sunday in May, as usual. A limited flexibility in fixing the date for holding Children's Day is allowed by the Discipline to individual schools by its use of the words, "the third Sunday in May, or as near thereto as practicable," and while this provision was designed to meet peculiar local conditions, it is the judgment of the Sunday school Board that the early completion of the Vanderbilt endowment fund, and the pressing demands upon the Sunday school department for additional workers in its own wide territory, present an emergency which amply justifies a general postponement of Children's Day for 1910 to the second Sunday in June, as above indicated.

The reasons for urging this postponement are as follows:

1. It was the sincere hope of the movers of the measure in the General Conference of 1906, as it was the expectation of that body itself, that the $50,000 endowment would be raised during the four years from 1907 to 1910, inclusive, but either through lack of appreciation by our Church in general for the great purpose of the endowment, or by reason of failure on the part of Annual Conference Sunday school boards to honor and execute the law, there has been paid in thus far during the three years of the quadrennium about $15,000, leaving $35,000 yet to be secured through the Children's Day collections, with only one year of the four remaining. While the law does not limit the completion of the endowment to a single quadrennium, it is the unanimous judgment of the General Sunday School Board and of all whom it has called into council, that an extraordinary effort should be made to raise the remaining $35,000 from the Children's Day collections of the present year.

2. This can be done beyond question if our forty-five Annual Conference Sunday school boards, our 5,000 pastors, our 15,000 superintendents and Sunday schools, our 100,000 teachers, and more than 1,000,000 Sunday school pupils will rise to the opportunity and generously co-operate with the special plan of the General Sunday school board, as it will shortly be set forth in all our Church papers, and by letters and leaflets now preparing for boards, pastors, superintendents, and Sunday school teachers. To properly carry out this plan the selection of the later June date for observing Children's Day is, in the opinion of the Board, imperative. The holding of Children's Day in the month of May, and an attempt to raise the endowment money at the same time that hundreds of our Church's most active leaders are engaged in the General Conference of 1910 at Asheville, N. C., the Board believes would be fatal to any plan it might put forth. On the other hand, the sympathy and co-operation of the General Conference with the effort to complete the endowment on the second Sunday in June, which the Sunday school board confidently hopes to secure, would go far to make the effort of the Board a success.

DOCTRINAL TRACTS NEEDED.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Early in the year at our district stewards' meeting and preachers' institute, held at Tupelo, Miss., when there were present about nineteen laymen and eight preachers, the question of having suitable tracts on the distinctive doctrines and usages of Methodism for distribution was discussed. It was the unanimous sentiment of that body that we owe it to our people to distribute tracts among them on the distinctive doctrines of our Church. In view of this the undersigned were appointed as a tract committee to read and recommend suitable tracts to our preachers and people for general distribution. We find that we have no tracts to recommend that are authorized by our Church. Of course, there are a great many good tracts and pamphlets written by Methodist preachers throughout the connection and published by the publishing house on Baptism, Apostasy, etc., but there are no short, simple tracts or leaflets gotten out exclusively by the Church itself. While those gotten out by certain of our brethren are good, yet in most cases they are more lengthy than the average person wants to read on a doctrinal subject.

This is, in no sense, a criticism on those who have written them, but the point is simply this: We need, for instance, a short, simple tract, or leaflet, of just two or three pages, on baptism, backed by Scripture—likewise on apostasy, etc. These we ought to be able to get at a very small cost. As it is, we can not get anything of the kind for less than 10 cents each, or $1 per dozen. We can get all missionary literature, Church extension literature, etc., we want, for the asking, and we don't hesitate to say that this has done a great deal toward advancing God's kingdom under Methodist banners, but we are suffering as a Church because our people are not informed on the distinctive doctrines of our Church.

While, as a Church, we are not out for controversy, yet we owe it to our people to give them in simple tract form the teaching of our Church. We therefore urge our delegates to the General Conference to use their influence in having the General Conference appoint a tract committee to prepare tracts to be published by the authority of our Church on the distinctive doctrines of the Church. In this way the General Conference would be back of the movement and we would be able to procure tracts at a small cost with stamp of the Church upon them, since this committee would act under direction of the Church. We feel that we are weak at this point, and therefore suffering. Sincerely,

ROBT. A. CLARK,

INQUIRIES PROMPTLY ANSWERED

GIVE THE WOMEN WHAT THEY ASK.

It is not the purpose of this article to enter the debate on the woman question, but there are a few things that I feel like saying.

First—I have not forgotten, though I was a young reader at that time, some of the sharp things that were said from the pulpit, through the press, and even in the General Conference of 1878 against organizing the women into a foreign missionary society.

Second—I have not forgotten some of the severe criticisms brought against the organization of the woman into a Parsonage and Home Mission Society, a few years later.

Third—I still remember reading a speech, filled with sarcasm, made in the General Conference, against the proposed deaconess movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church. This a decade or more before the General Conference of our own Church, met in Dallas, Texas, in 1902, authorizing the setting apart of suitable women for the deaconess work.

The question before the Church now is a memorial from the Woman's Home Mission Board, to the General Conference, asking the privileges of the laity for the women. I have read both sides of the question, and have great respect for the opinions of the men and women who oppose it; but must confess that it seems to me that a great deal of irrelevant matter has been dragged into the controversy. The good women are asking only that they be given the privilege of having voice in the official bodies, where now they serve in silence. The women have as much voice in the Church Conference as the men; for the Discipline provides that "all members of the Church shall be members of the Church Conference," and the secretary, who is elected annually, and who by virtue of his office is a member of the Quarterly Conference, is elected by the votes of women. The Quarterly Conference is composed, among others, of the superintendents of Sunday schools, who are members of our Church. The Bishops say that "a woman may be elected a superintendent of a Sunday school; but is not thereby a member of a Quarterly Conference." The president of a Senior Epworth League is a member of a Quarterly Conference, "if eligible."

What is meant by the word eligible? May a woman be a steward? We are told not. Is it true that there are no women of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and are of good natural and acquired ability to transact the temporal business of the Church? You will not find a man, who has observed, who will contend for a moment that there are not women who have solid piety, who love the Church, and have natural ability equal to that of man. Then why not elect a woman steward? The answer is simple. The Discipline says: "Let stewards be men." We do not find the same barrier with reference to the Senior Epworth League, still the president is not accorded the privileges of the Quarterly Conference if a woman, and yet what leaguer will deny that some of the most successful presidents have been bright, consecrated women? We must also remember that the secretary of the Church Conference may be a woman, for only in the case of a steward is the question of gender raised. It can be argued that the first stewards were men, but I think by careful reading you will find that some of the ministering saints were women. How about the trustees? Can a woman be a trustee? In Mississippi she can, in some States she cannot; but her being a trustee does not give her the right to vote with her fellow trustees in a Quarterly Conference. To put it plainly, I doubt whether there is a presiding elder in Southern Methodism, ex or active, who has not had elected or confirmed women as superintendents of Sunday schools, presidents of Epworth Leagues, and in some instances I have heard of them having women elected as stewards. At all events, am sure that some have sat by complacently, while the women paid the money they had collected during the quarter, under the eighth question.

I am of the opinion that it is not far distant when the women will be given the rights and privileges they ask for. One of the best superintendents of a Sunday school I ever knew was a woman, who reared a large family of boys and girls, all of whom are members of our Church. I knew a lady some years ago, educated, gentle, refined, a lover of home, who had a large family of children, took good care of them, and yet superintended the Sunday school, managed an Epworth League, and month to month was careful to see that the pastor had his salary collected. It isn't superintending Sunday schools that takes women away from home, it isn't attending Quarterly Conference or District Conference, but the women who neglect their homes are rarely seen in the church, except on state occasions. Other places, clubs, card parties, theater parties, etc., claim their attention. I may be wrong in my prophecy, but unless I read the signs of the times incorrectly, it will not be many years till the women get what they now ask, and our Discipline will be so re-written that the Bishops will not be called on to give an interpretation with reference to the eligibility of membership in the Quarterly or District Conferences.

A BIT OF ADVICE AND A QUERY.

By Miss Alice Cary McKimney.

There are two things that any woman can do, namely, give advice and ask questions.

My advice to all on the "Woman's Rights" question is: "Keep quiet." To brand a person as ignorant or unworthy, simply because he does not happen to think just like we do, may be "Methodist," but it is not Christian.

There is not a braver or more consecrated woman in Southern Methodism than Miss Belle Bennett, leader of the Home Mission Society and also the "Memorial Movement." And to say that "the few women who desire to have a hand in such matters are especially unfit for this work which they aspire to do," is to confess plainly "I know not the woman." And after all that this splendid, though young, branch of our Church work has accomplished under her leadership, to say "Perhaps a change of leaders in that body is what is needed, anyhow," tells the whole story of how the writer felt at the time of writing.

One of the infallible marks of Christianity is to be able to love and respect the man or woman with whom we differ. If it should be proven that Miss Bennett has made a mistake, shall we ignore all her splendid achievements because of one error? That spirit, more than anything else, has and will continue to hurt the Home Mission Society as long as it is manifest in Christ's followers. No man or woman has to sign the memorial unless he or she wants to, and "if it be of men it will come to naught, but if it be of God ye can not even harm it."

Brother, sister, pray earnestly over the matter before you rush into print. The question I desire to ask is this: If, as some of the opposers affirm that God has, in his wisdom, given women such an exalted position in higher things, why do men so jealously and zealously guard lower things?

Let us discuss this question and differ, if we must, remembering that "except ye have the spirit of Christ ye are none of His."

JESUS' CALL TO WOMEN.

Woman's sphere in the world is well defined by nature. In the home she is its mistress; in the family she is wife, mother and sister. She bears the child and has almost his complete training for the first few years of his life. She is the constant companion and counsellor of the daughter. In sickness she is nurse; in war she is inspiration; in business she is the silent partner, and in all she shares the results of every post of honor and every glorious achievement reached by father, husband and son. She shares the hope, glory and sorrow of the race. Always the inspiration of man, she takes and holds his position in the social and business world.

No normal woman ever seeks political preferment. She is as much out of place in politics as man is in a sewing society. The race has a contempt for a masculine woman or a feminine man. A hen-pecked man is no more the subject of ridicule than is his wife. She is not so much fitted for the forum as the nursery. There is still truth in the saying, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." The mothers of Moses, Samuel, Luther, Wesley and Lincoln prove the saying true. The whole Christian world honors motherhood, and men will die for the honor of wife or sister.

In the Church her position is also well defined. She is more religious than man and generally more pious. Man's political nature is strongly developed, while woman's devotional spirit is strongly developed. This also is natural. Man was created for dominion. He was commissioned to subdue the earth and have dominion over it. Woman was his helpmeet. Their work is co-operative. Man is suited to the field, the shop, commerce, and government; woman to the home, motherhood, domesticity and affection. Neither without the other is complete, nor can they exchange places.

In the proclamation of the gospel each has a work and each is the most important. Woman is to furnish the inspiration, and man the heroism. Woman, who was last at the cross and first at the sepulcher, received her commission first. The angel of the empty tomb said: "Go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead." And as they went, "Jesus met them," and said, "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." When his disciples met him at the appointed place, he said unto them: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations." Under our Lord's instruction woman was the evangel of the resurrection, man the evangelist of the new covenant. Woman was to put man to work, and to that day both her great honor and reward. There was not a woman among the apostles, and not a woman preacher in apostolic times. Yet many of them were very active workers. They were not chosen in the councils of the Church; they were to learn in silence. Paul did not "suffer" them "to speak in the Church," nor to "usurp authority over the man," but to "learn in silence," for the man was first created when the woman.

In view of the foregoing truths, we can not agree with our good women of the Home Mission Society who are asking the General Conference to give them the full rights of the laity. This, as we understand, is a request for membership in the General Conference, and that means membership in all the conferences; and that again carries with it eligibility to all the offices of the Church, from the stewardship to the bishopric. They may not mean so much by their petition, but there is where the logic of the case carries them. We do not believe that this is a normal request, nor do we believe that the wives and mothers of Southern Methodism want such relation nor such responsibility. We believe in the missionary societies; we also believe that the evangelization of the world is a man's work. We believe that nature fitted woman for the home and man for the forum. Let us not reverse the order of nature. Let the women "go tell my brethren" of His resurrection glory, and let men go teach all nations. A woman's glory should be the glory of her husband.—Editorial in the Midland Methodist.

DR. RANKIN ON THE WOMAN'S MEMORIAL.

Our good women are beginning to clamor for more power and a wider range of influence in our Church work. Some of them want to be made eligible to membership in the General Conference. No man has a higher appreciation of the honesty and ability of our good women than the writer of these lines. He has always worked in harmony with them and given them every possible encouragement. But we doubt the propriety of making the change sought by some of the leaders among our good women. It smacks too much of woman suffrage, and it runs along in the wake of the advanced thought of our Northern brethren. We have too much reverence for womanhood to see them thrust into positions where they would mix in the rough and tumble affairs of men. To put them there would bring them into antagonism with their brethren, and that respect that men now have for them would lose some of its sanctity. Therefore, we had better let well enough alone. We do not need to try too many experiments and innovations in our Church work.—Editorial in Texas Christian Advocate.

A FINE SUGGESTION.

Dear Brother Meek: I am interested and also troubled to see so much writing in our church papers under the heading, "If I Were the General Conference." It is far from reassuring to note so many proposals to remove the time limit, to drop the word "South," from the name of our Church, and to consolidate all of our missionary societies. No two seem to agree as to what ought to be done. Our societies should by all means remain as they are. I do not favor giving the women a voice and vote in the Annual and General Conferences and placing them in competition with the men. No, no; our Church has been too wonderfully blessed as its government is now constituted to be experimenting with changes. Why not let well enough alone, and continue to direct our energies toward bringing the world to Christ? Some one should sing to those so clamorous for change "The Old-Time Religion," and follow that with "Tis the Old Ship of Zion; she has landed many thousands and can land as many more."

MILTON'S REPLY.

This was originally related by his great-great-grandfather in 1762.

King Charles II. had the curiosity to see Milton, and in the course of conversation said to him:

"God hath punished you for your malice, and so forth, to my father by taking away your sight."

"Aye," Milton is said to have replied, "but before I lost my eyes, he lost his head."—Youth's Companion.

CONFOUNDING AN ENEMY.

It is our bounden duty to do our best to defeat the purposes of those who would injure us by their hostility. But we sometimes overlook the best way of accomplishing this. Paul gave a sure recipe when he recommended, to Titus, "In all things showing thyself an ensample of good works." * * * that can not be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us." Nothing disappoints and confounds our enemies more completely than our own quiet, persistent, unanswering and unanswerable right living. And it is a weapon of defense that is within the reach of us all.—S. S. Times.

THE WORK THAT WINS.

The story is told of two boys, who were preparing a lesson in Latin. It was the first time they had studied together. They read it through with considerable care; then one grabbed his hat to leave for some other duties. The other stopped him by saying they must read the lesson again. Though expressing some surprise, the first yielded, and they went through the text carefully with grammar, notes, and lexicon.

Then the visitor rose the second time, and reached for his hat, but the other replied that they must go over the lesson a third time. Though somewhat impatient, the companion remained to put the finishing touches on the lesson, saying that he did not understand, before, why the studious young man always received an "A" grade.

"We must go through the lesson once to learn it," was the reply; "we must read it a second time to know that we have learned it, and the third time to know that we will not forget it."

The rule of this boy is the rule of life, that is, the kind of life that is called success. The hop, skip and jump method may be all right, if the character of the work and the capability of the student permit it; but that is usually at the expense of thoroughness, and at the still greater expense of an honest reputation for doing things as they ought to be done.

There is no rule which demands going over a thing a third time, but there is a rule for the mastery of anything that is undertaken. It may at times be very discouraging, and require persistence and repetition, but the acquirement is worth the cost, for a thing well done is a joy to one's self as well as to others.—Parish and Home.

HELEN'S OFFENSE.

Helen Easty came home at noon from school one day in great excitement, and as she sat down to eat her lunch she cried, "Mamma, I want to ask you something."

"Say on, daughter," replied the mother with a kind smile.

"Well, mamma," proceeded Helen, still with excitement unabated, "if a person who has been very kind to you wanted you to do something wrong to oblige them, what would you do?"

"I would refuse to do the wrong act, Helen, and take the consequences, whatever they might be," returned the mother, firmly.

"Well, suppose the person would never speak to you again, mamma, what then?" and the little girl looked very anxious.

"Even then I should have to do right, but explain yourself, my child," and Mrs. Easty gently stroked her little daughter's head as she waited for an answer.

"Well, mamma, Garnett Sherry isn't good in arithmetic at all and to-day he insisted on my giving him my paper to copy answers and all, and when I would not do it he declared that he would never speak to me again, and he won't, mamma."

"Do right, my child, whatever it costs," Mrs. Easty said once more, and with these words ringing in her ears Helen went back to school.

And now commenced her troubles. True to his word, Garnett would not speak to his former friend, which grieved her greatly. And this went on for several weeks and was, oh, so hard to bear. Soon the rumor went through the school that Garnett had lost his little pet dog. Oh, how sorry Helen was and how she did long to find the creature and restore it to its owner.

She didn't dare to hope that her wish would be gratified, however, till the dog had been gone two long weeks and had been almost given up as lost.

Then one day Helen and a little mate of hers were taking a walk in a (to them) strange part of the little town in which they lived, when they espied in a yard a small dog who seemed just frantic to get to them. There was a high fence around the yard, the gate was locked, so that the animal could not get out. "Oh, it's Flirt, it's Flirt," cried Helen, eagerly. And she called "Flirt, Flirt," which made the dog still more frantic. The children tried the gate, but could not open it. Then they rang the door bell, but no one seemed to be at home.

"Oh," cried Helen, "if we could only get at Flirt, he would be sure to follow us. What can we do?"

"I tell you what we can do," ejaculated Flossie. "We can dig with sticks under the gate and he can crawl through."

And the two determined little girls sat down on the ground to try to liberate the imprisoned dog. The ground and the work were hard and little progress was made.

"Oh, dear," cried Helen, "we will have to give it up," and she began to cry.

At this a little girl who had watched the two closely said to them, "Say, there's a hole in the side fence and I'll get him into our yard and then he can get out easy." And this was quickly done and Helen soon had Flirt in her arms. The little stranger remarked as she delivered him up, "I knew Jack Reuther stole that dog. He's always stealing something."

The overjoyed children hastened with the animal to Garnett, whose anger now vanished like a cloud. And soon Helen and Garnett were better friends than ever.—Selected.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Following is the annual report of Mrs. Crow Girard, corresponding secretary, Louisiana Conference, W. H. M. S.

March 1, 1910, marks the close of the best year of home mission work in Louisiana since its beginning in 1892. The Woman's Board has been very generous, and together with our own efforts $1275 has been given to parsonages in Louisiana this year, besides a loan of $3,000 offered to one of the pastors in New Orleans as soon as he can arrange to buy a parsonage. At Houma, in the French Mission District, the Woman's Board gave $500 and the Louisiana Conference Society gave $400 for the purchase of a parsonage. The other points to which our conference society has contributed are as follows: Eden, $100; St. Francisville, $100; Baker, $25; Gueydan, $75; Bernice, $75 (promised, but not yet paid).

In membership, we have gained 469, making a total of 2,449. Twenty-seven new auxiliaries and five brigades mark the activity of our district secretaries and conference third vice-president, and in some districts of the presiding elders.

The ministers are our good friends, and we count ourselves fortunate, indeed, to have as presiding elders men who have co-operated so earnestly with us in our endeavor to spread the work.

Auxiliaries organized since March 1, 1910, are as follows:

Alexandria District—Columbia, Le-Compte, Trout,

Eden, Montgomery, Natchitoches, Melville, Provencal.

Baton Rouge District—Wilson, Franklinton, Bogalusa.

Lafayette District—Lake Arthur, Lafayette Y. P., Monroe District—Waterproof Y. P., Monroe, Gilbert, West Monroe.

New Orleans District—Slidell, Ad., Madisonville, Ruston District—Hodge, Plain Dealing, Minden Y. P., Springhill.

Shreveport District—Stonewall, Grand Cane, Keithville.

Brigades—Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, Eden, Le-Compte, Trout, Crowley, Alexandria, Natchitoches.

Some one said—wisely said: "In religious circles the workers are the givers." Thereupon a religious weekly added: "The readers are the workers." All of which is true. Do you see the point, brother pastor? If you expect your people to be liberal in gifts, they must be a people zealous in good works; if you expect them to be both workers and givers, they must be readers of periodicals which bring them information about the progress of the kingdom, which show what needs to be done and how to do it. The Church paper is not merely an assistant; it is an essential.—Cumberland Presbyterian.

THE RESURRECTION.

The standing miracle of Christianity is its tremendous vitality. It had a small beginning, as men count beginnings, and almost from the very start it encountered the bitterest opposition. And to crown all, it suffered the ignominious death of its Founder.

But it overcame all its early opposition and the tragedy of the Cross, and it persists to-day as the mightiest force in a great world civilization. It is wonderful—it is marvelous—it is miraculous. The fact itself admits of no question. It is seen and recognized of all.

No one thing will explain this tremendous vital energy of Christianity. Our religion is too rich and full to hinge upon one fact or one accomplishment. It has touched life at every point and blessed it from every angle. Life without Christianity would be worse than dreary desolation—it would be the despair of death.

It is from death that Christ has delivered us. That is a wonderful saying of his, "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." Death is the dreaddest thing that befalls man. It is the great shadow that constantly throws itself across his way. In it is the unutterable fear of the black abyss, and the unbearable chill of a sunless world. Humanity stands aghast at the brink of the grave.

But that is humanity without Christ. To the man without Christ, death is the most real thing in the world. To the Christian, death is only an incident in the course of an eternal and increasingly glorious life. To the Christian, Christ is the most real thing in the world, and all else finds its explanation in him.

The resurrection is our sure hope. As an attested fact, it takes place with any in the realm of history. "He is risen"—the words and the fact are synonymous. We have the testimony of eye-witnesses, but we do not need it. A dead Christ in an Eastern tomb could never explain the living Christ in the world to-day. We ourselves are witnesses of these things, and our surest testimony is our own experience.

It is a vital Christ that makes a vital Christianity. The resurrection is the pledge of an ever-living Christ, and the promise of eternal life to all who believe on him. Let this message of hope be proclaimed throughout the world this Easter-time, and through all time: "He is risen!"

A GREAT CONVENTION.

The Louisiana Sunday School Convention, which was in session in this city from Tuesday afternoon to Thursday night of last week, was a marked success. A large number of delegates were in attendance, and great audiences greeted the speakers at nearly every service. The music was under the direction of Mr. E. O. Excell, who, as a chorister, is second to none in the nation. Many of the ad-resses were of a high order, particularly those of Mr. Marion Lawrance and Dr. F. B. Meyer. The latter, though apparently somewhat feeble, spoke with extraordinary clearness and incisiveness. He is a man of unusual simplicity and deep spirituality. Evidently he lives close to the Master and concerns himself little with the skeptical speculations of the so-called scholars of our time. To hear a man of such conspicuous ability, with a faith so all-embracing and childlike, is refreshing and encouraging. Indeed, we are not sure that we have ever listened to another minister whose utterances were so spiritual in every note.

On Wednesday afternoon a Mississippi session of the Convention was held, with Mr. D. E. Wilson, president of the Association of that State, in the chair. Governor E. F. Noel and Dr. W. T. Lowry, who were scheduled to be present, did not arrive, but admirable speeches were delivered by Rev. W. Fred Long, Mr. Landrum P. Leavell and Mr. R. M. Weaver. The latter gave a graphic and interesting account of the origin, growth and methods of work of the Young Men's Bible Class of Corinth, Miss., which numbers two hundred, and of which Miss Elizabeth S. Kilpatrick is the teacher. A large picture of this class was exhibited on the platform, and attracted much attention. The Convention adjourned Thursday night with the enthusiasm at high tide. The remarkable success of the occasion was largely due to the tireless energy and industry of the faithful State secretary, Mr. Thomas V. Ellzey. The next session will be held at Monroe.

THE REV. W. B. LEWIS CALLED HOME.

Rev. W. B. Lewis, pastor of the Methodist Church at Canton, Miss., and one of the leading members of the Mississippi Conference, died at the New Orleans Sanitarium in this city on Thursday, March 17. He had been in failing health for some weeks, and came to New Orleans for medical treatment on the 8th inst. Though quite feeble and evidently in a serious condition, it was at first hoped that it might be possible to relieve him without a resort to surgery, but it soon became apparent that the only hope for him lay in an operation. This he underwent on Wednesday morning, the 16th, when it was discovered that his condition was even worse than had been anticipated, and he grew steadily weaker until he passed away on the afternoon of the day following. His wife, sons (Rev. B. E. Lewis and Rev. W. H. Lewis), and other members of the family were with him, and everything that medical skill and loving hands could do was done, but nothing could avert the inevitable end. Brother Lewis was conscious to within a few minutes of his departure, and it is scarcely needful to say that he faced death calmly and confidently, without the slightest manifestation of apprehension. Quietly, serenely, without apparent pain or struggle, like a weary, worn pilgrim at nightfall, he went to sleep.

"Sure the last end
Of the good man is peace! How calm his exit!
Night dews fall not more gently to the ground,
Nor weary, worn-out winds expire so soft."

The deceased was in the sixty-ninth year of his age, and had been active in the itinerancy since 1858. For more than half a century he had gone in and out among his brethren, and his life and ministerial service had been absolutely above reproach and in the highest sense exemplary. A saintlier and more symmetrical character, we have never known. Clean in speech, pure in thought and conduct, deeply spiritual, and thoroughly unselfish and consecrated, he was frequently referred to as the Saint John of his Conference, an appellation which he well deserved. No one could come into his presence without being made better by contact with him. He had the mind of the Master, and the self-control and gentleness that mark the perfect man. To know him was to love him, and perhaps no minister ever wrought in Mississippi who endeared himself more to the people whom he served.

As a preacher, he ranked with the best. He filled the office of presiding elder with a high degree of efficiency, and served with marked acceptability many of the leading stations of his Conference. In every field to which he was assigned, he proved himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. No interest of the Church ever suffered in his hands. His sermons were spiritual, searching, helpful, and uplifting. While teaching at Wesson, Miss., more than twenty years ago, we heard him deliver a stirring discourse, which has lingered with us ever since. Then it was, before we had attained to our majority, we first learned to know him, and the favorable impression received at that time was developed by frequent meetings in subsequent years into a feeling of genuine admiration. Brother Lewis had the perfect confidence and highest esteem of his brethren in the ministry, who ever delighted to honor him. For many years he was a member of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and at the time of his death was a trustee of Millsaps College and president of the Church Extension Board of the Mississippi Conference.

Having served his day and generation well; having "fought a good fight and kept the faith," with his armor yet on and gleaming bright, the stainless soldier has left the field of conflict for the eternal home of peace and the Master's rich reward. He will be missed in the struggling ranks below, but we shall see him again in the shining ranks above. To the sorrowing loved ones, we extend deepest sympathy, and pray that the voice and arms divine may comfort and sustain them.

THE WOMAN'S MEMORIAL.

The woman's memorial, as it will be presented to the General Conference, is as follows:

To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1910, from the Woman's Board of Home Missions in Annual Session at Savannah, Ga.:

Dear Fathers and Brethren—Believing that the fullness of God's time has come for the more than half a million women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to have larger freedom in the ever-widening work of the Church, that they may help to hasten more surely and speedily the coming of the kingdom of God, we respectfully petition that, as an act of justice, you will, at this session of the General Conference, take the needed action to secure for the women of the Church the full rights and privileges of the laity.

Thus it will be seen "that the full rights and privileges of the laity" are asked for, without any restriction whatever. This does not mean simply that they desire the right to be stewards and members of the Quarterly Conference and the District Conference, but it also involves the right to seats in the Annual and General Conferences and to any position in the Church, connectional or otherwise, which a layman may hold. We know this to be the correct interpretation because we have seen statements to this effect from the leaders who framed the memorial. If any doubt the correctness of our representation, let them write to Miss Bennett or Miss Helm and make enquiry. We are moved to write these words of explanation because we are informed that petitions are being circulated in many congregations, and we desire that those who are asked to sign them shall fully understand what is involved in the pending issue.

PERSONAL.

Glowing accounts reach this office of the condition of the Sardis District, under its efficient presiding elder, Rev. W. M. Young.

Rev. John Sholars is having good congregations at Patterson, La., and has about paid in full the assessment for foreign missions on his charge.

We thank Brother J. B. Jones for his kindly invitation to look in on the sessions of the Jackson District Conference. He reports that "things are moving with some degree of satisfaction in these parts."

Rev. W. L. Blackwell requests us to state that the first Quarterly Conference of the Hermanville charge will be held at Hermanville March 29, instead of the 30th. Those concerned will please take note and govern themselves accordingly.

We highly appreciate the kindly words of Rev. W. D. Wendel, of Hernando, Miss. He is in fine health, and enthusiastically looking after the interests of his charge and the Advocate.

Among our friends who remembered us with five or more subscriptions in the last few days were Revs. H. C. Edmonson of Marietta, Miss.; Rev. Thos. E. Yancey of Nettleton, Miss.; Rev. W. L. Broom of Oxford, Miss.; and Rev. W. F. Rogers of West, Miss.

We call special attention to Brother Lewis' ap-deal concerning the payment of amounts due the endowment fund of Millsaps College, which appears elsewhere. Those concerned should read what he says and do as he directs at the earliest day possible.

In a personal communication to the editor, Mrs. F. Calloway, of Oxford, Miss., states: "Our church work here is doing very nicely. Brother Park will hold a meeting early in April with Rev. Joe Ramsey to assist him. We are praying for a great awakening at that time."

Rev. M. L. White is getting on finely at Prentiss, Miss., and the people are looking forward with pleasure to the coming session of the Brookhaven District Conference, which will be warmly welcomed by the church of that place. Rev. J. T. Leggett, the presiding elder, is in high favor.

We are grateful to Rev. J. A. Biddle, of Pleasant Hill, Miss., for his continued service in the interest of his church paper. As might be expected, other interests are also prospering; he has a good Sunday school and prayer meeting, and is making advancement on all lines.

This is a composite number of the Advocate. The editor has been not a little indisposed with tonsillitis and fever, and much of the work of bringing out the paper has been done by kind friends in and out of the office. To them must be attributed whatever improvement is discernible.

Rev. John Park, pastor of our church in Oxford, Miss., had Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D.D., with him in a union missionary service for that city on last Sunday. The letter informing us of his plans for the great day was seasoned for us by an acceptable club of subscribers to the Advocate.

We learn with regret of the death of Mrs. Laura Price, widow of the late Rev. Thos. Price, of the Mississippi Conference. We have no particulars at the time of this writing. This death leaves a significant home vacant, which will be placed at the disposal of some one who is on the "roll of honor."

On the 10th day of March Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of the Smithville charge, was married to Miss May E. Wax of Smithville, Miss., by Rev. B. O. Brown. The wedding took place in the home of the bride's parents. We wish this happy couple every joy, and pray that heaven's richest blessings may rest upon them.

The treasurer of the North Mississippi Conference Board of Missions writes that the collections for the first quarter have not reached his expectations. As early collections nearly always mean full collections, we trust that the brethren will be moved to action by the figures he presents in his quarterly report.

There is talk of remodeling the present church or constructing a new one at Starkville, Miss. There is no choicer congregation than this in the Magnolia State, and by every token a house of worship with better appointments should be provided. We wish Brother Brogan speedy success in this commendable undertaking.

Among the callers at the Advocate office last week were that faithful layman, Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian, Miss., and his accomplished wife who graces and adds charm to every circle that she enters. They were accompanied by the Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of Biloxi, whom we were also much pleased to see.

Last week, brought to the city by the Annual Convention of the State Sunday School Association of Louisiana, many preachers from Mississippi and Louisiana called at this office. We thank them for remembering the Advocate, and trust that whenever our preachers are in the city, they will make the Advocate office their headquarters.

Rev. J. W. Raper continues to swell the number of readers in and around Byhalia, Miss. He has been sending in names so rapidly that we failed to make acknowledgment of one nice list which he recently forwarded. Displaying activity in work is nothing new for Brother Raper. It has long been his habit to stir things where he goes.

Rev. T. E. Gregory, of the North Carrollton charge, makes a claim which we would not dispute. He avers that he has the best circuit in the North Mississippi Conference. He states that everything goes well with him on his work, and we know that it is going well with the Advocate, for he is beginning to send us clubs of subscribers from his work.

A friendly man makes friends. Judged by this standard, Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Coldwater, must be very friendly, for some of his friends provided him with a trip to the Laymen's Meeting at Dallas, and he says that he had a pleasant and profitable time. We learn from him that Rev. S. E. Pope has been with Brother Howell in a meeting at Robinsonville.

Myrtle, Miss., is said to be a good place to work by its efficient pastor, Rev. W. W. Jones. He is getting a good start and hopes for a "good year." Some progress has been made, and more is talked of which will probably tell later. Brother Jones remarks: "I am never asked, on returning from a district conference, 'Did they send you back to us?' by a man that takes his church paper."

The pastor, Rev. W. H. Saunders, has favored us with a copy of the new directory of the South Washington Street Church of Vicksburg. It is well arranged and has been issued in admirable form. It shows that the congregation is well worked and systematically organized for work. With so capable and aggressive a leader, we shall be surprised if substantial progress is not made by this flock during the year.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor of Louisiana Avenue Church, this city, has so far recovered from his illness as to be able to go about. On last Monday Brother Holmes and family left for Franklin, La., where he will spend a few days with Rev. C. C. Weir, the genial pastor of the congregation at that place. It is hoped that our good brother will recuperate quickly, and be able to return soon to his loved employ.

Rev. D. M. Floyd, pastor of Lomas charge, reports a fine quarterly conference and a great sermon by the presiding elder, Rev. B. P. Lacy. The pastor and people are working and praying for a revival this summer. The quarterly conference took one very practical step to this end—they raised their pastor's salary one hundred dollars, thus making it easier for him to devote all his time to the great work of the ministry.

Rev. J. J. Garner, of Shannon, Miss., in sending in a goodly number of subscriptions, speaks many kind words, and makes a promise to which we shall feel like holding him. He promises to work and pray for the Advocate and its editor. Every reason that causes the preacher in the pulpit to desire that men should pray for him and the Church, applies with added force to the Advocate, which ministers to so large a congregation.

We appreciate words of encouragement from Rev. J. H. Mitchell, who seconds his own motion by adding thereto an attractive club of subscriptions. He is having fine congregations and a good Sunday school in Water Valley, Miss. His women do not favor the move being made by the leaders of the W. H. M. S. The pastor's salary has been increased $150, making it now $1650. Since Conference this congregation has paid a debt of about $2000.

Rev. C. V. Brethaupt writes that, as a result of the meeting recently conducted in Hound by Rev. W. G. Harbin, he will have a membership of forty. This is a great need, and some man, or men of means, should come to the assistance of this church with funds enough to enable them to build a good church on the ground they have already purchased. As all our readers know, Hound is in the French Mission of the Louisiana Conference.

Our pastor at Hamburg, Miss., Rev. W. F. Baggett, and Miss Martis Carraway, of Auburn, Miss., were married on Feb. 13 by the presiding elder of the district, Dr. H. W. Featherston. Though somewhat late, we feel sure that our congratulations are still in order. We hope that the lives of this worthy couple may be long and useful, and that at the last the Master may crown them with his commendation when they shall come to stand before his throne.

Rev. Henry F. Carley, of the Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, was absent from the city last week, attending the marriage of his brother, Mr. C. R. Carley, of Weatherby, Miss., to Miss Ona Weatherby. He assisted in the ceremony, which was performed by the father of the groom, Rev. L. Carley, of New Augusta, Miss. Brother Carley is holding a series of special services this (Passion) week, and a live interest is being shown by the members of his congregation.

In glancing over recent receipts, we note the fact that Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey, of Land Lake, Miss., has sent us fourteen subscribers to the Advocate, a fact that we highly appreciate. We learn that he has received thirty members into the church. As is but just to those that do well, his people have been providing for his comfort and pleasure. They have painted the parsonage, put new matting on the floors and papered the walls, besides other improvements. He thinks that he has the prettiest parlor in Land Lake.

Sister J. C. Lowe writes us from Monteagle, Tenn.: "Mr. Lowe left a good library of valuable books (standard authors of our church) besides a fine collection of books on baptism, etc. Will you please call attention to this in your paper? Young men might be glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to get valuable books at half-price. I have them here, and shall probably be here all summer—until June, anyway. It would be well for young men collecting a library to correspond with Sister Lowe."

We quote from a recent appreciated communication from an honored sister of Shreveport, La.: "Many thanks for the splendid Epworth League lesson. Please let me say, I am not a suppliant. I have more privileges than I have time and strength to execute. When our main object is souls for Christ, we will not care for long write-ups of time. We will be so busy following. The name, creed and rules of our Church are good enough for me. I have been a member of the Quiet Hour League so long that I believe in that there is a cure for all unrest."

In the Louisiana Sunday School Convention held last week in this city, Rev. F. B. Meyer, the president of the World's Sunday School Association, was a featured figure. His intense spirituality, combined with the practicality of his suggestions, made him one of the most helpful speakers in a brilliant conference. Addressing the pastors, he spoke on the relation of the pastor to the children. To each pastor there was a revelation of lost opportunities, and clearly pointed suggestions as to better ways of reaching and caring for the young. A resolution of thanks was tendered Dr. Meyer by a rising vote of the pastors.

We regret exceedingly to chronicle the sudden death of Mr. D. P. Haggard, of Memphis, Tenn., which occurred on a street car in this city on the evening of the 21st. He was an employee of the Lily Book Drug Company, of Memphis, with headquarters in New Orleans. He was a devoted Methodist, a man of good character, and an agreeable, obliging gentleman. He was often in the Advocate office, frequently attended the preachers' meeting at the First Methodist Church, and took an interest in all the larger affairs of the connection. He was an old friend of Dr. S. H. Werlein, who took his body in charge and notified the relatives of his unexpected death. The deceased is survived by an invalid wife and two children, to whom the Advocate extends profoundest sympathy.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas V. Elzey will regret to learn of the death of their little son, Thomas V., Jr., which occurred suddenly on the 21st inst. The little fellow had unexpectedly had a serious fainting spell, from which he was revived with some difficulty on Saturday morning, but Sunday morning, just after breakfast, without any apparent warning, he again swooned away, and all that tender hands and medical skill could do were powerless to resuscitate him, and he soon fell asleep in Jesus. That his bright young life should go out so soon is, indeed, sad and inexplicable, but we must believe in the goodness of God and his overruling providence. May the heavenly Father comfort the bereaved parents, and gently lay his healing hand upon their bleeding hearts.

An organization in New Orleans, which deserves hearty commendation is the Inter-denominational Missionary Union. It was organized in 1909, and has brought together in Christian work representatives of a number of the Protestant churches of the city. It is active in evangelical, prison and orphanage work, and conducts religious services in a number of places where the gospel would not otherwise be heard. The following are the executive committee of the organization: Mr. John Schroedel, Mr. A. L. Dayton, Mr. J. M. Harfe, Mrs. M. Schroedel, Mrs. F. McDonald, Miss Laura A. Burton and Mr. J. E. Hollingsworth. The Union hopes ultimately to procure a $100,000 building for headquarters, and in which also an orphanage will be maintained. The membership ought to be largely increased, and a work so urgently needed should at the earliest date possible be thoroughly established and speedily extended. From a folder which has come to our hand, we quote the following: "The Travelers' Aid Association is doing excellent work in intercepting young girls lured to this city through the white slave traffic, and in helping other unfortunate ones; but when they come across girls of Protestant families, they find no place where they can place them, even temporarily, which is a sad commentary on the Protestant population of our city. Provision can and will be made for all such in the Home to be erected by the Missionary Union." Let our people generally rally to this worthy organization, amply equip it for service, and make it such a force for righteousness in this great mart of commerce as it deserves to be.

A BROTHER'S TRIBUTE.

Dear Brother Meek:
The last one of my five brothers has passed away, and I feel lonely—so lonely.
We were converted in May, 1855. We began exercising our gifts and graces, under the leadership of our father, Quincea Lewis, soon after our adoption into the family of God. For more than fifty-one years we belonged to the Mississippi Conference.
He was a good boy, a noble young man, a splendid exemplar of God's Word—a grand old man—hence he died right.

"Mark the perfect man, behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."—11. P. LEWIS, SR.

TO THE LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

Dear Brethren, I hope that you will not neglect to take your Easter offering for the Orphanage. We are depending on you for this help. This is a time when you can show your friendship for this great cause. Those needy children are looking to you. Their home is in jeopardy. We hope that if we can meet this need, and the other immediate obligations from this effort, that we will have passed one of the most difficult obstacles before us—and we can manage some way to meet the others. Help us now, brethren. Send your collections at once to me at Ruston. The note is due April 1st. Sincerely,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

LESSON FOR MARCH 27.
(Easter Lesson.)

I.Introduction.

To-day is Easter, the anniversary of that great event upon which every Christian's assurance of eternal life is based: the glorious Resurrection of our Lord.

But the Resurrection is antedated by and grows out of the Atonement. It is by the Atonement that every one who trusts and obeys Christ is saved. It is by the Resurrection that every one thus saved becomes an heir to eternal life.

Therefore the two, being so closely related, are correlated in our lesson for to-day.

II.The Teaching.

(A) Romans vi, 8-11.

Romans is a doctrinal book of very profound teaching, but without entering into any critical exegesis of the text and context, let us try to learn its simple teaching of truth for our individual lives.

(1) By the abundant grace of God Christ came in the flesh to destroy the works of the devil (I. John iii, 8) and to save his people from their sins. (Matt. i, 21.)

(2) To accomplish this great work he laid down his life for us—died for us on account of our sins. (Rom. v, 6.)

(3) Therefore, in order for us to receive the merits of his death and to be saved, it is necessary for us to die to sin. (Rom. vi, 2; Gal. ii, 20.)

(B) Colossians iii, 3-4.

Not only did Christ die, but he arose to a new, a glorified life. So, likewise the great benign plan of redemption involves for us not only death to sin, but newness of life through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Becoming dead to sin, we become alive to God here and now, in this present life. Our religion is a vital religion; not only does the Resurrection mean to every saved soul eternal life beyond the grave, but it also means present union with the resurrected Christ: the life "that is hid with Christ in God" while we are here on earth. It means not only a physical resurrection after death, but also a spiritual resurrection here and now, and this is especially the resurrection spoken of in our second reference—a mystical resurrection.

III.

The Practical Application to the Individual Life.

(a) If you have died to sin and entered into this spiritually resurrected life, then live accordingly. "Seek those things that are above"—not only in an eschatological sense, the things in heaven when we die, but the heavenly things upon earth. Seek the pure, the true, the noble, the soul-inspiring, the exalting, every day and in every duty of life, and then there will be no commonplace, no drudgery, but life will be sublime.

(b) Not only this, but we will be conscious of the divine presence and fellowship and help. (I. John i, 3; I. Cor. x, 12.)

Illustration:—Once, when Bishop Thoburn was sailing across the ocean on a missionary journey, he was thrown in company with a feared man who was a skeptic. The gentleman said to the Bishop one day, "I think that Jesus Christ was a great man, but to think that he arose from the dead would do violence to my intellectual integrity." The Bishop smiled and said, "I know that he arose from the dead; for I have talked with him this morning."

(c) It is the most joyful and peaceful and satisfactory way. The only way to become alive to the better things is to die to the lower things. The only way to receive the real riches of heart and soul is to die to selfishness and to become altruistic.

(d) It is the way of Christ-likeness.

and growth for heaven. As an illustration, get some one to briefly tell the story of Hawthorne's "Stone Face." Just as the boy, by studying the benign features of the great face and thinking noble thoughts and doing good deeds, unconsciously became like the face, so we, by "walking in the light as He is in the light," and by seeking those things that are above, may unconsciously become more like our Lord. (I. John iii, 1-3.)

IV.Personal Questions.

Shall we not ask ourselves these questions and seek to answer them aright?

First—Have I, by the grace of God, become dead to sin and alive unto God?

Second—Am I diligently and joyfully seeking those things that are above?

Third—Is Christ to me, the resurrected, living Savior to-day?

Fourth—Does this glorious Easter signify to my own soul present resurrection from the death of sin and the future resurrection from the death of the body?

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH BYRD, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Thomas, was born at Quitman, Miss., August 6, 1857, and died at Meridian, Miss., December 13, 1909. She was married to Mr. William W. Byrd November 6, 1874. To them were born fourteen children, twelve of whom still live to bless her memory—seven sons and five daughters. Of these children four were not permitted the joy of looking into mother's face, but they knew her voice and the gentle touch of her hand, and shared with the others the inspiration of her noble life. While still a mere child Sister Byrd was happily converted and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which she faithfully served during the remaining years of her life. During the later years she suffered intensely and almost constantly, but with true Christian fortitude and resignation. Sister Byrd was a devoted wife, a faithful, loving mother, a true friend, a consistent Christian. She knew her Lord and loved him. The ministry of suffering was full, and her soul responded to it with constantly increasing faith. When the Lord called her home she was ready, and her death hour was one of glorious triumph. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

WM. H. LA PRADÉ.

RICHARDSON—Judge W. L. Richardson was born in Livingston Parish in 1831; died at his home near Colfax February 27, 1910; age 78 years, 2 months and 8 days. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Christian in 1879. He has long been a member of the M. E. Church, South; was an official member for twenty-nine or more years, and often president of the Board of Stewards. He was one of the charter members of our Church at Colfax; was one of the strongest contributors in building our church at this place, and presented it for dedication. Judge Richardson has been a potent factor for all that makes for good for these many years. His strong, conservative hand was felt in reconstruction days. He loved his Church and stood for its interests. His experience was clear. He was sick only a few hours. His end was peaceful. There was a large crowd of the best citizens in attendance upon his funeral, attesting to the popular esteem in which he was held. We shall miss him, but may his mantle of love and devotion to all that was good fall upon his sons. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

H. W. LEDBETTER.

MRS. CLARISSA MARY McLEAN (nee Wildblood) was born in Washington Parish on the 16th of August, 1844. She was married to W. A. Skinner March 1, 1864, to J. W. McLean, April 16, 1884, and died December 4, 1909. She had no children of her own, but was a mother truly to the children of her last husband. The writer had been visiting her home for the past eighteen years; had been her pastor for the past four, and was very intimate with them before he knew her husband's children were not her own; each was so kind and affectionate to the other. Her parents lived with her in their latter days, and while in her home she was as obedient to them as though still a child in their home. Sister McLean joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and ever remained a faithful and consistent member. As long as she was able to attend she was a zealous worker, but for several years past she has been so afflicted she was unable to attend. She regretted this so much, yet took this, as she did all her afflictions, as gently it seems to me as any one could. She was a great sufferer for years, yet stood it with Christian fortitude and calmness, her heroic struggle for health always meeting with defeat, and the Christ-like submission to her lot made a great impression on this writer. I used to love to go there and talk to her; she was so cheerful and full of encouragement; so patient and kind it was a benediction to be with her. When news of her death was brought to us, Mrs. Haney said: "You have lost a true friend. I thought yes, but heaven has gained a very bright jewel. Truly, a sister in Israel has fallen; but her trials, burdens, sorrows, afflictions, and sufferings are over, and now, as the poet says, 'She sits and sings, triumphing in Paradise.' May the tender shepherd take special care of the husband so bereaved and lonely, and may the Holy Spirit do his perfect work in the hearts of each and all of the children and make them a united family around the great white throne."

J. P. HANEY.

MRS. MARY ANNIE LOCK, widow of the lamented Rev. John R. Lock, a local preacher in the Methodist Church, passed to her reward from her home near Kilmichael, Miss. She was born near Charlotte, N. C., December 11, 1836, and died February 6, 1910. When she was six years of age her father, William Flowers, moved to Mississippi and settled in Choctaw, now Montgomery County, near Kilmichael, where she lived and died honored and loved by all who knew her. She was a member of one of the oldest and most honored families in the county. Her father's was among the first families that formed the old Friendship Church, and he and his children were leaders in the social and religious life in the community. They were all staunch Methodists, brought up in the doctrine and polity of that faith. Sister Lock joined the Church at Friendship in her fourteenth year, and ever remained a faithful and devoted Christian to the day of her death. At the death of her husband, twenty-seven years ago, she was left with the care of ten children, all of whom are still living, except one. In these years of care and responsibility her strength and fortitude was shown in a remarkable degree in her patience and heroic effort in bringing the children up for God and the Church. The writer knew her for more than thirty years. She was the preacher's best friend and sympathizer, always giving the best she had to him for his work's sake. Of all her father's family she was the last to go. The going was peaceful and triumphant, for her feet were upon the Rock. She was a woman of strong convictions, outspoken for principle, uncompromising, staunch and zealous for the right, but always modest and womanly in her bearing. She was a spiritually minded woman, and hence a devout worshiper, a lover of song, taking part in prayer and testimony, and her witness for Christ was strong, clear and sweeter as the years went by. Because her experience was deep and rich, her presence was always a benediction, and her hand a blessing. Her generous kindnesses were instant, personal, unceasing and untold. May her children imitate her example and perpetuate her beautiful virtues and at last find a place in mother's better and happier home! It was her constant prayer through life that her children might be true to God and the Church. God grant that not one of them may disappoint her.

EFFECTS OF OPIUM AND COCAINE
 When improperly used, opium and cocaine are two of the most powerful life destroying drugs in the world. But even worse is the slave these drugs produce on those who acquire the habit of using them, first in small and subsequently in gradually increased doses. It is practically impossible for anyone, even with an iron will, to break such bondage. There is a man over in Atlanta, Ga., however—Dr. B.
 M. Woolley—who for over thirty years has made a business of curing such drug habits. Unlike many specialists he treats these habits as diseases and claims that in most cases the sufferers are not directly responsible for their condition. His success in effecting cures is something phenomenal—so remarkable, in fact, as to call forth favorable editorial comment from the newspapers. Address him at No. 21-F, Victor Sanitarium, Atlanta, Ga.

Pray not for luxurious lives, but son oak, sprains, etc., should be promptly treated with "Gray's Oint-

Tidings from the Field

Newton, Miss.:

We closed on Wednesday night, the 16th inst., what is said to be by the oldest members of our church the best revival ever held in Newton. Brother D. E. Kelly, our Conference Evangelist, preached two sermons a day for eleven days, with the exception of the last Sunday, when he preached a special sermon to men in the afternoon. It was a great meeting in many respects. God was with us from the first service. The preaching was in the power of the Spirit and the people came by hundreds—our church could not seat the people. Some of the visible results are forty-seven applications for membership; several family altars erected and between seventy-five and 100 conversions and reclamations. The meeting was a blessing to the other church as many of the members testified at the last service. The Lord has blessed us, whereof we are glad. Our congregations are fine. Our Sunday school well organized and doing good work and the women's societies are in a flourishing condition. We have a kind people to serve and enjoy the fellowship of the beloved. Brother O'Neal, as our close neighbor. My heart is sad over the death of my great uncle, Rev. W. B. Lewis. Surely a good man has gone up the shining way to God. L. F. Alfred.

Rural Hill, Miss.:

At the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona I was sent to the Rural Hill charge as a supply. I arrived on the first of January, and took the work up where my predecessor, Rev. A. M. Commander, left off. I believe that I have as good and loyal a people to serve as can be found anywhere. The total membership of the charge is 545. The people have thrown open their hearts and homes, and given me a cordial welcome. This is my first year in the pastorate, and it is needless to say that I am going to do my very best. I am working, planning and praying for, and expecting, a sweeping revival at every church. God grant that it may be so. T. L. Oakes.

Houma, La.:

Rev. Walter G. Harbin who came to us on the 23rd ult. left this morning for his home. He has come and gone, but his strong, fearless way of condemning sin in all its forms, with his earnest appeal to men to come to Christ has burned its way into the hearts and consciences of those who listened to him so perceptibly that God only knows what the ultimate result of his stay with us will mean. He came to stay ten days and he stayed nearly twice that long. His second Sunday with us was one of the greatest days' work of his ministry, if I may assume the seat of a judge. Here in Houma, where Romanism is life, where the combined Protestant male membership in our little city of six thousand, does not exceed sixty men, a meeting was held for men only at the Houma Opera House. The men were there in numbers between 250 and 300. Many came to the door, and seeing both inside and outside the door, men standing up to listen, turned back. That Sunday afternoon the largest body of non-Protestant men in the history of our city listened to "A Man Wanted," a subject which touched real issues in the real life of our men and heard the most earnest appeal to live more Christlike, that the history of our place ever recorded in the past. In less than a decade past to have said that you would have had fifty Romanists at the Protestant meeting you would have been laughed at—well, we had four times that many. No, all who attended our services did not muffle with our church; we had eleven accessions; will have many more as a result of the meeting and everybody in town knows that the same hall where we hold our services is indeed a good place to find spiritual joy, as well as earthly pleasure. Romanists do not change their faith by leaps and bounds. To change from Romanism to Protestantism means more than to change from one branch of the Protestant Church to another. They imbibed her doctrines as it were with their mother's milk, and while they become very much dissatisfied, to cut loose means more than you can imagine, unless you have made the change. Afraid to change, disgusted with the present state, defines the conditions of thousands. Seed sown to-day bears fruit when properly nurtured, years after.

Our territory does not need a different gospel to Protestant territory; all you have to do is to preach the simple story of Jesus and his love, the awfulness of sin, the power of God to save. You do not have to spend your time condemning Romanism. Preach Jesus; the Lord will do the rest. To have the attendance we have to-day in our Protestant services, to have the confidence of the people, to have behind the cross ideas—O, who can tell what it means for us in this territory?

May God help the Board of Church Extension in their deliberations over our applications for aid. We have used our mite in buying land. We must have a house in which to worship. To delay too long will be more than detrimental to our cause. C. V. Prethaupt.

WISHED FOR DEATH

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering!

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardul, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardul.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Campbell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering."

"At last, I decided to try Cardul. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardul has stopped my suffering and made life worth living."

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardul. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable, and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR MARCH 27, 1910.

THE EMPTY TOMB—EASTER LESSON.

Mark xvi:1-8. With Reviews in Matthew.

Golden Text: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore." Rev. i:18.

The resurrection was the hardest lesson for the first disciples to learn. Jesus taught it and often referred to the time when he would be offered up; but they had great difficulty in grasping the meaning of his words. Jesus had told them how one distressing event would follow another, beginning with his being taken by sinful men, and with scourging and cruel mocking, brought before an unrighteous tribunal, condemned, though guiltless, crucified, and laid away in the grave, only for three days; then the resurrection. So when the time really came, and they witnessed his exceeding sorrow of soul as he prayed in the garden, and the mob came upon them to take him away, they all forsook him and fled. All trusting faith and all hope must have fled from their hearts as they, one by one, found their way back to that upper-room that would ever be of so hallowed memory, and was to them a place of safety. It was John, the loving and beloved, that remained close to the Lord through it all. Peter was near, until his faith gave place to fear, like unto that day when he started to walk to the Master on the waters of Lake Galilee.

Poor Peter, let us not hastily condemn him, let us rather pray that the time between our sin and repentance may be as short as his; he denied with an oath, the Lord turned and only looked at him, when without another word Peter went toward the door weeping as he went. His own heart condemned him, but "God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things," and Jesus knew that Peter must be mentioned by name, when he sent word to the others to meet him in Galilee; for Peter did not consider himself worthy of his former place among the followers of the Master. It was in that upper-room they all spent Friday of the crucifixion, then Saturday following, and on Sunday morning, when Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to the tomb in the garden, and found it empty, and were told by angels that Jesus had arisen, they hurried back toward the disciples; but on the way they were met by Jesus himself. As soon as they saw him and heard him call "all hail," they came and held him by the feet and worshiped him.

The fact of the resurrection has been established and accepted for nearly two thousand years; it is not to convince ourselves of that truth that we now search the Scriptures, it is rather that we learn of how such a truth was received and accepted individually by those to whom in after years the Holy Spirit revealed it in all its fullness, in order that we give it the place in our own Christian experience to which it is entitled. It was such a tremendous event that the whole company of disciples were thrown into fear, doubt and joy. To some, the message came as idle talk. We often wonder why they could doubt or be surprised, for the Lord had often told them that it would be. Let us remember that it is the Spirit that quickeneth. We, of this day and time, have the greater advantage, we have the Word of God and the guidance of the Spirit; and the resurrection is our sweetest hope.

Our war, from which there is no discharge, ends in death; but death has no victory; it has been swallowed up in Christ. "O fools and slow of hearts," can be justly said of us also even with all the help we have to grow in Christian grace and knowledge. See in the three months just ending how gradually are the lessons given us that we might learn, precept on precept, of the work of our Master. He came not unannounced; the greatest man born of woman proclaimed his coming, and he came showing us at the first that it becometh (even us) to fulfill "all righteousness." He came to the lowly, the common people, and from among them he chose his apostles. His commandments are not grievous, as he in tenderness preached to the multitude from the mountain side. What an array of pearls is the group of beatitudes!

He taught fellowship among all, discarding all spirit of retaliation; taking the spirit of grace and love with us, even if we are delivered to the judge in court by an adversary. He taught us to pray, not calling upon Almighty God in the seeming far away heavens, but saying Our Father, and assures us that he knows our needs even before we ask him. Let us remember the condition of our pardon: it rests upon the pardon we extend to him who has wronged us. Heaven must be our treasure-house in order that our hearts may be there, and not set upon things on earth; we must not be anxious about the future, for that indicates a lack of faith. We should not criticize or find fault with our brother, but rather do unto him that which we would have him do unto us. He shows us two gates, two ways, two characters, two modes of laying a foundation for building; and which of the two to choose. We learn of his power over disease and death, and his power over sin. He speaks to the winds and the sea, and they obey his voice. He casts legions of devils out, and the healed demoniac goes preaching of his great blessing. He chooses Matthew, the publican, as an apostle and goes among sinners to eat and drink. In all these manifestations he teaches that he came to bear our infirmities and carry our sorrows. He is our blessed Lord and Savior; praise and honor be to his holy name, for he lives that was dead, and behold he is alive forevermore.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if any one afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 704-35 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give, only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

ENDOWMENT FUND, MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Some progress has been made recently in collecting the unpaid subscriptions to the endowment fund. I hereby urge all our friends who know themselves to be indebted to the fund to please send me their checks at once. Please do not wait to be written to about it. I have a large Church to look after and really have no time to do more than receipt for money sent.

TO DRIVE OUT MALARIA AND BUILD UP THE SYSTEM.

Take the Old Standard GROVE'S TASTELESS-CHILL TONIC. You know what you are taking. The formula is plainly printed on every bottle, showing it is simply Quinine and Iron in a tasteless form, and the most effective form for grown people and children. 50c.

If anger arise in thy breast instantly seal up thy lips, and let it not go forth. Angry passion is like a fire, and angry words are breath to fan it.—Jeremy Taylor.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

— GET THE — RIGHT ENGINE ON FIRST PURCHASE

YOU don't want to experiment with an engine. It's too expensive. Buy right the first time and your power troubles are over—at once and for all. The engine question isn't a hard one to answer—if you investigate thoroughly. For you will find I H C engines far superior. Others cannot compare in efficiency, simplicity, economy and strength.

Profit by the experience of those who are discarding other engines for the I H C. Buy an I H C first—and save the cost of a "one year" engine.

I H C Gasoline Engines

There is one to meet your needs exactly. For the I H C line offers wide choice. Ask the local I H C agent to tell you about these styles and sizes. I H C Vertical engines—made in 2, 3 and 25-horsepower; Horizontal (portable and stationary) in 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15, 20 and 25-horsepower; Famous air-cooled engines—in 1, 2 and 3-horsepower; Hopper-cooled—in 2, 2 1/2, 3, 4, 6 and 8-horsepower; also sawing, spraying and pumping outfits.

International tractors have been successful in every contest, winning the highest honors at home and abroad—an ideal plowing and general-purpose tractor—made in 12, 15 and 20-horsepower sizes.

Whichever I H C engine you buy will save you a world of time, work and money. You can find no better power to run the cream separator, wood saw, feed cutter, churn, grindstone, fanning mill, corn sheller, thresher, shredder, and the many other machines on your farm. There is no better power to pump water. And the I H C does these things quickly, surely and cheaply. It's the engine that pays for itself—and pays the biggest dividend on its cost.

Investigate. Then judge for yours. See the I H C dealer in your town. Or, if you prefer, write direct to us for catalogues you are interested in.

Has 2 or 3 Saws.

Our Light Gang Edger is just the thing for small mills.

YEAR'S of experimenting and the best material have made it a perfect Light Edger. It is as well constructed as our heavier edgers.

The Drive and Feed Pulleys are all on one side so that the saws can be easily and quickly shifted off the other end of the handle. The Pressure Rolls swing away from the operator, admitting the stock readily and preventing the boards from kicking back.

Many other splendid features are described in our big new catalog, the copy of which helps us to you. Write for it today.

Editorial.

"Soul dead; stomach alive," was Carlyle's blistering characterization of the condition of things in England in the eighteenth century. There are some people living now to whom these words might be applied with equal propriety.

Let the weakest, let the humblest, remember that in his daily course he can, if he will, shed around him almost a heaven. Kindly words, sympathizing attentions, watchfulness against wounding men's sensitiveness—these cost very little, but they are priceless in their value. Are they not almost the staple of our happiness? From hour to hour, from moment to moment, we are supported by small kindnesses.—F. W. Robertson.

The world admires the orator, but the man of deeds is God's favorite. Not the eloquent Aaron, but Moses, slow in speech, was his choice as the leader of Israel. The Bible everywhere puts emphasis upon doing. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." "Doing" the sayings of Christ is building on the rock. "Doing them not" is building on the sand. Talk is cheap. It is living the gospel that ennobles, uplifts, and saves.

Earnestness is essential to success in Christian work. The men of might in the divine kingdom have been men whose souls were on fire with zeal. The half-fellow-well-met sort of a preacher may be popular, but his ministry is sure to be barren of spiritual results. Paul was tremendously concerned for the people to whom he ministered. So was Luther; so was Wesley, and so were Asbury and the immortal pioneers. The man who is not burdened for his flock and who does not put his whole soul into his work, is not worthy of a place in the Christian ministry.

There is but one way to the altitudes of true greatness, and that is the way of service. It was thought in the long ago that he who rules is great, but the Master reversed the dictum and announced that the greatest is not he who reigns, but he who serves. And more and more the world is coming to accept the estimate of the Man of Galilee. The fame of diplomats and statesmen is now dimmed by that of Martin Luther. Wesley's name has been blazoned upon the wall of Westminster Abbey along side those of kings and warriors. The most majestic human figure of all time is the Apostle Paul. And Christ is the Lord of all because he became the servant of all. Humanity has given him the first place in its affections and a name which is above every name, because of all who ever lived upon the planet, he did the most for humanity. And the Church which to the largest extent sways the future will not be the one most favored by millionaires and States, nor necessarily, the one with the most eloquence and learning, but the one which lays the firmest grip on the lower strata of society and does the most to uplift the lost millions of mankind.

MAN HIMSELF TO BLAME.

The Christian life requires culture. Neglect dwarfs and hinders, if it does not destroy it. To develop it and bring it to perfection, is the work of both God and man. The human part, is to abide in Christ by faithfully keeping his commandments, to feed upon his Word, to walk daily in his ennobling fellowship, and tread his appointed paths of service. The divine part, is to enlighten, to cleanse, to strengthen, and to rebuild the shattered and impoverished moral nature.

That so glorious a work should proceed so slowly and oftentimes become completely arrested, is a matter of the gravest concern. In every such instance man is wholly to blame. God stands ready to carry it speedily forward, but he can progress with it only as the individual will allow. It is all contingent upon the co-operation of the human will. He who would possess holiness must aspire to it, and earnestly and continuously seek it. A half hour of heart-searching and devotion each morning and evening, would immeasurably enrich the experience and life of the average Christian.

Shall we allow business and the pressing cares of the world to shut God out of our thoughts except for a little time on the Sabbath? Shall we, in providing for the needs of the perishing body, forget the deathless soul? Shall we let the glare and glitter of the temporal blind us to the things which are eternal? To pursue such a course is to make an irreparable mistake; it is to repress and retard, and perhaps even destroy, the spiritual life. It is to lose opportunities that an angel would covet, and forfeit a reward such as only the ascended Christ can give. Peace, purity, triumph, and a starry crown come only to the disciple who communes and counsels much with his Lord. The prophet of olden time had mastered the philosophy of the Christian religion when he wrote: "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not be faint."

THE CHRISTIAN PENTECOST.

Pentecost was not a day, but is an age, a dispensation. It did not end, but only began, at Jerusalem. We are living in it, and it will last to the end of time. The power that fell upon the hundred and twenty "in the upper room" still falls upon disciples who tarry before the Father's throne and come to be of "one accord." They may not see visible tongues of fire or hear a noise like a rushing wind, but they feel the uplift of a mighty power in the heart and are disposed to shout praise to God for his glorious gift. They are emboldened to testify for their Lord, and, as of old, their words have a magic effect. They produce conviction and penitence and make men cry, "What must we do to be saved?"

The Church is not a mere human institution, with only human agencies to promote its progress. The Holy Ghost is still its priceless possession, and having him the Church has to accomplish its work the greatest power on earth—the power which in the beginning brooded over the vast void and brought the world into being—the power that conserves and upholds the universe—the power that raised Jesus from the dead—the power that transformed Jewish peasants into the most majestic men that earth has ever known. Nor is this power for the few, but for all. God's design is that it shall touch and transfigure every human life.

Not on one favored forehead fell
Of old the fire-tongued miracle,
But flamed 'er all the thronging host.
The Baptism of the Holy Ghost.
Nor hound, nor creed, nor clime thou know'st,
Wide as our need thy favors fall;
The white wings of the Holy Ghost
Stoop, seen or unseen, o'er the heads of all.

WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

We think the position of the Church on the subject of worldly amusements is thoroughly sound. The tendency of the round dances is manifestly toward evil. The posture of the participants, the late hours, and the unwholesome associations of the ball-room, all point in the wrong direction. Card playing is also fraught with vast possibilities for harm. It has hurt thousands, and never helped any one. The statement sometimes heard that it is wise to teach children to play at home in order to keep them from learning at other places where there are no restraining influences of any kind, is not even good nonsense. The same argument would apply to dram-drinking and nearly every other imaginable vice.

And as to the theater, it was perhaps never in worse repute than it is to-day. The scandals of actors and actresses, within the past two or three years have shocked the civilized world. All attempts at stage reformation have been stupendous failures. The evil tendencies of theatrical life are too strong for any moral force to hold them in check. Leaving out of consideration the effect of the play upon the spectators, Christians surely ought not to patronize an institution which requires a constant sacrifice of manhood and womanhood to maintain it. The stage probably lures more beautiful young women to ruin than any other evil agency in existence. So in standing out squarely against it, along with cards and the dance, the Church is doing only what it ought to do. Were it to assume any other attitude than one of uncompromising hostility to these things, it would be recreant to its duty and culpable in the sight of God. Apparently, there are some who find pleasure in seeing how close to the gulf of destruction they can glide without toppling into it; but certainly the Church which was established to save the world should not be asked to sit by and observe the dangerous scene in silence. On the contrary, in a manner not harsh but kindly, it should continue its vigorous protest against every indulgence calculated to imperil purity and virtue.

The greatest blessing is the power to bless others, and every Christian should unceasingly seek it.

THE RAMBLER WRITES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

John Wesley was the originator of the "institutional" idea of church work. His intensely practical genius sought to adapt his methods to the actual conditions of society. And so in the first church he organized, the Old Foundry, he "instituted" baths, sleeping rooms, a reading room, a loan office, and other things—a free dispensary among them. When Methodism leaped the Atlantic it was necessary for it to mount and go at a gallop to keep up with the rapid spread of population over the continent. The itinerant impulse became dominant. We surpassed all other churches in evangelistic activity. But conditions have changed. "Our frontiers are in the cities now." The problem is how to hold the people to the church in the seething centers of population. Crawford Street Methodist Church, in Vicksburg, under the wise leadership of Dr. Hill, has revived Mr. Wesley's method, begun in the heart of London a hundred and fifty years ago. They have built an "Institutional Annex," and it is the best equipped plant for its purpose in Methodism. Baths, bowling alley, gymnasium, school rooms, library, spacious parlors, and a roof auditorium, where during the hot season services are held at night high in the air—all these are in full operation. And so far the result abundantly justifies the effort, for Dr. Hill's church is a center of power over all classes, and especially the young. The problem will come when his successor has to be appointed. A man who doesn't believe in these agencies of Christian culture, or who is indifferent to them, or who is incompetent to conduct them, will spoil everything. I have a fair acquaintance with Methodist preachers, and I do not hesitate to say that the average preacher is about as fit to preside successfully over the complicated work of Crawford Street Church as a plow-boy is to take the throttle of a double compound locomotive. Our preachers must sit up and take notice. Such men as Dr. Hill put the whole fraternity on its mettle. I greatly enjoyed his fellowship, though the rascal don't let me sleep enough.

I would have been in my grave long ago if I had accepted the courtesies of private entertainment, but I have some "homes" where I can unbend. Cannon lets me poke the fire in his big chimney over in Virginia, and I love to lounge in the big house on the lawn at the University of Virginia, as I did recently, and chat with that prince among scientists, Dr. F. H. Smith. What a noble man he is—knows the heavens better than I know Mississippi, and withal is as modest and refined as a cultured woman. I lived in his home when I was chaplain of the University long years ago, and the friendship begun then, has grown with the lapse of time. So there is no hotel in it when I get to Carrollton. Bingham met me and took me straight out to "Cedar Canyon," his beautiful country home. It is a colonial structure, situated on the top of a high hill, and surrounded with deep and wild ravines. A more picturesque location could hardly be found, or deeper dells and more romantic sylvan seclusions invite to meditation and repose. In this home I feel at home. Its spacious corridors are a sort of Hall of Fame for Methodist worthies. The gracious lady who presides over this ideal home keeps all the sweet, old-time domestic life intact, and I continually wonder how she succeeds in having such nice, quiet, and accommodating servants. She will pardon me for saying that one lady like the hostess of "Cedar Canyon" is worth more to humanity than ten thousand "modern women," with their Amazonian clamor for the ballot. Brother Bingham has done what I believe is one of the great things: created a Christian home, from which he sends forth children with characters to bless the world. There was a fine audience to hear about "The Pioneers." That was the three hundred and eleventh time I have given that speech, and it is not my fault either, for they keep asking for it.

Hazlehurst took "Home Life in Dixie During the War"—a story that can never grow stale. Brother and Sister Galloway, from Crystal Springs, did me the honor to come over to the lecture. I was glad to find that both Mrs. Linfield and Mrs. Galloway agree with me on the woman's question, and hope the General Conference will not disturb her status. The good women of the Church who are asking for larger privileges do not realize that tendencies are masked behind the movement that are subversive of the most sacred ideals of Christian womanhood. It is nothing but the suffragette movement on its ecclesiastical side, and it draws in its train all the vulgar masculinity of the fishmonger type of womanhood. Its danger is in its verisimilitude. It looks innocent and plausible enough. But there is a big difference between poison oak and ivy. A sprig of ivy may adorn a lady's hair, but poison oak will spoil her complexion. No woman in America has done more to degrade true womanhood, to substitute for refined feminine character the coarse masculine type of female life, to paganize our domestic ideal, and inoculate our thought with the virus of marital infidelity, than Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Her poetry is poisoned wine. The jingle of her verse is musical to the ear, but the liquor of her subtle skepticism ends in the death of all spiritual belief. No wonder the divorce evil grows when such women officiate as the interpreters of life! It is because I see behind the plea of our women the unsexed horde of "new women," with their scorn of maternity, their coarse vulgarity, their infidelity, and all the shining train of unwomanly fanaticism, that I hope the Methodist Church will stand firm for the old and divine order of society.

It is one of the pleasures of my roving life that I have an opportunity to speak to a great many student bodies. Some time ago I addressed eleven hundred high school pupils in a town in Illinois. In the female college in Ohio the girls had gotten hold of my verses on "America," and as I entered the hall they rose in a body and sang them with spirit. I spoke five times to the students at Cornell University. Dr. Cannon had four hundred young ladies in the chapel, and six hundred young men at Trinity laughed and cheered "Home Life in Dixie." Dr. Kilgo said he never allowed that to be done but one time—had to take care of his own reputation. I spoke to several hundred young men at Davidson College, N. C., a Presbyterian College, and to President Beeson's fine double-header college in Meridian. Later I addressed six hundred cadets at the Texas A. and M. College, and a fine body of young ladies in the San Antonio Female College. By the way, Dr. Harrison's is one college for girls where they cut out the theatre, and cards and all worldly amusements that cannot be taken in the name of the Lord. I could tell some sad facts about some of our schools in this respect. At Brookhaven, I found myself the guest of the literary societies of Whitworth College, and had the opportunity of telling that splendid body of young women about the good old times in Dixie, when men loved like Jacob did, and sweethearts were like the Shulamite, whom neither the flatteries nor the fame of Solomon himself could seduce. I never heard Dixie sung as Dr. Cooper's girls sing it. My, my! It is truly the Marseillaise of America, and with suitable words would become our national song beyond all others. I was told that the lady who trained these Whitworth girls to sing Dixie so grandly is from the North. God bless her, and send us more like her.

I have greatly enjoyed this ride across Mississippi. I feel a special fondness for the pines. The two years spent at Lumberton, though they failed, were the most useful of my life. I sometimes wish

I had faced the opposition that obliged me to discontinue that good work, and stuck to it. As I remember the abortive effort now, I recall Ovid's lines:

"Ille situs est Phaeton, curvis auriga paterni, Quem si non tenuit, magnis tamen excidit ausis."

I am a little rusty on my Latin, but that used to mean: Here lies Phaeton, the driver of his father's chariot, which if he failed to manage, yet he fell in a great undertaking. Thank God we are to be judged by our intentions, and not by our achievements. My heart is still with the poor boys and girls in the strike, and I am still hoping the way will open for me to help them.

Nothing has pleased me so much in a long time as what I have just read in the paper about the plans for building a great church at Washington. I do not despise the day of small things, provided they will grow to bigger; but I don't like little things in big places. That church should cost not less than $500,000. It is not church pride that calls for such an expenditure, but the need to enable our Church to do its part in shaping the religious life of our Capital City. Look at the Roman Catholics, how they are entrenching themselves around Washington in schools, hospitals, churches, and all kinds of institutional fortifications. Let us emulate them. Let the General Conference get behind this enterprise in earnest. Let them set a day to take a dollar collection in every church, so that every Methodist may take stock in it. I talk it up everywhere I go, and now that they have resolved to do something adequate to our needs and worthy of our name and denominational strength, I shall let myself out on it at full length. Let us drop both "Episcopal" and "South" from our name, be simply the Methodist Church, with a cathedral at Washington, and a resident Bishop at the Capital. From there, let us go on to the North Pole if the way opens, and be known in all latitudes and climes as "the white man's church," with a helping hand ready in brotherly kindness to lift all weaker races to higher levels, but setting a face of flint against the sentimental bosh about "equality." One thing I like about this Washington Church enterprise, it is the distinct note it sounds of the solidarity of Methodism. We would not be planning such a bold move if our leaders had any idea of compromising the denominational independence of our branch of the Church militant. Let us plan to live a thousand years. When Gabriel blows his trumpet, let the Methodist banner be high advanced among the standards that shall flame along the interminable lines of the sacramental host, and when the roll is called up yonder, God grant I may be there.

I'm a Methodist born
And a Methodist bred,
And when I am gone,
There's a Methodist dead.

—Amen.

"APOSTOLIC PRECEDENT" AND THE WOMAN'S MEMORIAL.

By Rev. H. Walter Featherston.

Mr. Editor, you plead "apostolic precedent" against the women's memorial. Brother Broyles and Sister Singleton reply. May I obtrude?

Apostolic precedent may be very good, and generally is good, but not always. If we are to follow it implicitly, we must secure our new Bishops next May by use of the lot—the dice, if you please; for the apostles did so in filling Judas' place. We should also be communists, as were those of the first Christian church organized in Jerusalem by the apostles. The apostles did things in certain ways to meet existing conditions; and, when those conditions passed away, there is no sort of wisdom in continuing to do those things in the same old way because of apostolic precedent. There was no woman in the apostolic college—why? Because of sex? Where is the proof of it? Other things forbade it: (1) Women at that day had no educational advantages; (2) the prevailing pagan prejudice was against educated women (in Greece, at that time, every woman claiming to be learned was supposed to be unchaste; such is the reputation of Sappho, the only poetess known in Greek literature), hence a woman apostle could not have done foreign mission work at that time.

In Palestine, however, where this prejudice was not so strong, we find women very prominent in the Church. On the day of Pentecost the baptism of the Holy Spirit came upon all alike, says Luke, and there were women in the company, and they all preached. (See Acts i, 14, and ii, 4.) Peter justified it by quoting from Joel: "On my handmaidens in those days (of the Christian era) will I pour forth of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy." Here we have not only apostolic precedent for women preachers, but prophetic endorsement as well—aye, and divine. But the women's memorial does not ask this much.

"Philip, the evangelist," had "four daughters who prophesied." (Acts xxi, 9.) "To prophesy" in the New Testament, as every scholar knows, means "to preach"—prophetaemi, to forthtell, rather than to foretell. Paul was entertained in his home, and we hear no word of disapproval from him; nor from Luke who tells of it, nor from any other. It seems to have been endorsed. But our women do not ask to be licensed or ordained as preachers or prophetesses.

In the Council of Jerusalem—the first General Conference—some insist there were no women. Can we be sure of this? The apostles and brethren are mentioned—Acts xv, 6: "the multitude" is also spoken of—verse 12: and at last when time came to vote, it was done by "the apostles and the elders, with the whole church"—verse 22—and we know that women were in that church. This seems to indicate that apostolic precedent may be cited in favor of the women's memorial.

The first church conference on record is reported in Acts vi, 1-6. Here we learn that "the twelve (the apostles) called the multitude of the disciples" together, and laid the matter in hand and their suggestions before them. And the saying pleased the whole multitude, and they chose—"Who composed this multitude? The church members, as a matter of course. Were any excluded from participation? Luke does not hint such a thing. That which the Church at this time did was exactly what is done by a Methodist Quarterly Conference. Evidently women were in this conference. This seems to indicate that apostolic precedent favors the women's memorial.

What is Paul's attitude to this question? He said: "Let the women keep silence in the churches." (1 Cor. xiv, 34.) What does he mean? that they must not sing? that they must not teach? Women have ever sung in the choirs—even Priscilla in Paul's own day taught, and taught a man. Does he mean that they must not preach or pray in public? Hardly. In the eleventh chapter of this same Epistle, he directs concerning the veiling of women who preached and prayed—he certainly did not disapprove of their preaching and praying. Does he mean that they must take no part in deliberative assemblies? The church meetings alluded to in 1 Cor. iv, 26-36, where the inhibition occurs, were evidently not legislative or deliberative assemblies. They were meetings in which matters of doctrine were discussed. The New Testament was not then written, and these discussions were a necessity. Women at Corinth, as a rule, being utterly uneducated and consequently narrow, nervous and prejudiced, were forbidden by the Apostle to take part in these meetings for which they were unfitted. Very few of them were Jewish women; but, practically all of them were converts from paganism.

In 1 Tim. ii, 11, he says: "I permit not a woman to teach, or have dominion over a man"—i. e., a husband. Man is here the object of both "teach and have dominion." The statement simply means that the man and not the wife is the head of the family.

In none of these is there laid down any rule or principle upon which a rule forbidding what the women's memorial asks, may be founded. Apostolic precedent can hardly be urged against the memorial.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

VI.

On the 16th of December, 1857, I left the home of Mr. Pope and struck out through an open pine woods. Late in the afternoon I reached the home of Dunning Bird, where I spent the night. Brother Bird was one of my stewards. I soon learned that he was brother to J. I. E. Bird, an honored member of our Conference at that time. By the way, I notice that his name does not appear in the list of "Our Sainted Dead." He was a good preacher, and died between thirty and forty years ago.

On the evening of Dec. 17 I reached the home of another of my stewards, James Bounds. In introducing myself, I told him that my name was Lewis and that I was his preacher. He gave me a look (I could not tell whether it was a look of surprise, disgust or pleasure), then called his wife and said: "Come here. Here is our preacher." I was small and had the appearance of a beardless boy, and I felt mighty little. Brother Bounds proved a good, helpful friend and brother.
